SEAFOOD MARKETS BEING DEVELOPED

Washington, D. C.—New markets for seafood are being developed by the bureau of fisheries of the department of commerce, as a meat conservation measure. Whale meat from the Pacific coast—20,000 pounds of it—recently has been put on the Boston market The shipment was disposed of in 10 days at a retail price of 15 cents a pound and was received with such satisfaction by householders who like to live both well and economically that preparations are being made to assure a regular supply. Some of the meat was sold as far north as Portland, Me.

On the Texas coast, a representative of the bureau is seeking to introduce porpoise meat, which has been pronounced excellent by those who have tried it. The main difficulty has been to make arrangements at the fishing centers for systematic shipments. Fishes from the gulf are being sold in many cities through the middle west, as the result of shipments arranged by the bureau. Carload lots are being ordered by dealers in Indianapolis, Louisville and Nashville. Efforts are being made by the bureau to increase the pack of salt whiting, for which there was a large demand last winter. New England fishermen are being instructed in salting methods. Dr Russell J Coles, an assistant at the bureau, is endeavoring to establish a fishery for sharks, rays and porpoises at Cape Lookout, N. C. Experiments have shown that smoked porpoise is nutritious food.

WHOLE ENGLISH TOWN FOR SALE

London (by mail)—Any man whose ambition is to own a whole town will have an opportunity to satisfy his desire here next month. By direction of Lord Stalbridge, the owner, the entire town of Shaftsbury will be put on the auction block, including private houses, banks, postoffices, stores, offices hotels and three saloons. The town is located in a picturesque part of Derbyshire, perched on the top of a hill in the midst of rolling farm country. The nearest railway station is three miles distant at Semley. Sales of great estates are frequent in these days, when taxes are eating up profits and many of the younger generation of the nobility are losing their lives on the battle fields. This is the first sale of an entire town which has been arranged.

IRISH LEADER IS KNIGHTED BY KING

Sir John Mahaffy.

King George has just bestowed a knighthood of the Grand Cross of the Order of the Empire upon John Pentland Mahaffy, who thus becomes Sir John Mahaffy. He is the provost and president of Ireland's principal college, Trinity, at Dublin.

He has long been recognized as the most eminent of the Emerald Isle. He is president of the Royal Irish academy, governor of the National Gallery at Dublin, etc. He is a large land owner in County Monaghan. He is a former cricketer, is celebrated as an explorer and is the pioneer in the deciphering of the ancient papyri found in Egypt and elsewhere. He is a voluminous writer. His works include "Problems of Greek History," and "Empire of the Ptolemys."

All sorts of witty saying are credited to him, including his description of Ireland as "a very curious country in which the impossible was always happening and the inevitable never came off."

SHEET MUSIC WOULD MAKE HIT WITH BOYS

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in France (by mail)—The boys want music over here in the trenches. If you want to make a hit with a soldier boy, send him some of the latest song hits, so that he and his pals can try to "harmonize" on them during the long evenings they spend in the trenches or among the ruins of somewhere in the woods

European officers say the American army is the most musical in the world The boys are always going about their work, whether it's marching into the trenches or filling up a shell hole in the road, with a song

A song to sing is a great thing. It boosts up the spirit and the morale, and makes a man forget the things he doesn't like. The fellows in the army who can't sing always whistle. Somewhere in every group is an instrument of some kind, often nothing more than a couple of strings over a cigar box with a handle on it—but something that will make a tune.

The boys usually get near a "hut" that has a phonograph now and then and try out the songs. But they want new ones, the latest ones from America, the soldier songs that take so long to drift across the sea, unless someone sends sheet music.

So if you want to make a hit with a "doughboy" send him some sheet music, the latest thing you can get from Broadway. The best way to send it is in an envelope, sealed tight, as first class matter, for otherwise it may be lost.

Now the One Way Glass.

From the Little Journal

For making range finders, checking eye pieces for gunsights, for comparison oculars, binocular microscopes and for other purposes it has been found necessary to produce a one way glass; that is, a glass which looked through from one side is transparent, while looked at from the other is opaque and functions as a mirror. This is brought about by silvering in such a manner that exactly the same measure of light is transmitted through it as is reflected by it

The invention was perfected in Germany before the war and it was immediately put to use not only for purposes of military observation, but also for the delectation of the most favored of the nobility There was, for instance, the high well born Freiherr von Namenvergessen, who, being a man of wealth and influence, procured enough of the one way glass to equip the guest room walls of his castle so that they appeared as ordinary mirrors to his guests, while he had convenient posts of observation provided for himself at the back.

This type of German humor would never appeal to America but there are, however, many uses to which one way glass could be put with profit and convenience. In a business office, for instance, the eye of the master is often a useful instrument, whereas he frequently needs privacy for conferences Therefore, a private office inclosed in this kind of glass would often be desirable It would be agreeable in many windows; in short, with considerable limitations, it would provide a curtain of invisibility, less effective than the legendary gift of Minerva, but useful in 1,000 ways.

Status of Women Aliens.

From the New York Times.

Among other wise provisions in the new bill just adopted unanimously by the British house of commons, defining nationality and the status of aliens, is one making in the existing law a change the need of which has already been felt in this country Its effect is to empower the home office to assent to the application of a British born wife for the privilege of resuming the rights of British citizenship, lost by her when she married a man who is now an enemy alien

That wives, whatever their origin, acquire the political status of their husbands, whatever that may be, and that they can recover their former status only through the death of, or a divorce from, their alient husbands—these are well established principles of law in practically all lands, civilized and uncivilized. They are, however, mere survivals from the era when everywhere it was held that man and wife are one, and the man is the one Now that the separate individuality of women has gained nearly full recognition in some countries, and a tendency toward such recognition exists in a good many more, refusal to grant it in the matter of citizenship has become more or less of an absurdity in all cases, and it imposes severe hardship and even great cruelty in not a few

Citizenship in the only important, or at least most important, sense of sincere allegiance and loyalty is not determined by marriage, but by personal intention and purpose—by inherited or reasoned preference A new and particular need for abandoning antiquated notions as to woman's political standing is created wherever the sex discrimination as to voting has disappeared

Brothers in Arms.

From the London Times.

There was an exhilarating thrill in the air of London yesterday, and we shall not be wrong if we believe it to have been felt throughout the British Isles. Formal observance of the union in arms of Great Britain and the United States there was in plenty, and carefully attuned to the true spirit of Independence day. The two flags that flew side by side above Buckingham palace, from the Victoria tower of the palace of Westminster, over the western entrance of St. Paul's, from the great public buildings of Whitehall and the city, and from countless private places of business and of residence, proclaimed it to the eye. The crowds in the streets, with their twin button hole flags of America and of Britain, paid homage to it. At Westminster it found worthy expression in speeches by Lord Bryce and Mr Churchill, as well by chosen representatives of the American people now in this country. The "ball game" at Chelsea, played with all its native ritual to a vast crowd, and watched by the king, was in the authentic tradition of its lighter vein. But more than all was the sense—through the thronged streets of the old capital that the common ancestors of both peoples built—of a great event in human history. It was perceptible, yet hard to define, as are all such movings of the emotions of a people. There was imagination in it, for who could be so dull as not to be stirred by the visible symbol of the two flags flying side by side? There was also the familiar stir of a day of pageantry, deepened perhaps and accentuated yesterday by the flow of the common day's work that went on so busily side by side with the special parade of the occasion. But there was more. London yesterday strengthened belief in the rooted depth and sweep of the wisdom of a free people. Freedom, in this celebration of the brotherhood in arms of the American and the British races, was justified of her children.

Look Across the Sea.

E T Meredith, in Nation's Business.

In England and France I have seen things which I wish could be burned into the conscience of every business man in the United States I have seen factories in ruins, office buildings blown into bits, commercial districts, miles in extent, lying deserted and silent, grass growing in the streets like places of the dead—everything that years, perhaps hundreds of years of patient industry had built up and passed on as a heritage from father to son—all vanished.

We in America have known nothing like this. We can know nothing like it. Thanks to our allies, these experiences will be kept from us. That factory of yours in New England, that mine of your neighbor's in Michigan, that farm I own in Iowa—they are being protected today by the untold sacrifices of the soldiers, the business men, the women of England and France.

Why then should we complain? Why should we protest that our business is ruined? Why should we bewail lessened profits, cavil at high prices, inconveniences, hard conditions? Why should we rage at the disaster that overtakes our business?

Our business? Our profits? Our lives? Good God, will we ever open our eyes to see the truth? Can we ever repay the debt we owe? The time has come for us, the commercial men of this country, to relieve our French and British allies overseas of their appalling burden. Their soldiers are now our soldiers, as truly as if they wore our uniform; and our boys are theirs.

What Is the Answer?

From the Washington Times.

Five people were discussing the game of golf.

"Golf might be described as billiards gone to grass," said one. "Spleen on the green," suggested another. "The last flicker of the dying fire of athletics," put in a third, who was evidently an ardent footballer. "The misuse of land and language," was the contribution of a tennis player. The fifth man said, "Golf is simply a game wherein the ball lies badly and the player well!"

Good Work Slowly Done.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Some of us are trying to live our lives all at once. We would cramp the slow development of years into the coming month or week; we would compress the work of an hour into the next five minutes. Nature—patient, tireless, cunning laborer that she is—does not favor this plans. She takes her time—"Because it is hers!" some one makes prompt answer. "She has command of all the time there is. She can be as deliberate as she chooses. We must make haste because our little lives are so soon clipped off. The darkness too early rounds our day. Our work must be put through with speed and under pressure or we shall not finish."

The best work even by these feeble mortal hands and minds of ours is done not in a fever but in a calm. Art (and the exception proves the rule) achieves most nobly when it achieves with tranquility. The personal circumstances of the artist may be distressing. He rises above them. His dream translates him to the skies above his mundane environment. His passion for the truth leads him to forget that he is poor and hungry and misunderstood He writes his book or paints his picture or composes his sonata in a land where it is always summer and the skies are blue and tears are never shed and none ever dies. By the force of a creative imagination, he establishes for himself a new heaven and a new earth, and his spirit is tranquil because it is triumphant over the pinching and gnawing circumstances.

Artist or artisan, each of us must learn to make the pilgrimage a step at a time. Let not an anxious forecast corrugate the brow with the thought of a morrow sufficient unto itself. Epicurean delight lives for the moment; and a man's more serious purpose in existence would often do well to follow the example.

The Thresher's Dinner.

From the Dubuque Telegraph-Herald.

The farmer of this new era who comes to help at a threshing bee will carry his own dinner. The war board has set its face against the old fashioned "threshing dinner," in the preparation of which each farmer's wife vied with her neighbor in quantity and variety of edibles.

The war board has not done this because it is sorry for the poor farmer's wife, sweating in her fiery kitchen, breaking her back over the oven and dishpan. What the war board is thinking about is the waste of food.

But the result will be the same. For it has become bad form, even in the country, to try to outdo one's neighbor in the amount of food served. The rivalry for the remainder of the war will be in finding nourishment for the workers without waste, and without use of those foods which are needed by our allies.

No longer is cottage cheese to be a side dish, added to a dinner already too rich in protein by heavy meats and by vegetables cooked with bacon or salt pork. Cottage cheese is to take the center of the table. Flanked with hard boiled eggs it becomes the piece de resistance. In vain let the farmhand raise his voice in scorn. His insides will be supplied with strength and energy as never before.

With the necessity for saving food comes a great stimulus to the study of scientific dietaries. After this year it should be rare to see a housewife working her body to the point where she is left at night without the energy to work her brain. Hereafter, she is to work her brain first, that she may save her body.

It is the most necessary reform which could be applied to any department of rural life. The passing of the threshing dinner in accordance with the request of the war board will but mark a milestone on the way of progress.

A Platinum Discovery.

From the Worcester Telegram.

The experience of something better than was anticipated has come to the Norquist Brothers, of Spokane and Seattle. They report having spent $28,000 developing what was supposed to be a great silver mine on the Kasio river in the great northwest of Canada and this country, and finding that there was no silver worth mining. But they observed a kind of rock that puzzled them, and had it analyzed. The man of science reported a prospect of $700 worth of platinum ore per ton of the rock, and the brothers have gone at it with the vigor that naturally pertains to an open chance to handle a ton of rock for $700.

As the platinum is worth $105 an ounce, it is plain that no great amount of trains will be necessary to move the fine product from that mine when it has been reduced to the sale stage of platinum. It is barely more than six ounces to the ton of rock. The millers of that rock will have to be watched and they must watch out for every bit of that dust, for an ounce of the real stuff is pretty small pickings from a ton of ore. The incident is one more addition to the independence of this side of the Atlantic. It provides the necessary mineral, and what comes from the northwest will not be needed from the enemy countries of Europe.

The Petty Profiteer.

From the Omaha World-Herald.

The government is taking care of the direct profiteers, after a fashion, but the indirect profiteer, the man who handles a low priced commodity with a large volume of sales, is likely to be able to increase prices without attracting much attention, either public or official.

If such a commodity is in common use and there is nothing to justify such an increase, he is no less a profiteer than the man who attempts to secure an exorbitant price for a war necessity.

Since the United States entered the war the public has been educated to higher prices for many articles and it is a comparatively easy matter to induce people to pay a higher price for almost anything.

On an article that formerly sold for $100 to increase the price to $200 is to invite criticism and investigation, but nothing is likely to be said if a dime is charged for an article that formerly sold for a nickel, although there may be nothing to warrant the 100 per cent increase.

High cost of material, higher wages and increased overhead expenses are the reasons most generally given for an increase in retail price.

In St. Louis an investigation was conducted when shoe shining establishments raised the price 5 to 10 cents. Testimony showed the increase cost of materials to be less than 10 per cent; rent, lights and heat less than 20 per cent and labor about 30 per cent, with no increase whatsoever in many items, yet the public was asked for a 100 per cent increase.

This is only an example of price increases on small articles, yet these small items, according to statistics, represent approximately 50 per cent of household expenses.

A Fable For Loafers.

From the Jayhawk.

If you have anybody working for you and they lie down on the job, don't fire them at once—just call them in and tell this story.

Down in Virginia a farmer had an ox and a mule that he hitched together to a plow One night, after several days of continuous plowing, and after the ox and the mule had been stabled and provendered for the night, the ox said to the mule: "We've been working pretty hard, let's play off sick tomorrow and lie here in the stalls all day."

"You can if you want to," returned the mule, "but I believe I'll go to work."

So the next morning when the farmer came out, the ox played off sick; the farmer bedded him down with clean straw, gave him fresh hay, a bucket of oats and bran mixed, left him for the day and went forth alone with the mule to plow.

All that day the ox laid in his stall, chewed his cud and nodded, slowly blinked his eyes and gently swished his tail.

That night when the mule came in, the ox asked how they got along plowing alone all day. "Well," said the mule, "it was hard and we didn't get much done, and—"

"Did the old man have anything to say about me?" interrupted the ox.

"No," replied the mule.

"Well, then," went on the ox, "I believe I'll play off again tomorrow; it was certainly fine lying here all day and resting."

"That's up to you," said the mule, "but I'll go out and plow."

So the next day the ox played off again, was bedded down with clean straw, provendered with hay, bran and oats, and lay all day nodding, blinking, chewing his cud and gently swishing his tail.

When the mule came in at night the ox asked again how they had gotten along without him.

"Did the old man have anything to say to you about me?" again inquired the ox.

"No," replied the mule, "not to me, but he did have a damn long talk with the butcher on the way home."

English Estates Sold.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Britannia still rules the waves, but beneath the waves lie unseen terrors, menacing the nation's commerce, its food supply, its very life. The nation cannot trust its sea borne trade now. It must utilize every possible means to provide the necessary sustenance for its armies, and for those who supply the fighting men. And the British government rises to the occasion.

Before the war Lloyd George fought long and well to compel the breaking up of old estates, to make possible the cultivation of land long idle, to give the laborer a chance at the soil. He failed, for the British are conservative by instinct, and the old way seemed easiest. They have learned their lesson now.

In three years past the British government has taken over outright no less than 1,000,000 acres of British soil, purchasing some, renting more. It has, indeed, found necessary the establishment of the great department to handle this work of national regeneration. It is a great change, and one that should not be regretted. The England which makes peace will not be the England of its fathers, but a better one.

THE VALUE OF CHEER.

From the Christian Herald.

A western court has awarded a goodly sum to a nurse who enlivened a rich man's declining years with good cheer. The court said that it was impossible to separate physical benefit from good cheer, and that while good cheer itself might not have a definite price, the physical benefit resulting from it certainly has.

Many a millionaire, when ill health or failing strength compels him to drop the pursuit that has absorbed all his life, thought and interest, might be willing to give a large sum to be able to feel cheerful. To those who think that getting rich is the main aim in life and the highest achievement it must seem strange that a poor man should have cheerfulness to spare to a rich one. But such is the way of the world. The most precious things cannot be measured in money

Newspaper Triviality.
"It is customary to gird at the modern press of Europe and America as sensational, yellow and corrupt, and to represent the captains of industry who control it as panders to base instincts," says War and Peace of London. "But, as a matter of fact, the offense of the average modern newspaper consists in none of these things, but in its overpowering triviality."

TALKS TO ACTRESS IN BATH

Interviewer for Chicago Newspaper Has His Own Troubles With Clara Kimball Young.

"I cawn't hear you," complained Clara Kimball Young.

"Turn off the water, then," cried the interviewer.

"The tub's only half full," said Clara. "I cawn't take a bath in a tub half full. You'll have to speak louder."

"The interview," said the interviewer, "will be ruined, what with the door closed and the water running."

"I'll—I'll—" exclaimed Clara. "I'll—"

"Turn off the water," suggested the reporter, protesting perhaps too much.

"There, now I can hear you."

"Fine," said the interviewer.

"Ouch, it's hot," cried Clara. There was a slight splash.

"I'll have to turn on the cold water. Will you wait a minute?"

"Certainly," agreed the interviewer.

"Oo," said Clara. There was another slight and delicate splash.

There was a pause.

"Oh, dear me, dear me," suddenly came from within. "I left my soap in my grip. I always use my own soap. Dear me, it's in my grip."

"I'll leave the room," said the interviewer. The interviewer left the room.

The interviewer, after counting 50 very slowly, returned to the room.

"O!!!"

"Pardon!!!"

"Heavens!!!"

"I thought—"

Bang went the door.

There was a gentle though nervous pause.

"Now we can proceed," said Clara. "I'm sorry about the soap."

"Not at all," said the interviewer. "Perfectly all right. My fault, you know. I counted 50. I should have counted 100. But I hate arithmetic.

"Do you like vampire roles, Mrs. Young?"

"Oh, so, so. I like most all kinds of acting. It's perfectly disgraceful, really, isn't it, being interviewed in one's bath."

"I should have counted 100," said the interviewer, contritely.

"Well, anyway, I'm glad you didn't merely count 10. That would have been dreadful. Now if you'll go out and count 200 I'll see you and have a real talk."

"I'll count 300 and walk around the corridor on my hands twice," said the interviewer. But he didn't. He went away.—Chicago News.

Some Use in Sawdust.
The deadly wood alcohol is about as useful an agent as any that results from the distillation process. Manufacturers of films, of shellac and of celluloid require large quantities. Compounds used in medicine and surgery even have it in their make-up. There is an anesthetic made from it, and it is of consequence in formaldehyde manufacture, the uses for which are of wide scope.

The huge annual loss from grass smuts, estimated at from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000, is readily controlled by soaking the seed in this material. Grain alcohol is not produced in this manner, but as it is used in large quantities in munition plants it may as well be mentioned here, especially as the sawdust piles of the mills when spruce and pine are sawn ought to be supplying a good deal of this that is at present derived from molasses.

The unnecessary use of anything sweet for such a purpose goes against the grain of a people who are denying themselves sugar. One ton of sawdust is capable of yielding from 20 to 25 gallons of wood alcohol.

Why Person Freezes to Death.
During the deep sleep which follows extreme fatigue the sensitiveness of the nervous system is greatly reduced, and it becomes unable to perceive the lowness of temperature. The unconsciousness of sleep gradually passes into the unconsciousness of collapse. According to the popular belief such a man dies "frozen to death," but as a matter of fact he was killed long before his temperature fell to zero.

What really killed him was the reduction of the activity of his tissue, which always follows the loss of nervous control. As a result there was less and less chemical change accompanied by the production of heat, and at an internal temperature of about 68 degrees life ceased.

That is why, as experience has often shown, the weary traveler who gives way to the imperative desire to sleep on the line of march is doomed to death when he has no adequate protection from extreme cold.

But She Blamed Him Just the Same.
Mr. Smith—I see that Mrs. McQue has just passed without speaking. I thought you were great friends.

Mr. Brown—No, we are not on the best of terms just now.

Smith—How's that?

Brown—Well, you see, it's like this. You remember the fire that took place at their house about a fortnight ago. Well, I ran for a long plank to put it up at the window, so that she might slide down before the fire brigade arrived. But how was I to know there was a nail in it?

Industry Booms in China.
The use of motorcars in Hongkong is comparatively limited, but at present there is what might be classed as a motorcar boom in the colony. The government is planning a comprehensive system of road building and improvement, and, in fact, already has started actual work on roads that will extend the use of the motorcar. The wealthier Chinese have taken to motoring enthusiastically.

WHEATLESS BREAD FOR SANDWICHES

Wheatless bread made according to the following recipe, tested by the home economics division of the University of Minnesota, was served in sandwiches to a large picnic, receiving an enthusiastic reception. Try it to help out the "until harvest campaign."

Sandwich Bread.

1 cupful liquid
2 to 4 tablespoonfuls fat
1 tablespoonful sirup or sugar
2 eggs
6 teaspoonfuls baking powder
1 teaspoonful salt
1 cupful corn flour
2 cupfuls barley flour
1-3 cupful raisins cut in small pieces.

Mix and sift the dry materials. Add milk, egg and melted fat. Bake as a loaf in a moderately hot oven until thoroughly done.

SEND ARMY FOR THE FOOD

This Is the German Method of Securing Wheat From the Ukraine.

Germany counts on securing a large part of her grain supply from Roumania and the Ukraine. The central powers have reserved to themselves the right to establish their own organization in case the Ukraine government fails to purchase the required grain. The troops of the central powers have seized the more important grain districts and under their protection the purchase will begin. A German newspaper prints:

"In well-informed mercantile centers it is recognized that the Ukraine government may not be able to discharge this task and it is, therefore, considered well to be prepared to interfere, if necessary."

A deputy in the reichstag recently made the following statement:

"The securing of the promised bread grain from the food harvest of the Ukraine, according to the peace treaty, is a duty to our German people, and if the present Ukraine government is itself too weak for this then we must help ourselves by way of military interference."

Buttons Deliberately Came Off.
Harry, age four, was investigating mother's sewing basket while she was busy. Mother told him not to take the buttons off the card, as they would be lost. The little boy continued to play with them, however, and soon all of the buttons came off the card. "Harry, I told you not to take the buttons off the card. Now you have disobeyed me." "But, mother," said Harry, "I didn't take 'em off. They accidentally came off!"

ENGLAND RATIONS HER ANIMALS NOW

SHE PUTS THEM ON A CEREAL DIET, STRICTLY LIMITED, INSTEAD OF THE PEOPLE ON A BREAD RATION.

The belligerent countries almost without exception, have found it necessary to ration bread, and it is natural that some wonder should be expressed that France has not done so. Great Britain suffers from a shortage of cereals as do the other warring countries but she prefers to solve her problem in another way. When the consumption of bread is limited the main food of the poorer classes is limited. The well-to-do can supplement their bread ration with other foods, but when the supply of bread to the poor is limited they must go hungry, since they cannot afford the other more expensive articles of diet.

The French ministry of food thinks it more profitable instead of rationing bread to increase the amount of cereals available for baking by limiting their use for the feeding of animals. Three and one half to eight pounds of cereals must be fed in the form of offals bran and maize, to make one pound of meat. So, for each pound of meat and fat that the English are willing to forego they gain about five pounds of cereals which can be used for bread making. Since this policy has been adopted two-thirds of the offals which were previously fed to pigs and cattle are now put into the loaf, and with them most of the barley and maize which have been used hitherto for feeding animals on the farm. In this way, though the shortage of meat has been inconvenient it has been possible to save 13 weeks' supply of bread enough to tide the country over the critical time which must elapse from now to the next harvest.

This is only one way that Great Britain has saved her cereals, however. Thousands of families of the upper and middle classes have voluntarily diminished their consumption of bread by one half and have forced themselves to take potatoes in its place, adopting the rule that at every cooked meal potatoes should be served and eaten as far as possible instead of bread.

EVEN BREAD HARD TO GET

Letter From France Discloses Terrible Shortage of Food Over There.

The Parisian restaurants are reflecting the rigid restrictions imposed on the French people. A letter written from Paris to an attache of the United States food administration shows the change. It follows:

"As you may know, no white bread is to be bought in Paris, and I am told that in some parts of the provinces conditions are even worse—that bread of any sort is difficult to get. The quality of the bread in Paris is very poor. It is mixed with many substitutes which do not seem to respond to the yeast. It is generally sour and clammy, and has made a number of people sick. Besides no white bread, there is no cream or sugar or butter or desserts of any kind except stewed and fresh fruits served in any hotel or restaurant; and no cheese is served if the cost of the meal exceeds a dollar and twenty cents. Imagine sitting down to the early French breakfast at a hotel like the Ritz, in Paris, and being served sour war bread and this miserable French coffee which tastes like chicory and soft soap, and then being told that you could not have butter for your bread, nor sugar nor cream for your coffee!"

CATTLE REDUCED IN FRANCE

Nearly Three Million Head Have Been Destroyed During the War.

Since the outbreak of the war France has suffered a loss of 2,000,000 head of cattle. Allowing 1,000,000 for the loss due to the invasion of the ten departments of northern France, there remains a diminution of 1,600,000 head. Moreover, the cattle that are left have greatly lost in weight. Before the war the average weight in meat of slaughtered cattle was from 770 to 800 pounds, whereas, today it hardly exceeds 550 to 570 pounds.

NEW EGG RULES FOR IOWA.

The United States food administration has ruled that on and after June 1, 1918, all eggs must be candled and counted by the buyer or seller whether he be a general merchant, egg dealer, or huckster. Further, that all eggs must be bought from the farmer, known as the producer, with loss-out, and that all cases must be certified to by the merchant, dealer or huckster as to date of candling and date of count. This certificate must be placed on the outside of the lid and on the inside of the lid.

All wholesalers and egg handlers have been instructed not to buy eggs from any merchant, egg dealer, or huckster unless all cases bear this certificate as to candling and count. The purpose of this rule is to stop traffic in eggs that are unfit for human consumption, to prevent them entering the channels of trade, and therefore prevent enormous waste.

This ruling will be drastically enforced by the food administration and by the dairy and food commission of Iowa.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

CHAPTER FIFTEEN. (Continued.)

"Now that the three branches of the Roussel family are extinct, who remains? Don Luis Perenna. In default of the natural heirs, who inherits the property? Don Luis Perenna."

"Lucky dog!"

"That's what people are saying, chief. They say that this series of murders and atrocities cannot be the effort of chance coincidences, but, on the contrary, points to the existence of an all powerful will which began with the murder of Cosmo Mornington and ended with the capture of the hundred millions. And to give a name to that will, they pitch on the nearest, that of the extraordinary, glorious, ill famed, bewildering, mysterious, omnipotent, and ubiquitous person who was Cosmo Mornington's intimate friend, and who, from the beginning, has controlled events and pieced them together, accusing and acquitting people, getting them arrested, and helping them to escape.

"They say," he went on hurriedly, "that he manages the whole business and that, if he works it in accordance with his interests, there are a hundred millions waiting for him at the finish. And this person is Don Luis Perenna, in other words, Arsene Lupin, the man with the unsavory reputation whom it would be madness not to think of in connection with so colossal a job."

"Thank you!"

"That's what they say, chief; I'm only telling you. As long as Mme. Fauville and Gaston Sauverand were alive, people did not give much thought to your claims as residuary legatee. But both of them died. Then, you see, people can't help remarking the really surprising persistence with which luck looks after Don Luis Perenna's interests. You know the legal maxim: fecit cui prodest. Who benefits by the disappearance of all the Roussel heirs? Don Luis Perenna."

"The scoundrel!"

"The scoundrel: that's the word which Weber goes roaring out all along the passages of the police office and the criminal investigation department. You are the scoundrel and Florence Levasseur is your accomplice. And hardly any one dares protest.

"The prefect of police? What is the use of his defending you, of his remembering that you have saved his life twice over and rendered invaluable services to the police which he is the first to appreciate? What is the use of his going to the prime minister, though we all know that Valenglay protects you?

"There are others besides the prefect of police! There are others besides the prime minister! There is the whole of the detective office there's the public prosecutor's staff, there's the examining magistrate, the press and, above all, public opinion, which has to be satisfied and which calls for and expects a culprit. That culprit is yourself or Florence Levasseur. Or, rather, it's you and Florence Levasseur."

Don Luis did not move a muscle of his face. Mazeroux waited a moment longer. Then, receiving no reply, he made a gesture of despair.

"Chief, do you know what you are compelling me to do? To betray my duty. Well, let me tell you this: tomorrow morning you will receive a summons to appear before the examining magistrate. At the end of your examination, whatever questions may have been put to you and whatever you may have answered, you will be taken straight to the lockup. The warrant is signed. That is what your enemies have done."

"The devil!"

"And that's not all. Weber, who is burning to take revenge has asked for permission to watch your house from this day onward, so that you may not slip away as Florence Levasseur did. He will be here with his men in an hour's time. What do you say to that, Chief?"

Without abandoning his careless attitude, Don Luis beckoned to Mazeroux.

Don Luis was serious. Mazeroux instinctively obeyed. Under the sofa was a portmanteau.

"Sergeant, in ten minutes, when I have told my servants to go to bed, carry the portmanteau to 143 bis Rue de Rivoli, where I have taken a small flat under the name of M. Lecocq."

"What for, Chief? What does it mean?"

"It means that, having no trustworthy person to carry that portmanteau for me, I have been waiting for your visit for the last three days."

"Why, but ——" tammered Mazeroux, in his confusion.

"Why but what?"

"Had you made up your mind to clear out?"

"Of course I had! But why hurry? The reason I placed you in the detective office was that I might know what was being plotted against me. Since you tell me that I'm in danger I shall cut my stick."

And, as Mazeroux looked at him with increasing bewilderment, he tapped him on the shoulder and said severely:

"You see, Sergeant, that it was not worth while to disguise yourself as a cab driver and betray your duty. You should never betray your duty, Sergeant. Ask your own conscience: I am sure it will judge you according to your deserts."

Don Luis had spoken the truth. Recognizing how greatly the deaths of Marie Fauville and Sauverand had altered the situation, he considered it wise to move to a place of safety. His excuse for not doing so before was that he hoped to receive news of Florence Levasseur either by letter or by telephone. As the girl persisted in keeping silence, there was no reason why Don Luis should risk an arrest which the course of events made extremely probable.

And in fact his anticipations were correct. Next morning Mazeroux came to the little flat in the Rue de Rivoli looking very spry.

"You've had a narrow escape, Chief. Weber heard this morning that the bird had flown. He's simply furious! And you must confess that the tangle is getting worse and worse. They're utterly at a loss at headquarters. They don't even know how to set about prosecuting Florence Levasseur."

"You must have read about it in the papers. The examining magistrate maintains that, as Fauville committed suicide and killed his son Edmond, Florence Levasseur has nothing to do with the matter. In his opinion the case is closed on that side. Well, he's a good one, the examining magistrate! What about Gaston Sauverand's death? Isn't it as daylight that Florence had a hand in it, as well as in all the rest?

"Wasn't it in her room, in a volume of Shakespeare, that documents were found relating to M. Fauville's arrangements about the letters and the explosion? And then ——"

Mazeroux interrupted himself, frightened by the look in Don Luis's eyes and realizing that the chief was fonder of the girl than ever. Guilty or not, she inspired him with the same passion.

"All right," said Mazeroux, "we'll say no more about it. The future will bear me out, you'll see."

The days passed. Mazeroux called as often as possible or else telephoned to Don Luis all the details of the two inquiries that were being pursued at Saint-Lazare and at the Sante prison.

Vain inquiries, as we know. While Lon Luis's statement relating to the electric chandelier and the automatic distribution of the mysterious letters were found to be correct, the investigation failed to reveal anything about the two suicides.

At most, it was ascertained that before his arrest, Sauverand had tried to enter into correspondence with Marie through one of the tradesmen supplying the infirmary. Were they to suppose that the phial of poison and the hypodermic syringe had been introduced by the same means? It was impossible to prove; and, on the other hand, it was impossible to discover how the newspaper cuttings telling of Marie's suicide had found their way into Gaston Sauverand's cell.

And then the original mystery of the marks of teeth in the apple. M. Fauville's posthumous confession acquitted Marie. And yet it was undoubtedly Marie's teeth that had marked the apple. The teeth that had been called the teeth of the tiger were certainly hers. Well, then!

In short, as Mazeroux said, everybody was groping in the dark, so much so that the Prefect, who was called upon by the will to assemble the Mornington heirs at a date not less than three nor more than four months after the testator's decease, suddenly decided that the meeting should take place in the course of the following week and fixed it for the ninth of June.

He hoped in this way to put an end to an exasperating case in which the police displayed nothing but uncertainty and confusion. They would decide about the inheritance according to circumstances and then close the proceedings. And gradually people would cease to talk about the wholesale slaughter of the Mornington heirs; and the mystery of the teeth of the tiger would be gradually forgotten.

It was strange, but these last days, which were restless and feverish like all the days that come before great battles—and every one felt that this last meeting meant a great battle—were spent by Don Luis in an arm chair on his balcony in the Rue de Rivoli, where he sat quietly smoking cigaretes, or blowing soap bubbles which the wind carried toward the garden of the Tuileries.

Mazeroux could not get over it.

"Chief, you astound me! How clam and careless you look!"

"I am calm and careless, Alexandre."

"But what do you mean? Doesn't the case interest you? Don't you intend to avenge Mme. Fauville and Sauverand? You are openly accused and you sit here blowing soap bubbles!"

"There's no more delightful pastime, Alexandre."

"Shall I tell you what I think, Chief? You've discovered the solution of the mystery!"

"Perhaps I have, Alexandre, and perhaps I haven't."

Nothing seemed to excite Don Luis. Hours and hours passed; and he did not stir from his balcony. The sparrows now came and ate the crumbs which he threw to them. It really seemed as if the case was coming to an end for him and as if everything was turning out perfectly.

But, on the day of the meeting, Mazeroux entered with a letter in his hand and a scared look on his face.

"This is for you, Chief. It was addressed to me, but with an envelope inside it in your name. How do you explain that?"

"Quite easily, Alexandre. The enemy is aware of our cordial relations; and, as he does not know where I am staying ——"

"What enemy?"

"I'll tell you tomorrow evening."

Don Luis opened the envelope and read the following words, written in red ink:

"There's still time, Lupin. Retire from the contest. If not, it means your death, too. When you think that your object is attained, when your hand is raised against me and you utter words of triumph, at that same moment the ground will open beneath your feet. The place of your death is chosen. The snare is laid. Beware Lupin."

Lon Luis smiled.

"Good," he said. Things are taking shape."

"Do you think so, Chief?"

"I do. And who gave you the letter?"

"Ah, we've been lucky for once, Chief! The policeman to whom it was handed happened to live at Les Ternes, next door to the bearer of the letter. He knows the fellow well. It was a stroke luck, wasn't it?"

Don Luis sprang from his seat, radient with delight.

"What do you mean? Out with it! You know who it is?"

"Let's go there. We've no time to lose."

"Splendid, Chief! You're yourself again."

"Well, of course! As long as there was nothing to do I was waiting for this evening and resting, for I can see that the fight will be tremendous. But, as the enemy has blundered at last, as he's given me a trail to go upon, there's no need to wait, and I'll get ahead of him. Have at the tiger, Mazeroux!"

It was one o'clock in the afternoon when Don Luis and Mazeroux arrived at the nursing home in the Avenue des Ternes. A manservant opened the door. Mazeroux nudged Don Luis. The man was doubtless the bearer of the letter. And, in reply to the servant's questions, he made no difficulty about saying that he had been to the police office that morning.

"By whose orders?" asked Mazeroux.

"The mother superior's."

"The mother superior?"

"Yes, the home includes a private hospital, which is managed by nuns."

"Could we speak to the superior?"

"Certainly, but not now; she has gone out."

"When will she be in?"

"Oh, she may be back at any time!"

The man showed them into the waiting room, where they spent over an hour. They were greatly puzzled. What did the intervention of that nun mean? What part was she playing in the case?

People came in and were taken to the patients whom they had called to see. Others went out. There were also sisters moving silently to and fro and nurses dressed in their long white overalls belted at the waist.

"What's your hurry? Is your sweetheart waiting for you?"

"We're wasting our time."

"I'm not wasting mine. The meeting at the Perfect's is not till five."

"What did you say? You're joking, Chief! You surely don't intend to go to it."

"Why not?"

"Why not? Well, the warrant ——"

"A scrap of paper which will become a serious matter if you force the police to act. Your presence will be looked upon as a provocation ——"

"And my absence as a confession. A gentleman who comes into a hundred millions does not lie low on the day of the windfall. So I must attend that meeting, lest I should forfeit my claim. And attend it I will."

"Chief!"

A stifled cry was heard in front of them; and a woman, a nurse, who was passing through the room at once started running, lifted a curtain, and disappeared.

Don Luis rose, hesitating, not knowing what to do. Then, after four or five seconds of indecision, he suddenly rushed to the curtain and down a corridor, came up against a large, leather padded door which had just closed, and wasted more time in stupidly fumbling at it with shaking hands.

When he had opened it, he found himself at the foot of a back staircase. Should he go up it? On the right the same staircase ran down to the basement. He went down it, entered a kitchen and, seizing hold of the cook, said to her, in an angry voice:

"Has a nurse just gone out this way?"

"Do you mean Nurse Gertrude, the new one?"

"Yes, yes, quick' she's wanted upstairs."

"Who wants her?"

"Oh, hang it all, can't you tell me which way she went?"

"Through that door over there."

"Well, here's a pretty race!" cried Mazeroux, joining him.

Don Luis stood scanning the avenue. A motor bus was starting on the little square hard by, the Place Saint-Ferdinand.

He hailed a taxi.

"Is it Florence Levasseur?" asked Mazeroux.

"Yes."

"A nice thing!" growled the sergeant. And, yielding to a sudden outburst: "But, look here, Chief, don't you see? Surely you're not as blind as all that!"

Don Luis made no reply.

"But, Chief, Florence Levasseur's presence in the nursing-home proves as clearly as A B C that it was she who told the manservant to bring me that threatening letter for you! There's not a doubt about it: Florence Levasseur is managing the whole business.

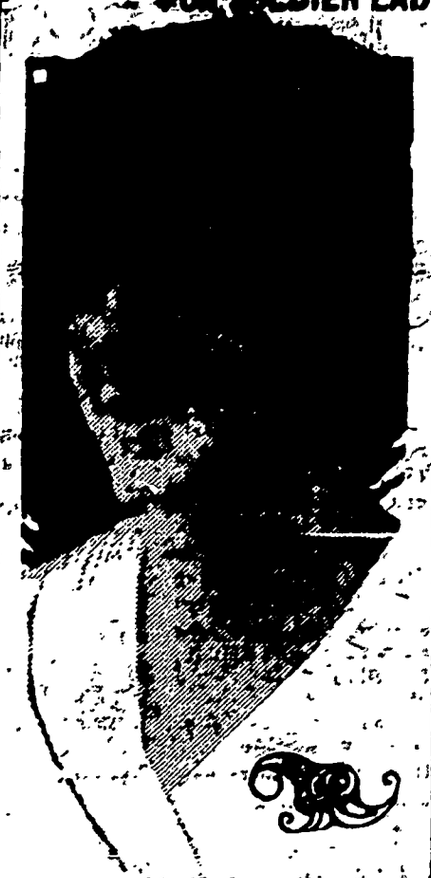
BEAUTY PATCH IS FOR SOLDIER LAD



Ida Kashner.

Miss Ida Kashner, a Cleveland, Ohio girl, is the first to wear a beauty spot especially designed to show that she is remembering a boy in France. Instead of merely wearing the crossed rifles to show he is in the trenches, she has interwoven with rifles the new V-shaped service insignia. This is Miss Kashner's own idea, which she introduced in Atlanta, Ga., recently, where she and her sister have been singing and dancing for the soldiers.

HORSE MEAT SCHEME HAD GREAT PROMISE

Promoters Soon to Be Placed on Trial In Federal Court at Chicago.

Chicago.—Otto Breitkreutz, widely known as "Big Otto, the animal trainer," and his business associate, August Beneke, directors of the "horse meat syndicate," will be placed on trial here soon on charges of using the mails to defraud. The men were brought here after having been trailed by post-office inspectors and arrested on opposite sides of the continent.

"Horse meat at 10 cents a pound will win the war," was the motto of the syndicate, according to authorities, who declare that the trial will develop unusual interest and that men prominent in business and politics will be involved.

Breitkreutz, formerly promoter of the "Big Otto Mine," took as a partner in the get-rich-quick schemes, Frank Kunza, a Chicago butcher, and the Kunza Packing company was formed, capitalized at $1,000,000. Kunza invested $1,000, said to be the only money advanced by the partners. A plant was rented, offices established and salesmen hurried out to sell $1,000,000 worth of stock, the government charges.

The salesmen worked fast. They told how "Big Otto," the 480 pound animal trainer, fired by a spirit of patriotism, had studied out the horse meat scheme. They said he had talked with President Wilson, Food Administrator Hoover, Lord Northcliff, buyer for the allies, and others and all agreed horse meat would win the war. The salesmen further declared that a contract for 20,000 barrels of horse meat, 300 pounds to a barrel, had been obtained at 10 cents a pound, f. o. b. Chicago.

Two thousand dollars a day would be the minimum profit of the Kunza Packing company; horses were plentiful at $5 each; shin bones would bring $90 a ton, other bones $10 a ton, casings $2 each, hair from 50 cents to $1.25 a horse, grease $7 a horse. Besides, the oil from horses' hoofs was valuable. And to top it off, the salesmen pointed to the price of 10 cents a pound with a contract for 6,000,000 pounds already signed, the government charges. Salesmen received a commission of 25 per cent of all stock sold.

While most of the buyers were foreign butchers and other persons with little knowledge of get-rich-quick schemes, it is said that at least one influential merchant invested heavily, and that other business men purchased small blocks of stock. When prosperity began smiling on Big Otto, according to the government, he took into the firm Williams Dunn and Charles Green and gave each $50,000 worth of stock. A city ordinance forbidding the slaughtering of horses for food purposes was to be repealed through the "influence" which Arthur Quinn, known as "Prince Arthur," said he had with certain friends, the government's investigation showed. Suddenly post-office inspectors became interested and the entire matter was placed before the grand jury, which quickly returned the indictment against Big Otto and Beneke. They fled, according to the government, and were making plans to establish similar concerns in the east when arrested.

CENTURY-OLD TRUST FUND IN CONTROVERSY

Boston.—The full bench of the Massachusetts supreme court has been called upon to determine the ownership of a fund nearly a century old which is claimed by the commonwealth of Massachusetts on one hand and the Chilean government on the other. In 1821 an American ship returning from China to this port was seized by Chilean revolutionists and its cargo confiscated. When normal conditions prevailed in Chile, the United States demanded indemnity, and Chile paid $70,000.

William H. Gardiner, of Brookline, was selected to distribute the money among those entitled to it. He executed the trust except as to two Chinese known only as Paqua and Moqua, merchants, and Thomas Furber, of this city. Mr. Gardiner failed to locate these persons or their representatives. When he died the trust was transmitted to his son and upon the latter's death to the grandson and great grandson, Robert H. Gardiner and Robert H. Gardiner, jr., who are now its custodians. The present holders of the fund have searched through the records of the state department, through the American consular service at Canton, China, and through various other sources, for the heirs of Paqua, Moqua and Thomas Furber, without success.

SAFE FARMING

Substitutes for Corn

Sorghum, Millet or Sudan Grass Make Good Feed

By P. G. HOLDEN

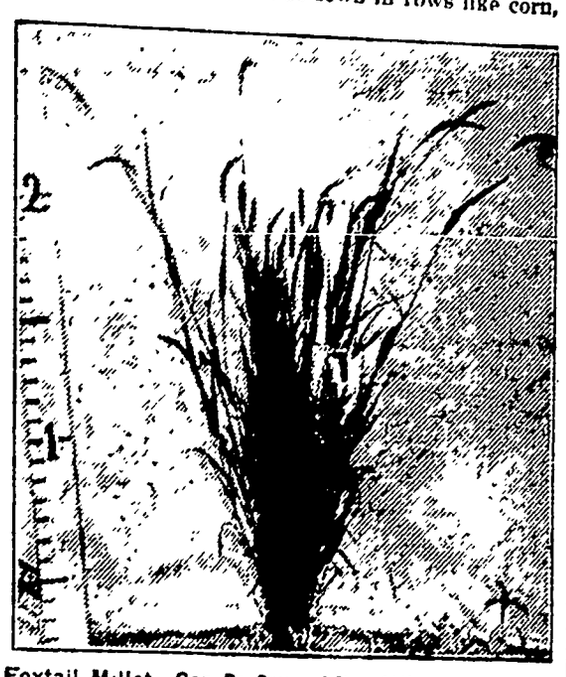
The poor condition of seed corn in the northern Corn Belt will no doubt result in a very poor stand of corn in many fields. In some cases entire fields will have to be replanted.

Many farmers cannot replant because of the scarcity of seed, and substitute crops must be planted or the land will remain idle.

In this emergency the growing of millet, sorghum, or even Sudan grass, is worthy of consideration.

Perhaps the best of these substitutes for the northern Corn Belt is sorghum. The Early Amber variety is good for either syrup or forage purposes. Other good varieties are the Orange, Red Top, and Gooseneck. For growing as forage, sorghum can be sown as late as August 1, and will make more or less of an enormous growth, depending upon the soil and season.

When grown for hay it may be sown broadcast or with a grain drill, using from 50 to 70 pounds of seed to the acre. Or it can be sown in rows like corn, using from five to ten pounds of seed per acre, cultivated and cut for silage with a corn binder.



Foxtail Millet—Can Be Sown After Wheat and Oats Are Harvested—Makes Good Catch Crop.

When used as silage it should be cut when the seed begins to harden. For silage it is nearly equal to corn and under good growing conditions will produce more tons to the acre.

When sowed for hay it should be cut with a grain binder and shocked. Later it can be hauled to the barn or feed lot and put in the mow or stacked, to be fed whole or run through a cutting box. As it is hard to cure, it may be best to leave it outside in shocks or a small stack, as the weather does not damage it.

There are two types of millet—the broom corn type, which has spreading heads, and the foxtail type, which has one spike head.

Millet can be sown as late as July as a catch crop. It can be sown after wheat and oats are harvested. Use about three pecks of seed to the acre and cut for hay when the heads begin to show.

Sudan grass is as yet new to the Corn Belt. It belongs to the sorghum family. It may be sown broadcast, or drilled, and it makes no difference in the yield of hay whether 10 pounds or 20 pounds of seed are sown to the acre as it is a great stooler.

Sudan grass can be sown as late as July 15 or 20, and the early seeding sometimes makes two cuttings. It should be cut as soon as the bloom begins to drop and handled the same as sorghum. If the weather is hot and dry it can be cured into hay and stored.

In securing Sudan grass seed care must be taken to make sure you do not get Johnson grass seed instead. Johnson grass is a great pest and its seed so closely resembles the seed of Sudan grass that the average person cannot tell the difference.

ARMY KITCHENS ARE CARED FOR CAREFULLY

British Officers Look Closely After the Welfare of the Men In Their Commands.

Behind the British Lines in France, (by mail)—The importance of the kitchen department of the army cannot be overrated, for if men are to work hard and efficiently they must be decently fed. For this reason the "king's regulations" provide that it is the first duty of every commanding officer to see that the soldier's meals are properly and sufficiently provided. It is further ordered that an officer must inspect the kitchens and cookhouses every day, while the same officer must visit the barrack rooms and mess tents during the breakfast, dinner and supper hours to find out if there is any cause for complaint.

The kitchen establishment of a British army camp varies widely under different circumstances. At garrison centers in France, the cookhouse is a large building shared by several units, and is under the charge of a sergeant-chef who has ben through a special course in military cooking. It is his duty to superintend personally all cooking done in the regimental cookhouse. Each unit, in its turn, has a chief cook who is responsible for all the meals of his unit.

In the field, however, the cookhouse is a thing of mushroom growth. When a unit is on the march the simplest method of constructing a temporary kitchen is to place a number of kettles on the ground in two parallel rows, block the leeward end of the passage thus formed with another kettle and light a fire in this improvised trench. As soon as the fire has been started, one or two rows of kettles can be placed on top of those already in position.

If the stay at a particular spot is likely to be for any appreciable length of time, a good field kitchen is improvised by digging a narrow trench for the fires, and placing the camp kettles above this. Sometimes a chimney is built of sods.

For a stay of three or four days, regular "field ovens" are constructed. An arch of sheet iron is erected and on top of this a layer of clay is piled. With this oven it is possible to give the men roast meat for dinner as often as the joints are forthcoming from the supply column. Enough bread to feed a whole battery can be baked in one of these ovens.

DEATH TAKES MAKER OF CONFEDERATE FLAG

Wilson, N. C., (by mail)—Mrs. Rebecca Winborne, 87 years old, who died recently, is said to have been the woman who made the first Confederate flag.

The banner, designed by Captain Orren Randolph Smith, of Henderson, N. C., was made by Mrs. Winborne when she was Miss Rebecca Murphy, at Wilson, in February, 1861. A sister refused to aid in making the flag, it is said, because she was engaged to a northern army officer. A few weeks after the flag was completed it was adopted by the confederate congress at Montgomery, Ala., as the standard of the confederacy. The first banner contained only seven stars, representing the number of states that had seceded, but this number was soon increased to 11 by the withdrawal of other states from the union. By an act of the confederate congress it was named "The Stars and Bars."

At a reunion of confederate veterans at Norfolk, Va., in 1910, Captain Smith explained the meaning of the various colors in the flag, as follows:

"The idea of my flag I took from the Trinity. The three bars were for church, state and press, all bound together by a field of blue (the heavens over all), bearing a star for each state in the confederation. The seven white stars, all the same size, were placed in a circle showing that each state had equal rights and privileges irrespective of size or population."

INJURED SOLDIERS TO BE GIVEN REAL TRAINING

There appears to exist in the minds of many persons a misconception of what vocational re-education is, as applied to disabled soldiers and sailors. The Federal Board for Vocational Education, which is charged with the duty of re-educating the injured men, is constantly receiving communications from persons who have this, that, or the other supposed art or craft which they offer as being just the thing to teach the wounded soldiers. These suggestions run all the way from making artcraft out of sealing wax, making paper flowers and gilding pine cones to constructing alleged ornaments out of putty.

The federal board does not intend to teach useless things. The education to be given in the main, will be in highly specialized occupations which are good paying, recognized, and manly callings that have a definite, useful place in the business world.

There seems to be a misunderstanding concerning what occupational therapeutics and vocational education are, or the part that they play. The former is given to divert the patient's mind, to exercise some particular set of muscles or a limb, or perhaps merely to relieve the tedium of convalescence. These activities have little, if any practical value beyond the immediate purpose they serve, nor are they intended to have any other value.

But even now in occupational therapy the idea is to give that sort of training which will be preliminary to the real vocational education which is to begin as soon as the patient is able to go further along. If, for instance, the patient was formerly a sheet metal worker and is now debarred from the use of physical strength, he is started, perhaps, as a designer or architectural expert in cornices, sheet metal and architectural work. His practical knowledge is thus built upon and focused in a specialty suited to his capabilities.

The patient is furnished with a set of instruments, a bed drawing board, and textbooks. Then he is given able instruction. The weeks in bed or in the wheel chair are utilized practically. When he is able to go into the work shops, the convalescent is well along as a technician, and ready for further intensive training.

So it is with other lines. The business of education is, first of all, common sense and practical. The idea is to turn out thoroughly trained men for men's jobs at men's pay, despite any physical handicap which may have rendered the men useless in their former callings.

RUSSIA NEVER REAL NATION

Pessimistic Muscovite Explains the True Situation in the Former Empire of the Czar.

"We're a nation of artists and savages. You can reach us through our feelings—give us a poem, a play, a picture, and we can imitate it, or even improve on it. You send us cannon"—He raised both arms helplessly and dropped them.

"You thought Russia was a huge country. That was a fiction built up by the old regime, which meanwhile intrigued with Germany. As a matter of fact, Russia extends for a few hundred kilometers, north, south, east and west of Moscow. The rest was a foreign country, held together by force. It might become a federation and grow into something like your United States, but it never was a nation in the real sense of the word.

"You think we're a great agricultural country. Another fallacy. We have land, but no agriculture. Our peasants dance on their fields instead of fertilizing them.

"Foreigners have been very naive. They assumed we were modern, strong and capable because of a few fine things we sent to them. They read Tolstoi or saw Pavlova and said 'Ah'—a great people! They saw greatness through the entrechat of some ballerina's legs.'"

MOST GOLFERS WILL SAY SO

Only One Classification for Player Who Would Make Such a Claim as That.

"Pa," said Tommy, who had caddied one afternoon at one of the golf clubs, "is a man a good golfer if he knocks the ball one hundred and twenty-five yards?"

"Just a novice, my son."

"Well, if he knocks the ball two hundred and fifty yards?"

"Mighty good! He's mighty good if he can do that, my boy."

"Well, pa, what if he knocks it two hundred and seventy-five yards?"

"He's a splendid player, Tommy," replied pa, as he once more fastened his eye on the newspaper.

"Well, pa, what if he knocked the ball three hundred and twenty-five yards—what would he be then?"

"Probably a liar, my son. Now you had better kiss mamma and go to bed."

Originated With Webster.

When began the custom for individuals and audiences to be standing when the 'Star-Spangled Banner' was sung or played?"

It was a fair question. It was adopted by the army and navy long ago; but the army and navy did not originate the very appropriate and patriotic custom.

Between sixty and seventy years ago, when Jenny Lind, one of the sweetest singers the world ever produced, was the chief attraction at a Boston concert, Daniel Webster, the great senator, secretary of state and patriot, was present.

Jenny Lind sang the "Star-Spangled Banner" as only that songbird could sing it. The audience called her back several times, and she sang a verse of our present national anthem.

Each time one man stood up, and at the close gracefully bowed to the singer. That was Daniel Webster.

It was a good example to set, a needed custom to establish, and one that has been an important factor in impressing patriotic lessons.

Father was sitting in the den taking a peaceful smoke, when there came from the parlor a noise that sounded like a cross between the sigh of a pine tree and the wail of a locomotive. With something akin to strong language he rose and went downstairs. In the hall he met his daughter.

HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES IF YOUR BACK ACHES

Do you feel tired and "worn-out?" Are you nervous and irritable? Don't sleep well at night? Have a "dragged out," unrested feeling when you get up in the morning? Dizzy spells? Bilious? Bad taste in the mouth, backache, pain or soreness in the loins, and abdomen? Severe distress when urinating, bloody, cloudy urine or sediment? All these indicate gravel or stone in the bladder, or that the poisonous microbes, which are always in your system, have attacked your kidneys.

You should use GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules immediately. The oil soaks gently into the walls and lining of the kidneys, and the little poisonous animal germs, which are causing the inflammation, are immediately attacked and chased out of your system without inconvenience or pain.

Don't ignore the "little pains and aches," especially backaches. They may be little now but there is no telling how soon a dangerous or fatal disease of which they are the forerunners may show itself. Go after the cause of that backache at once, or you may find yourself in the grip of an incurable disease.

Do not delay a minute. Go to your druggist and insist on his supplying you with a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. In 24 hours you will feel renewed health and vigor. After you have cured yourself, continue to take one or two Capsules each day so as to keep in first-class condition, and ward off the danger of future attacks. Money refunded if they do not help you. Ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL brand, and thus be sure of getting the genuine.—Adv.

COMMONWEALTH OF IOWA

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT

DES MOINES

A PROCLAMATION

To the Farmers of Iowa:

Your attention is directed to the serious situation that confronted us early this year on account of the lack of seed corn Because of the world shortage of food there never has been a time when it was so vital that the very best seed possible be provided as now

There is at this time a scarcity of man power, and this will be very greatly increased next year, so it is essential that everything possible be done to increase production with the available man power One hundred per cent seed corn will very greatly increase the production of corn per mna power in the state next year

As you well know, there is no old or held over seed corn in the state. I want to urge every farmer to save enough seed corn now to supply his needs for next season and the following season; by doing this you are rendering the greatest possible patriotic service to your country

THEREFORE, by virue of the authority in me vested, I, W L Harding, Governor of the State of Iowa, call upon all of the farmers of this State to help in this vitally important work, and for the purpose of concentrating upon this matter, I proclaim and set aside the period commencing

September 16, and Ending September 28, 1918

and earnestly urge that this period be made on of loyal support and generous participation in this great work for humanity and patriotism

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Iowa

Done at Des Moines, this fourth day of September, 1918

BY THE GOVERNOR:

W. L. HARDING,

W. S. Allen, Secretary of State

War Time Sweeteners

MERICA has several excellent war time sweeteners that will be used largely during the shortage in the sugar supply.

They are maple sugar, syrups, honey and molasses and may be used in preparing desserts and other dishes requiring sweetening.

When a cup of syrup or honey is used to replace a cup of sugar the liquid in the recipes should be decreased one-fourth. One-third of a cupful of sugar is equivalent to one-third of a cup of honey, about one-half cup of syrup and about one-half cup of corn sugar. One-fourth of a cup of sugar is equal to about one-half cup of syrup or one-third cup of corn sugar. One tablespoon of sugar is equal to one tablespoon of honey, about one and one-half tablespoons of syrup and one and one-third tablespoons of corn sugar.

Sugar may be saved by the use of raisins, dates, figs, dried pears and fruit pastes used on the breakfast cereals.

Fruit marmalades, butters and jellies should be used to take the place of the ordinary sweetening at a meal and not as accessories to it. Fruits may be preserved without sugar. It may be added when sugar is more plentiful.

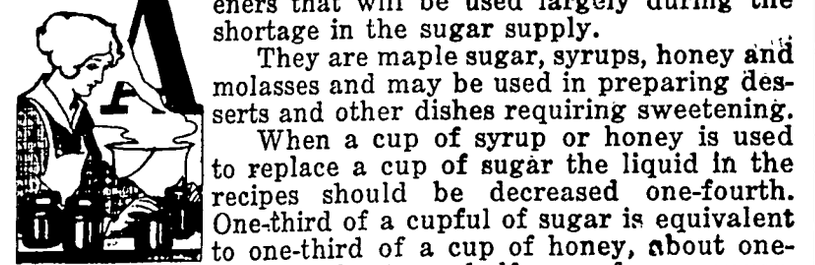
Preserving demands this year a thin syrup instead of a heavy syrup.

If sugar is used one-half of the amount may be replaced by another sweetener.

Drying is a means of preserving (without sugar) apples, cherries, strawberries and black caps.

When ready to use they may have added the needed sugar in the form of a syrup. When sugar is more plentiful fruit juices may be made into jellies or may be used as fruit juices with or without sugar, as beverages, fruit gelatins and frozen desserts.

Fresh fruits supply the place of sugar in the diet. They should be used freely. Desserts where sugar is scarce may be made of gelatins, junkets, custards, puddings and cakes.



Law Regulating Fashions.

In 1639 the general court of Massachusetts passed a law that "No garment shall be made with short sleeves, and such as have garments with short sleeves shall not wear them unless they cover the arm to the wrist. And hereafter no person whatever shall make any garment for women with sleeves more than half an ell wide (twenty-two and a half inches)." If laws regulating fashions were passed today, how many women would be fined for law-breaking?

Letters From Our Boys In Service

Red Cross News and Letters From the Lads

The surgical class is well attended. A shipment of 50 pads 12x24 was shipped this week. The rest of the quota will be finished at our next meeting.

The quota for Red Cross work has not come yet. Some delay at headquarters, for Garner has not received theirs yet and our work comes through Garner. Very sorry, but we hope to receive it by next work day so we hope to have plenty of work for all.

The Junior Red Cross have received over $40 so far from the little aprons. While there are a few more out, we wish you would please mail or send them in to Miss Annie Gibbs or leave at First National Bank as soon as possible, and if there is anyone who did not receive one of these and wants to help the little tots just send in or leave a little donation at First National Bank for it all goes to help a good cause.

A few letters received from our boys in reply to kits sent them:

Dear Friends:

I got the kit you sent me and I thank you very much for it. I sure will make good use of it.

I remain as ever,
Your friend,

To the Red Cross and it's Co-Workers

I am thanking you very much for the remembrance I received. Didn't hardly expect it as I had been away from home for so long that my old friends had forgotten me.

Must speak a good word for the Red Cross for they sure theat us grand. On our little trip from our former camp until we arrived here it was the Red Cross that gave us anything one could wish for and it sure makes one feel good to know that you still have a few friends left.

Will close with kind regards to all.

Friend Mrs. Wiles:—

I will try and write you a few lines to thank you folks for the comfort kit It is sure a dandy and everything is in there that anyone needs. I've been wishing for a kit ever since I hit this camp as you can't buy anything here unless you go to Norfolk which is forty miles from here.

We are out in the wilderness and don't get the news here until it is about five days old. The boys say that we wont know when the war is over until six months later. What is Colonel doing now? I suppose he is busy at school again. I am on the firing line again. I took my exams for 1st Class coach Sunday and passed it with a grade of 99½. That is pretty good for 400 questions isn't it?

Well, Mrs. Wiles, I guess I will have to close for this time as I am tired and want to hit my hammock. Thanking you folks for the kit, I remain as

Your little friend,
Stub

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Hendershott, Pastor

The Holy Spirit cannot abide in a church that questions the authenticity of the Holy Scriptures, that honors and advances men who deny the Diety of Jesus and seeks entertainment and happiness with card players, theatre goers, and dancers of the world. It is impossible for the Church to make any substantial headway without afull recognition of the Holy Ghost, His presence, authority and leadership. When men rush ahead, build magnificent temples, erect and endow great colleges and universities without the leading and direction of the Holy Ghost, they only hurt and h nder the cause of God in the world. They foster pride and unbelief instead of that humility and faith which are so essential to personal salvation and the upbuilding and spirituality of the true Church of God. There are people who do not read a dozen chapters from the Bible a year; who never go to church except on social occasions, who never repented of sin in their lives, who do not know what it is to pray through to God and get a direct answer to prayer, yet are very apt at criticising the Gospel and the men whom God has called to preach His word. It is this crowd, unconverted they are, who says there is nothing in holiness. It is not the converted people that are fighting holiness. If all who profess Christianity were truly converted and had the witness of the Spirit in their own heart as to their acceptance with God it would not be long until we would have a sanctified people. A soul genuinely regenerated naturally hungers and thirsts of the fulness of the blessing. The church is a holy institution, but most everywhere a few Pharisees have crept into the church and they are the folks who are knocking on the church. Outsiders fight for the church. A true Christian will stand by the church regardless of the preacher.

A CROOKED SHEANEY

We hear a story going the rounds of the country and believe it is true because we hear it from reliable sources. A week or so ago there was a Jew around Klemme selling raincoats to easy victims who evidently thought that the Klemme merchants could not supply them wih whereof to keep off the condensed clouds. Well the said Mr. Jew goes by the official cognomen Jacob, same as all Jews do. He evidently thought he was not getting enough for his goods so raised the checks about ten dollars each and made his get away. Also he hired a car of C. W. Wiles, and after blowing out two tires, tipping over once or twice and then buying gas of a farmer and charging same to Wiles, he left town and forgot to pay Wiles for the use of the car, let alone the damage and gas used. What beats Clarence is why he didn't sell the car. Well he stung some people pretty bad, so we hear, but when will people learn not to buy cheap raincoats and other articles from peddlers? Buy your stuff from Klemme merchants, they have the goods and stand back of them with a guarantee and also they will not raise the amount of your check. Moral—trade at home. (The above is not a fish story, but is the straight goods, all wool and a yard wide, not a cotton yarn).

THE EDITOR'S PANTS

Lives of editors remind us
Honest men don't get a chance,
The more we work them grows behind us
Bigger patches on our pants.
On our pants once new and glossy,
Now are stripes of different hue,
All because subscribers linger
And won't pay us what is due.
Let us then be up and doing,
Send your mite, however small,
Or when the snows of winter strike us
We will have no pants at all.

The uncanceled order which left a military guard, intended for one night only, to watch over Drury Lane theater for nearly two centuries, had a parallel in the royal palace at Petrograd About 30 years ago some economist questioned the need of a sentry on guard, night and day, on one particular spot on the lawn. No one could answer until old records were turned up, and it was found that Catherine I, admiring a crocus bloom on the lawn, had desired the plant to be protected So a guard had been mounted and, no countermand being issued, had been maintained for nearly two centuries.

SUTHERLAND, IOWA BOY WRITES OF BIG BATTLE

Sutherland, Ia., Sept. 5.—William Klema, one of the first who went to France with Pershing and has seen lots of hard fighting, has written an interesting letter home At the time that Al Behmer was killed on the battlefield and Ted Butler was badly wounded so that he died shortly after and Neil Brewer was badly shell shocked and has been in the hospital since the battle of March 9 The same shell that killed Behmer and Butler and also knocked out Brewer also knocked Billy Klema down and covered him up with dirt and completely buried him except his head He was pretty badly used up for a short time but came around all right and has seen active duty ever since His letter follows

I have so many to write to and just now it is hard to write much as we are on the go. Those huns run like wild deer Out of five from home in this company I am the only one left with the company now You know that two were killed in March, and one went to the hospital at the same time and is not back yet . Not long ago the fourth was wounded (this one perhaps has reference to Babe Hill and word has just been received that his leg was amputated and that he was getting along all right,) so that leaves me alone I am a regular old war horse, and intend to—and feel like I am going to stick by the company without leaving it until the curtain falls on the last act.

'I have seen sights and had experiences for which I wouldn't take $1,000,000, but wouldn't give 10 cents to go through again, though I suppose I shall. You probably have read of these wonderful airplane fights, tank attacks and heavy bombardments and all of the rest I have witnessed all of these, and if you think anything is ever exaggerated don't believe it, for I am sure no one has ever been able to fully explain and picture it to any one else.

"We are mighty proud to be able to say that we helped stop the boches in the greatest battle or drive in this war, and I believe it must be the biggest one in history I have been able to get souvenirs galore, but it is quite impossible to carry any around because our packs would th a mule now, and believe me we ma some hikes.

"We are getting mighty anxious for a rest and think we will soon be treated to one We have been at the front for a long time now and I guess considered "old vets." Anyway we have had some mighty good praise and two citations by famous French generals

"I want to tell you a little experience of mine not long ago We were under a heavy bombardment and were out in the trenches waiting for our 'meat or Fritz It is funny what a fellow will think about in a time like this We had not been feeding very heavy because occasionally some high explosive would spill the beans, etc Anyway, I had an empty feeling down in the middle, and I was telling how mother and some of my relatives could cook, and explaining what a kolatche is, when whang a 'Bud' lit just between us

"We both stared at it and didn't say a word for about a minute afterward, and then this friend looked up kind of pale and shaky and says, 'She aint going off Bill' Say that is a fine feeling a fellow has when he knows the shell is no good and it is not going to punch your meal ticket for departure from this old world

'I am sure you at home are feeling as good over the situation now as we are The Huns are falling fast I believe and I'll bet that in a short while they will be the worst whipped that ever breathed Our own Fourth of July and the French holiday July 14, were not very well celebrated by us but we intend to make up for it when we hit Berlin I must close now and slip over to the 'Y.' They just got in some chocolate and I've got a sweet tooth this morning"

LAKE VIEW FARMER ROUGHLY HANDLED

Fathers of Men Wounded and Killed in France Resent Alleged Pro-German Remarks.

Lake View, Ia., Sept. 5.—William Ellwanger, a farmer was roughly treated when he came to town Saturday, the punishment being administered by relatives of Lake View boys who have been wounded or killed in recent fighting in France.

Ellwanger is alleged to have said that it was good enough for the Lake View boys who have been wounded or killed, that they should have stayed at home and kept out of the war. He is also alleged to have said that he would get even with the committee that insisted on him giving to the Red Cross last winter, that he would get even when the kaiser has won the war.

It is understood the punishment on Ellwanger was administered by Matthew Drilling, father of one of the boys wounded in France, and Elbert Auen, father of Sergeant Elbert Auen, who was killed

It is understood that after they had roughly handled Ellwanger the men put him in his automobile and told him to leave town It is also understood he visited the county seat later and sought to have the men arrested, but received no satisfaction from the authorities after they had investigated the matter

KAISER STILL FIRM IN HOPE OF VICTORY

Emperor In Sedan Day Message Says Enemy Cannot Shake Empire

Amsterdam Sept 2 Emperor William replying to a message from the municipality of Berlin on the occasion of Sedan Day declared that he was firmly convinced that no enemy will ever be able to shake the strong structure of the German empire Never he added, could the German people be vanquished when it was united Continuing the message as quoted in a dispatch from Berlin, said

"I know that the whole German people are ready for all sacrifices that it is as one with me in the firm determination to obtain an honorable peace. No other people is able to accomplish what the Germans have done at the front and at home in heroism, energy and loyalty to the death for the defense of our existence and for our holiest rights

"Unshakeable brave and as hard as steel, we look forward closely united. We will and shall successfully and gloriously overcome all storms May God grant it"

In Idaho there exists a species of the acacia tree that attains a height of about eight feet When full grown it closes its leaves in coils each day at sunset. When the tree has thus settled itself for a night's sleep it will flutter violently if touched and if you shake the branches it will emit a nauseating odor strong enough to bring on a headache In Idaho it is called the "hungry tree."

GIRL TAKES THE GAS TEST AT DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 2.—Twelve-year-old Dorothy Hosford, daughter of Capt. William J. Hosford, of Fort Des Moines, has experienced all the thrills of trench warfare.

Dorothy has gone over the top of the practice trenches at the fort, shoulder to shoulder with her khaki clad admirers, in the midst of a wave of theoretically attacking soldiers.

Her most thrilling experience came recently when she put on a real gas mask and traveled through the deadly fumes in a gas chamber with a detachment of her "big brothers."

"I'm all ready to go to France now," she said after that last experience.

IOWA COAL HEATS AND CAUSES FIRES

Lake View, Ia., Sept. 2.—There have been a large number of fires in Sac county recently caused by the spontaneous combustion of Iowa coal which had been stored for the winter. Almost every town in the county has had one or more of these fires. The high school at Early had a car load of coal put in the basement. It caught fire and had to be shoveled out. The coal company at Lytton suffered a big loss when the coal in its sheds caught fire and several homes in Wall Lake, Lake View, Shaller and Sac City have had the same experience.

The fuel administration has been urging the people to buy their coal early to avoid a coal shortage next winter and so many bought their the people of Sac county can get its coal earlier than usual The only coal the Iowa coal.

IOWA SOLDIERS BACK FROM BATTLE FIELDS

Des Moines Ia., Sept. 2.—"You can tell the folks that the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth infantry is still there; and the Germans know it."

This is the inspiring message brought to the city yesterday by Sergeant Harry Widows, of Glenwood, Company I, One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Infantry, and Corporal Forest Kirkhart, of Waterloo, Company A, who are the first soldiers of the Iowa regiment to be sent back to the Fort Des Moines hospital

Both these men, who left France August 14, insist that they are not heroes, that all credit should be given to the soldiers who return later

KANSAS CITY TO FORT DES MOINES THROUGH AIR

Des Moines, Ia., Sept 2 -Whizzing through the air faster than a bird can fly, effecting a neat landing which seemed to the startled onlookers would clip off a corner of one of the fort houses, government aviators flying government battle planes made the trip of 270 miles from Kansas City to Fort Des Moines yesterday in one hour and 50 minutes.

The first two Liberty motors, one of them containing Lieut. Col. C R. Rhinehardt, commander of the squadron, arrived shortly after 10 o'clock, having left Kansas City at 8 20

The record breaking trip was a distinct triumph for the Liberty motor. The machines are an exact counterpart of those now being used on the western front No extra arrangements were made for the long trip save the addition of more gas tanks.

AMERICAN AIRMEN MAKE THREE RAIDS

Conflans Bombed Twice and Longuyon Shelled—Hun Birdman Driven Down.

By Associated Press.

With the American Army on the Lorraine Front, Aug 31 - American bombing machines this morning successfully attacked railway yards and buildings at Conflans Several direct bursts were observed and enemy pursuit plans followed the invading Americans back to their lines but did not attack them.

At noon American airmen dropped bombs on the railway yards at Longuyon, scoring several direct hits Late in the afternoon Conflans was again raided but poor visibility made it difficult to ascertain whether the bombing was effective Enemy anti-aircraft guns were active against the American raiders in all three of the day excursions All of our machines returned

One lone American aviator today attacked a German who was diving at a French balloon Despite the fact that there were six German airmen above him the American forced the German machine into a nose dive. The six other Germans then attacked the American and forced him to descend. He landed behind the American lines uninjured

With the British Armies in France, Sept. 4.—(night)—Thousands of German prisoners swarming down the roads like sheep and crowding each other into the ditches along the sides, this afternoon told the story of Hindenburg's effort to hold the famous line below the Scarpe against the driving attack of the British.

The Germans ruining before the first British assault, like raw recruits and reforming later only when masses of their own men came up in support; Germans screaming with fear as the British reached their first lines; Germans leaping out of their dugouts and throwing up their hands in surrender with the first appearance of the Canadians, were scenes witnessed early in the British attack.

Along the road paralleling the Scarpe, a party of correspondents at noon met such masses of disheartened captives as have seldom been seen since the beginning of the great war. When questioned, the prisoners frankly voiced their belief that Germany is beaten.

"The war is over" said "You mean that we win asked.

Reno, Nev., Sept. 4.—Contest for the breaking of the famous Drocourt-Queant switch line after a series of important allied advances with great captures of men and material has made an immense impression here. The expectation is general that the enemy will make the most desperate efforts to recover the position since the blow is regarded as one of the worst disasters inflicted upon the Germans during the whole war.

The belief is general that the switch line is the main system of German defense and that there is nothing equal-ly strong behind it. Paris, Sept. 3.—The German retreat continues both in Flanders and between Arras and Soissons.

SAFE FARMING

Dry Vegetables at Home

Article No. 3—Method Employed Varies Slightly With Different Products

By P. G. HOLDEN

VEGETABLES like corn beans peas cabbage, potatoes, carrots, and parsnips, should be blanched before drying.

They are blanched by being placed in a wire basket a flour sack or in a piece of cheesecloth or towel the ends of which have been twisted together to form a sack, and then placed in boiling water for about eight minutes. They must then be removed and chilled by plunging them at once into cold water for one minute.

Above: Placing Peas in Boiling Water to Blanch. Below: Dipping Blanched Peas in Cold Water.

Sweet corn should be blanched on the cob, then the kernels cut off and spread to the depth of about one-quarter of an inch upon the bottom of the drying frame.

Carrots, parsnips, and potatoes should be scraped and sliced before blanching, then carefully drained of moisture and placed in the drying frames. Only very tender carrots should be dried.

Squash and Pumpkins Cut into inch slices peel off rind chop into pieces ¼ inch thick Spread in rack and dry

Beans—Never dry tough beans or beans with very much string on the pod Break off tip ends, blanch, and dry whole, pods and all. If some pods are tough, do not throw them away Hull them and dry the beans

Peas—Hull before blanching. Spread on rack to dry In drying peas you will have some little peas and some big ones The little ones will shrivel up the big ones won't Sort the peas. Put the big ones in one tray and the little ones in another tray. Five quarts of peas in the pod will be sufficient when they are hulled, to fill a frame.

Cabbage should be cut in the same manner as for making kraut before being blanched Do not cut off the outside leaves unless they have commenced to rot.

The process to be observed in drying other vegetables and fruits follows:

Beets—Do not blanch, as blanching causes them to bleed and they loose some of their nutritive value. They should be peeled, washed, sliced, and laid in the frame to dry.

Rhubarb—Do not blanch Wash, drain, slice in small pieces and dry. Rhubarb does not need to be peeled if it is tender In vegetables, apples, and peaches, the mineral salt and most of the nutrition are next to the peeling, and if we peel them we destroy some of these qualities

Greens—Do not blanch Wash drain off moisture and dry whole The only exception to this is that Swiss chard or any other greens having a thick stem, should be cut up into half inch pieces

Asparagus—Cut off all that portion that would be tough when cooked. Cut the remainder into ½ or ¾ inch lengths and dry without blanching

Cucumbers—Peel, slice thin, spread out to dry without blanching

Tomatoes—Select firm and ripe not watery fruit Wash, slice, lay in rack and dry

INTERVENTION TALK IS HALTING BUSINESS

People of Japan Cautious With Investments While Russian Situation Threatens

Tokio, (by mail) Apparent tendency by Japanese business men to oppose intervention in Siberia has been reflected in business generally here The stock market has been oppressed with the idea of Siberian mobilization Trading has fallen off and many shares have weakened At times when it appeared that Japan had at least temporarily tabled the intervention question the market has rallied becoming active with short covering but the general investment public has remained strictly cautious, showing disposition to sell at advancing prices

Late in June the foreign trade fell off. The United States' extension of its lists of restricted imports virtually stopped Japan's growing shipment of skins and leathers The American trade ban was enlarged so as to stop also Manila's export of hemp to Japan If this is rightly enforced Japan's braid industry will be reduced to an insignificant position and Great Britain's removal of its ban on hemp braids would come to naught

Trade with Asiatic Russia was made possible by the reopening of the Siberian border, and matchstick importers have already reported their intention of buying afresh there, while all men had a brighter prospect for their buying of soya beans.

The China trade has remained slack Then Japanese cotton spinners association, for instance, reported that during 15 days Japan shipped 1,809 bales less of yarns to China and other Oriental points. Trade with British India also has been slack

The tonnage question and America's new railway rates also have caused anxiety in the business world Oil men, grain people, and others say that the high freight costs and the difficulty in obtaining cargo space have interferred seriously with their business, these factors combining adversely with kindred trade restrictions adopted by England, America and other countries. In these circumstances France's purchase of muslin and Manchurian flour, Latin America's increasing business and other circumstances furnished merely and consolation to the business community.

Notwithstanding governmental efforts to check the soaring cost of living conditions have hardly improved. Not only the fertilizer trade but the flour market have been prey to speculators' manipulation, which lately has become greatly magnified with the concentration of capital in big firms Rice, miscellaneous grains flour and foodstuffs generally have with few exceptions been higher Textiles and even cotton goods have resumed their advance in spite of the export trade remaining slack Metals, particularly iron pigs and steel shares, have mounted Among miscellaneous articles coal charcoal, papers, petroleum, and other articles affected notable advances Even gas rates were raised in Osaka and Tokio, thus increasing the burden of the masses of the people

HOW THE GROUSE DRUMS.

We had scarcely finished breakfast when we heard the Boom—Boom-BOOM of a drummer within a stone's throw of camp says Mr Frederick K Vreeland in his story on grouse published by Edward S Bleglow in Boys Life We peered carefully through the bushes and there, not 30 feet behind my tent stood the old fellow on a beautiful mossgrown log, his neck stretched his ruff spread, his tail flattened against the log and his wings beating their rhythmical tattoo

The day was raw and chilly and our friend apparently was not feeling very brisk and vigorous He spent most of his time in the chrysanthemum state with just his beak and a few erect feathers protruding from the fluffy ball After a while a headlike eye would appear and sleepily regard the camera Then suddenly the bird turned his head and looked alarmed while my heart sank within me fearing that he would take flight He stretched his neck and began to bristle his feathers then I felt certain he was about to walk off and leave me to my chagrin But no this was all a part of the ceremony as I learned later a sort of opening number In a moment the show began The old bird stretched himself to his full height head erect, crest upstanding ruff spread, his tail pressed flat against the log and his breast feathers fluffed until they almost covered his feet, his wings partly unfolded and drooped until they trailed the log A slight elevation of the wings and then they were thrown sharply backward striking together behind the bird's back with a deep, soft 'Boom' returning almost instantly to the starting position, but with the feathers somewhat spread In a couple of seconds another preliminary beat left the wings still more extended and the primaries farther separated

The next beat came more quickly, and then beat followed beat, faster and still faster, as the bird stretched himself almost on tiptoe in his ecstasy and the wings became an indistinguishable blur, while the deep tattoo resounded through the forest. The whirring ceased, the performance was over and the bird subsided placidly into his ball of feathers and roosted, indifferent to all the world about him, until the impulse seized him for a new demonstration.

MORE EVIDENCE OF REVOLT IN AUSTRIA

Congress of Oppressed at Prague Voices Desire of People For Democracy.

Berne (by mail)—The words "Long Live Wilson" and "Long Live the Entente were written on the walls of the meeting place of the congress of oppressed nations which recently met at Prague Although the police hastened to remove them, they reappeared as if by magic.

The extent to which the revolutionary ferment has increased in Austria-Hungary is shown by the text of the resolutions adopted by the congress, copies of which have been received here It is in the form of a proclamation and is said to be the first joint revolutionary proclamation ever issued in the dual monarchy. It says in part

The assembled representatives unanimously declare that a better future for this nation is to be founded and durably assured on the firm basis of world democracy, real and sovereign government by the people and a universal alliance of nations vested with the authority of arbitration.

They reject most emphatically all treaties not sanctioned by the sovereign will of nations. They are convinced that all peace for which they and all democracies of the world are longing can be righteous and durable only if the world puts an end to the existing unbearable domination of one nation over the other, and if the world makes it possible for nations to organize their relations to each other on the basis of equal rights and free conventions, in order that they may defend themselves against the evils of imperialism.

They are resolved to sacrifice everything, convinced that these are the nation's critical days, that they are aiding civilization in the effort to free humanity once and for all from the everlasting international violence and murder—as shown by the experience of this unprecedented war—and are helping toward the new era of dependence on international law, the fraternity of nations, equal rights and human liberty."

The gathering was one of the most notable in the history of Prague, comprising large delegations from all the oppressed elements within Austria-Hungary. The Slovaks of Hungary sent a party of 22 with the great Slovak poet, Eviezdeslav. The Polish delegation numbered 60, three from Silesia, one from Prussian Poland and the rest from Galicia, including ex-Minister Glombinski and five deputies. The Croats and Serbs numbered 100 with nine deputies Among the 360 Jugo-Slavs were 60 Slovenes, seven Carinthians, 60 Styrians and 100 Carniolans with four deputies.

The Italian delegation of 17 included Deputy Conci irredentist deputy in the Austrian parliament. There were besides Rumanians from Transylvania and the Bukovina, four Dalmatians and three Bosnians. Among the notable figures were Tetmajer, dean of the socialists of Poland; Rybar, ex-mayor of Laibach, and Krsta, chief of the democratic party. It was a strange medley of racial fractions, and only such a gathering as could be found among the oppressed elements crowded within Austria-Hungary.

Practically nothing concerning the gathering was allowed to appear in the press, and the papers appeared with great white columns disclosing how the censors had suppressed all reference to the meeting. They announced, however, that 35 arrests had been made; also that the crowds had succeeded in breaking the police cordons thrown around the gathering, and the measures finally adopted to disperse the meeting. A continuous struggle was carried on between the population and the police. Unknown hands decorated the linden trees with emblems of May fraternity.

CRIPPLES ARE GIVEN SPECIAL INSTRUCTION

Paris (by mail)—The awkward squad familiar at the beginning of all citizen armies, has now been supplanted by the "lame" battalion, designed to reestablish the men who have gone through the fire and to fit them for future service

So successful has the idea of a "lame" battalion been that from 70 to 80 per cent of the soldiers receiving wounds in the legs or suffering from the usual foot and leg maladies of trench warfare have been restored to full combat strength

The new course involves instruction of the wounded and weakened soldier in the proper posture of the body and its use in walking, running and riding. Special drills have been devised to overcome the habits into which the invalided soldier has fallen Instruction is given in the care of the feet while special attention has been given to the foot and leg cases in the hospitals.

Men with specially troublesome feet, weak backs, general bad posture or lack of endurance are sent to the special training battalion where the fully erect, alert position of the body is emphasized. Four companies have been established in the battalion, with programs increasingly difficult so that the schedule of the fourth company is only slightly below that required for full combat fitness.

United States army medical officers report that "experience has shown that from one-third to one-half of the ordinary deformities resulting from gunshot wounds are preventable. Surgeons must free themselves from their tendency to treat the wounds and forget the function; to make a well man but not a working one."

STRANGE EPIDEMIC HITS AMERICANS, TOO

An Irish Port, (by mail).—The theory that the strange epidemic of a peculiar type of influenza which swept Europe, attacked only those who were "run down" because of lack of proper food, was exploded when the disease threatened to take hold among officers and men at this American destroyer base. Aside from American soldiers, the American sailors are probably the best fed persons in Europe but the disease attacked several score of them here and for a week or so disrupted crew assignments. It has virtually disappeared now

The disease is not dangerous if taken in hand quickly enough and it has left no ill effects at the destroyer base. It has the peculiarity, however, of weakening the victim in a few days as much as the average illness will in twice the time, consequently it requires several days of recuperation

Victims suffer differently when the disease first begins. Some suddenly become dizzy and even faint. The most prevalent symptoms, however, are first a cough, then terrific pains in the back followed by fever and a chill now and then. Physicians say it is dangerous to attempt to continue one's usual activities as pneumonia may develop and prescribe bed for four to seven days with ordinary remedies for combatting fever.

PRISON FOR PEARL FIXER.

From the Continental Edition of the London Mail.

The "fake pearl" case, which attracted a great amount of attention in Paris about a year before the war, had its denouement the other day when a Hindu named Warna was tried for fraud He is alleged to have discovered a chemical composition whereby ordinary white pearls can be given the pinkish tinge peculiar to eastern pearls, which are much more valuable.

A pearl, for which a dealer named Altschueler (now dead) gave $12,000, was handed over to Warna for treatment, and was subsequently offered for sale, the price asked being $52,000. It was submitted to experts, who, it was stated, discovered that its color was not natural. Warna's alleged explanation was that he had put a coating of collodion over the pearl to preserve its surface while he was removing spots from it and adding luster to it, and that he had not finished his work.

The prosecution was instituted on the ground that the process did not really alter the pearl, but merely gave it a temporary color which disappeared of itself in course of time, and could be removed by steeping the pearl in proof spirit, and that in reality it remained an ordinary white pearl and ought not to be sold as one of the pink variety.

Warna was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and a fine of £1,000, and Barboza, a dealer who went shares with Altschueler, was sent to prison for three months and ordered to pay a fine of £100.

BIG JOBS ARE DONE WELL BY RED CROSS

Manufacture of Surgical Dressing and Other Hospital Supplies One of First Tasks.

London, (by mail)—One of the earliest forms of war activity undertaken by the American Red Cross in Great Britain was the manufacture of surgical dressings and other hospital requirements From modest beginnings this work has increased until it now employs more than 2,000 workers in 30 branches throughout Great Britain. The monthly output of these work shops averages 300,000 separate articles per month, and the output has recently risen to nearly twice that total

The center of this activity is in a large building at 26 Grosvenor Gardens, adjoining the administration offices of the American Red Cross. Fifteen rooms in the building are devoted to various branches of this work, which is in charge of Mrs H. S Waite as chairman All the rooms occupied in the manufacture of surgical dressings are large, light and airy and the most modern appliances are at the disposal of the workers At this central station 350 workers are employed of whom 250 are volunteers while 100 are paid a moderate allowance The paid workers are all women who have suffered financially owing to the war and to whom the small payments given them by the Red Cross are a great boon

The out work branches in various parts of England are mostly under British administration, but the American Red Cross furnishes all the materials and patterns, which are sent out in large hampers. Fifty hampers are in constant circulation for this purpose The supplies, when gathered into the central warehouse, are sent out through a regular system of distribution to six principal hospitals in Great Britain, and to a great number of hospitals on the British, French and American fronts in France.

A few weeks ago the central work rooms received an urgent appeal from the American army for 200,000 first aid packages to be supplied to American soldiers Each of these packages was to contain 12 articles, the whole order thus involving the manufacture of 2,400,000 separate dressings, together with an enormous amount of labor in connection with the careful packing and shipment of the packages. This work moreover was to be carried on without interfering with the regular duties of the work rooms in supplying their usual hospital supplies It was a big order, but the executive committee telegraphed its answer immediately: "We will deliver first aid packages as requested at rate of 15,000 per week, beginning immediately" From the first week, this rate has been exceeded, and the entire order has now been filled and is in the hands of the American army authorities.

Some time ago, the work rooms made arrangements with Mme. Carton de Wiart of the Belgian relief committee for a large number of hospital garments to be made by Belgian women refugees in Great Britain. These garments are made in their homes in various parts of Great Britain, the cut-out garments being sent in hampers to Madame de Wiart and returned finished to the work rooms. Payment for the work is made to Madame de Wiart in bulk and distributed by her to the individual workers.

"TENT HOSPITALS" ARE NUMEROUS IN ENGLAND

London, (by mail.)—A new problem the American Red Cross in Great Britain recently by the large number of small camps of American soldiers, particularly aviators, which have been opened in various parts of the British Isles. These camps are too small to require the installation of a largee hospital, but there are frequent cases of illness or accident, and the camps are generally located at points far distant from the regular military hospitals.

The problem has been met by the establishment, in each camp, of a small "tent hospital," where American soldiers suffering from minor ailments can be cared for satisfactorily More than 50 of these tent hospitals have been set up in various small American camps during the past few weeks, each accommodating from four to 10 patients. The soldiers welcome this arrangement enthusiastically, for the soldier when ill, likes to be near his friends and the men of his unit, and dislikes being transferred to a distant hospital in strange surroundings. During the recent prevalence of influenza in the camps, these tent hospitals proved a great boon.

A letter from an officer in an American camp in central England says

"Another reminder of the careful thoughtfulness of the American Red Cross came to us this morning, and while you know how I have appreciated your help and wholehearted thoughtfulness in getting our hospital equipped, I want to tell you so in this way. I shall not try to enumerate the things you have given us. It is sufficient to say that thanks chiefly to the American Red Cross, more than 300 American soldiers here can now have as good care and be as comfortable when sick as they could at home. We are especially appreciative of this because we previously had for a hospital only a small hut with plank beds, straw mattresses and no pillows.

"The magazines, newspapers and phonograph are greatly appreciated by our convalescents, and it would please you to see our 'sun room' this afternoon. The men are sitting in comfortable easy chairs, reading, smoking and gaining rapidly. The milk and eggs which you furnished are a big factor in rapid convalescence. One patient owes his life to the vaccine which you sent us last week and which we were unable to obtain from any other source.

"We had almost given up hope of getting what we considered necessary for the proper treatment of our sick soldiers; so you know something of how the present situation pleases me. The American Red Cross has a larger place in the forces helping to win the war than many of us realized before."

Revival of the wooden shipbuilding industry has brought into the limelight a number of labor saving appliances among which is a grooving and planing machine, capable, it is claimed, of doing as much work as 15 or 20 men equipped with manual tools. The device, says the Popular Mechanics Magazine, weighs about 60 pounds and may be driven either by compressed air or electricity.

WAR HAS TAUGHT VALUE OF THRIFT

People Have Learned How Senseless and Unnecessary Common Practices Are.

RETURN TO SIMPLE LIFE

Those Not Willing to Deprive Themselves of Some Comforts Ungrateful for What Boys "Over There" Are Doing for Us.

By JAMES W. GERARD,
Former Ambassador to Germany.

In the days before the war it often seemed to me that the immigrant who came here with practically nothing and who left an education and often a competence to his children lived as all men should live. He worked hard and well and saved his money. Then as his circumstances permitted he placed his family in comfortable surroundings. Often he got hold of a little piece of ground and raised a part of his food supply. Such men as these told me often that American life presented very few difficulties to a man who wanted to become wealthy through his own efforts.

Of course these people did not have the things that many of their neighbors thought vitally necessary. There was no show, no ostentation, nothing merely to impress their associates and neighbors. And after all man is a simple being. His wants are few, once he gets out of an artificial point of view.

Return to Simple Living.

Since the war has come with its necessity of curtailed expenditure many persons and families are approaching the state of simple living. They are being vastly benefited. A mental and spiritual betterment comes with simple living and thinking. There is also a great gain in resource. No man need ever fear that he will become miserly through the practice of thrift. Thrift simply means using the right things for the right purpose and putting aside the surplus.

If the war has done nothing else it has at least taught to many persons the value of thrift. The human mind is prone to attach labels to things. Because a thing is done it is done more and more. Once the individual gives thought to life and living he sees how senseless and unnecessary are some of the practices to which he thought he was committed for the rest of his life. Too many people in America are living beyond their means in order to vie with some richer neighbor. Why risk your children's future and education through a silly imitation induced by false pride?

To do anything well is a fine training for any man or woman. The practice of thrift is only the utilizing in the most scientific and exact ways of an individual's resources. It is character building and makes of man almost the master of his destiny.

Prove Superiority to Hun.

The situation of the world at the present time says to civilized man: Prove that you are fitted to survive the Hun; prove that you are superior to the Hun; prove that you are worthy of being preserved. For a wasteful use of materials at the present time is a crime against civilization. The war cannot be won unless the nation and the individual practice the most exact thrift. If we as a race cannot do this we are not fit to be the dominant factors in the world. We can and we will. The Hun and the state of affairs brought about by him are a challenge to our civilization. We accept the challenge and we will win the victory.

We could not do less. Our own countrymen and our brothers in arms are living in the midst of the greatest danger abroad. They are subsisting only on the vitally necessary foods and their general situation is lacking in comforts. We will deprive ourselves of some of our own abundant comfort that they may have the necessities of life. We must not prove ungrateful for what they are doing for us. We do not wish to live in an enervating comfort while they are suffering and giving their lives that we may survive.

There is for those who are rich or semirich or who merely have money and extravagant tastes another and a practical side.

Money Must Be Had.

We must have the money to carry on the war. If money does not come to the government from the country's present stock of money, then it must be created, for the war cannot stop.

Additional money means inflation and that means a fall in the worth, in the purchasing power of the dollar.

So that every one who has an income, a salary or invested capital of any kind, bonds, mortgages or other obligations of state or city or railway, should be vitally interested in practicing thrift, and thereby maintaining the value of the purchasing power of his own property.

But greatest argument of all—the spending of money now unnecessarily is shameless, even criminal.

Are we to feast while our sons and brothers die over there and by our very feasting put their success in jeopardy?

No ruler ever led people as efficiently to war as does our great president. Back him up.

What The Packers Do For You

Not very many years ago in the history of the world, the man that lived in America had to hunt for his food, or go without.

Now he sits down at a table and decides what he wants to eat; or his wife calls up the market and has it sent home for him. And what he gets is incomparably better.

Everyone of us has some part in the vast human machine, called society, that makes all this convenience possible.

The packer's part is to prepare meat and get it to every part of the country sweet and fresh—to obtain it from the stock raiser, to dress it, cool it, ship it many miles in special refriggerator cars, keep it cool at distributing points, and get it into the consumer's hands — your hands — through retailers, all within about two weeks.

For this service—so perfect and effective that you are scarcely aware that anything is being done for you—you pay the packers an average profit of only a fraction of a cent a pound above actual cost on every pound of meat you eat.

Swift & Company, U. S. A.

Consumer—My goodness! Coal up again. What's the cause this time, another combine?

Dealer—Oh, no, sir, no combine, I assure you.

"No strike?"

"None that I've heard of."

"Excessive demand, perhaps?"

"No, nothing extra."

"Failure of supply, possibly?"

"Haven't heard of any."

"Humph, if coal has gone up again, there must be some cause. What keeps prices rising now?"

"I really don't know sir. Guess it must be habit, that's all."

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

CHAPTER FIFTEEN. (Continued.)

"You know it as well as I do. Confess! It's possible that, during the last ten days, you've brought yourself, for love of that woman, to look upon her as innocent in spite of the overwhelming proofs against her. But today the truth hits you in the eye. I feel it, I'm sure of it. Isn't it so, Chief? I'm right, am I not? You see it for yourself?"

This time Don Luis did not protest. With a drawn face and set eyes he watched the motor bus, which at that moment was standing still at the corner of the Boulevard Haussmann.

"Stop!" he shouted to the driver.

The girl alighted. It was easy to recognize Florence Levasseur under her nurse's uniform. She cast round her eyes as if to make sure that she was not being followed, and then took a cab and drove down the boulevard and the Rue de la Pepiniere, to the Gare Saint-Lagare.

Don Luis saw her from a distance climbing the steps that run up from the Cour de Rome; and, on following her, caught sight of her again at the ticket office at the end of the waiting hall.

"Quick, Mazeroux!" he said. "Get out your detective card and ask the clerk what ticket she's taken. Run, before another passenger comes."

Mazeroux hurried and questioned the ticket clerk and returned.

"Second class for Rouen."

"Take one for yourself."

Mazeroux did so. They found that there was an express due to start in a minute. When they reached the platform Florence was stepping into a compartment in the middle of the train.

The engine whistled.

"Get in," said Don Luis, hiding himself as best he could. "Telegraph to me from Rouen; and I'll join you this evening. Above all, keep your eyes on her. Don't let her slip between your fingers. She's very clever, you know."

"But why don't you come yourself, Chief? It would be much better——"

"Out of the question. The train doesn't stop before Rouen; and I couldn't be back till this evening. The meeting at the Perfect's at five o'clock."

"And you insist on going?"

"More than ever. There, jump in!"

He pushed him into one of the end carriages. The train started and soon disappeared in the tunnel.

Then Don Luis flung himself on a bench in a waiting room and remained there for two hours, pretending to read the newspapers. But his eyes wandered and his mind was haunted by the agonizing question that once more forced itself upon him: was Florence guilty or not?

It was five o'clock when Major Comte d'Astrignac, Maitre Lepertuis, and the secretary of the American Embassy were shown into M. Desmalion's office. At the same moment some one entered the messengers' room and handed in his card.

The messenger on duty glanced at the pasteboard, turned his head quickly toward a group of men talking in a corner, and then asked the newcomer:

"Have you an appointment, sir?"

"It's not necessary. Just say that I'm here: Don Luis Perenna."

A kind of electric shock ran through the little group in the corner; and one of the persons forming it came forward. It was Weber, the deputy chief detective.

The two men looked each other in the eyes. Don Luis smiled amiably. Weber was livid, he shook in every limb and was plainly striving to contain himself.

Near him stood a couple of journalists and four detectives.

"By Jove! the beggars are here for me!" thought Don Luis. "But their confusion shows that they did not believe that I should have the cheek to come. Are they going to arrest me?"

Weber did not move, but in the end his face expressed a certain satisfaction as though he were saying:

"I've got you this time, my fine fellow, and you shan't escape me."

The office messenger returned and, without a word, led the way for Don Luis. Perenna passed in front of Weber with the politest of bows, bestowed a friendly little nod on the detectives, and entered.

The Comte d'Astrignac hurried up to him at once, with hands outstretched, thus showing that all the tittle-tattle in no way affected the esteem in which he continued to hold Private Perenna of the Foreign Legion. But the Perfect of Police maintained an attitude of reserve which was very significant. He went on turning over the papers which he was examining and conversed in a low voice with the solicitor and the American Secretary of Embassy.

Don Luis thought to himself:

"My dear Lupin, there's some one going to leave this room with the bracelets on his wrists. If it's not the real culprit, it'll be you, my poor old chap."

And he remembered the early part of the case, when he was in the workroom at Fauville's house before the magistrates, and had either to deliver the criminal to justice or to incur the penalty of immediate arrest. In the same way, from the start to the finish of the struggle, he had been obliged, while fighting the invisible enemy, to expose himself to the attacks of the law with no means of defending himself except by indispensable victories.

Harassed by constant onslaughts, never out of danger, he had successively hurried to their deaths Marie Fauville and Gaston Sauverand, two innocent people sacrificed to the cruel laws of war. Was he at last about to fight the real enemy, or would he himself succumb at the decisive moment?

He rubbed his hands with such a cheerful gesture that M. Desmalions could not help looking at him. Don Luis wore the radiant air of a man who is experiencing a pure joy and who is preparing to taste others even greater.

The Perfect of Police remained silent for a moment, as though asking himself what that devil of a fellow could be so pleased with; then, he fumbled through his papers once more and, in the end, said:

"We have met again, gentlemen, as we did two months ago, to come to a definite conclusion about the Mornington inheritance. Senor Caceres, the attache of the Peruvian legation, will not be here. I have received a telegram from Italy to tell me that Senor Caceres is seriously ill. However, his presence was not indispensable. There is no one lacking, therefore—except those, alas, whose claims this meeting would gladly have sanctioned, that is to say, Cosmo Mornington's heirs."

"There is one other person absent, Monsieur le Prefet."

M. Desmalions looked up. The speaker was Don Luis. The Prefect hesitated and then decided to ask him to explain.

"Whom do you mean? What person?"

"The murderer of the Mornington heirs."

This time again Don Luis compelled attention and, in spite of the resistance which he encountered, obliged the others to take notice of his presence and to yield to his ascendancy. Whatever happened, they had to listen to him. Whatever happened, they had to discuss with him things which seemed incredible, but which were possible because he put them into words.

"Monsieur le Prefet," he asked, "will you allow me to set forth the facts of the matter as it now stands? They will form a natural sequel and conclusion of the interview which we had after the explosion on the Boulevard Suchet."

M. Desmalion's silence gave Don Luis leave to speak. He at once continued:

"It will not take long, Monsieur le Prefet. It will not take long for two reasons: first, because M. Fauville's confessions remain at our disposal, and we know definitely the monstrous part which he played; and, secondly, because, after all, the truth, however complicated it may seem, is really very simple.

"It all lies in the objection which you, Monsieur le Prefet, made to me on leaving the wrecked house on the Boulevard Suchet: 'How is it,' you asked, 'that the Mornington inheritance is not mentioned in Hippolyte Fauville's confession?' It all lies in that, Monsieur le Prefet. Hippolyte Fauville did not say a word about the inheritance; and the reason evidently is that he did not know of it.

"And the reason why Gaston Sauverand was able to tell me his whole sensational story without making the least allusion to the inheritance was that the inheritance played no sort of part in Gaston Sauverand's story. He, too, knew nothing of it before those events, any more than Marie Fauville did, or Florence Levasseur. There is no denying the fact: Hippolyte Fauville was guided by revenge and by revenge alone. If not, why should he have acted as he did, seeing that Cosmo Mornington's millions reverted to him by the fullest of rights? Besides, if he had wished to enjoy those millions, he would not have begun by killing himself.

"One thing, therefore, is certain: the inheritance in no way affected Hippolyte Fauville's resolves or actions. And, nevertheless, one after the other, with inflexible regularity, as if they had been struck down in the very order called for by the terms of the Mornington inheritance, they all disappeared: Cosmo Mornington, then Hippolyte Fauville, then Edmond Fauville, then Marie Fauville, then Gaston Sauverand. First, the possessor of the fortune; next, all those whom he had appointed his legatees; and, I repeat, in the very order in which the will enabled them to lay claim to the fortune!

"Is it not strange?" asked Perenna, "and are we not bound to suppose that there was a controlling mind at the back of it all? Are we not bound to admit that the formidable contest was influenced by that inheritance, and that, above the hatred and jealousy of the loathsome Fauville, there loomed a being, endowed with even more tremendous energy, pursuing a tangible aim and driving to their deaths, one by one, like so many numbered victims, all the unconscious actors in the tragedy of which he tied and of which he is now untying the threads?"

Don Luis leaned forward and continued earnestly:

"Monsieur le Prefet, the public instinct so thoroughly agrees with me, a section of the police, with M. Weber, the deputy chief at its head, argues in a manner so exactly identical with my own that the existence of that being is at once confirmed in every mind. There had to be some one to act as the controlling brain, to provide the will and the energy. That some one was myself. After all, why not? Did not I possess the condition which was indispensable to make any one interested in the murders? Was I not Cosmo Mornington's heir?

"I will not defend myself. It may be that outside interference, it may be that circumstances, will oblige you, Monsieur le Prefet, to take unjustifiable measures against me; but I will not insult you by believing for one second that you can imagine the man whose acts you have been able to judge for the last two months capable of such crimes. And yet the public instinct is right in accusing me.

"Apart from Hippolyte Fauville, there is necessarily a criminal; and that criminal is necessarily Cosmo Mornington's heir. As I am not the man, another heir of Cosmo Mornington exists. It is he whom I accuse, Monsieur le Prefet.

"There is something more than a dead man's will in the wicked business that is being enacted before us. We thought for a time that there was only that; but there is something more. I have not been fighting a dead man all the time; more than once I have felt the very breath of life strike against my face. More than once I have felt the teeth of the tiger seeking to tear me.

"The dead man did much, but he did not do everything. And even then, was he alone in doing what he did? Was the being of whom I speak merely one who executed his orders? Or was he also the accomplice who helped him in his scheme? I do not know. But he certainly continued a work which he perhaps began by inspiring and which, in any case, he turned to his profit, resolutely completed and carried out to the very end. And he did so because he knew Cosmo Mornington's will. It is he whom I accuse, Monsieur le Prefet.

"I accuse him at the very least of that part of the crimes and felonies which cannot be attributed to Hippolyte Fauville. I accuse him of breaking open the drawer of the desk in which Maitre Lepertuis, Cosmo Mornington's solicitor, had put the client's will. I accuse him of plundering Cosmo Mornington's room and substituting a phial containing a toxic fluid for one of the phials of glycero-phosphate which Cosmo Mornington used for his hypodermic injections. I accuse him of playing the part of a doctor who came to certify Cosmo Mornington's death and of delivering a false certificate. I accuse him of supplying Hippolyte Fauville with the poison which killed successively Inspector Verot, Edmond Fauville, and Hippolyte Fauville himself. I accuse him of arming and turning against me the hand of Gaston Sauverand, who, acting under his advice and instructions, tried three times to take my life and ended by causing the death of my chauffeur. I accuse him of profiting by the relations which Gaston Sauverand had established with the infirmary in order to communicate with Marie Fauville, and of arranging for Marie Fauville to receive the hypodermic syringe and the phial of poison with which the poor woman was able to carry out her plans of suicide."

Perenna paused to note the effect of these charges. Then he went on:

"I accuse him of conveying to Gaston Sauverand, by some unknown means, the newspaper cuttings about Marie Fauville's death and, at the same time, of seeing the inevitable results of the act. To sum up, therefore, without mentioning his share in other crimes—the death of Inspector Verot, the death of the chauffeur—I accuse him of having Cosmo Mornington, Edmond Fauville, Hippolyte Fauville, Marie Fauville, and Gaston Sauverand; in plain words, of killing all those who stood between the millions and himself. These, in words, Monsieur le Prefet, tell you clearly what I have in my mind.

"When a man does away with five of his fellow creatures in order to secure a certain number of millions, it means that he is convinced that this proceeding will positively and mathematically insure his entering into possession of the millions. In short, when a man does away with a millionaire and his four successive heirs, it means that he himself is the millionaire's fifth heir. The man will be here in a moment."

"What!"

It was a spontaneous exclamation on the part of the Prefect of Police, who was forgetting the whole of Don Luis Perenna's powerful and closely reasoned statement, and thinking only of the stupefying apparition which Don Luis announced. Don Luis replied:

"Monsieur le Prefet, his arrival is the logical outcome of my accusations. Remember that Cosmo Mornington's will explicitly states that no heir's claim will be valid unless he is present at the day's meeting."

"And suppose he does not come?" asked the Prefect, as though showing that Don Luis' contention had gradually got the better of his doubts.

"He will come, Monsieur le Prefet. If not, there would have been no sense in all this business. Limited to the crimes and other actions of Hippolyte Fauville, they could be looked upon as the monstrous work of a madman. But continued to the details of Marie Fauville and Gaston Sauverand's demands, as its inevitable outcome, the appearance of a person who, as the last descendant of the Roussels of Saint-Etienne, is consequently as Cosmo Mornington's absolute heir, taking possession of myself, will complete the claim the hundred millions which he has won by means of his incredible audacity."

"And suppose he does not come?" M. Desmalions once more exclaimed, in a more vehement tone.

Every Farm a Factory.

P. G. Holden, in I. H. C. Bulletin.

The opportunity of the town lies in the country. The country can get along without the town, but no town ever has or ever will be permanently prosperous where the land is poor. The town is built on farm profits; on what farmers produce in excess of their home needs. In fact, towns are consumers, not real producers. Towns are the natural evolution and outgrowth of necessity—places to store and distribute the world's surplus products through the channels of commerce. There is but one road to permanent city building—that road leads to the farm. Business is so sympathetic, so sensitive to crop production that the forecast of a poor wheat or corn crop affects the markets of the world. When the harvest fields smile, towns wax fat, and factories increase the pay roll. Corn, wheat, and hay, beef, pork and poultry—these are the soil builders, the home builders, the builders of great cities.

The old fashioned chamber of commerce, with its cash bonuses and free factory sites, is rapidly passing away. Instead of grabbing business from each other, we must realize that our opportunities lie hidden in the fertility of the soil. Towns and cities are beginning to look to the country, out to the fields of growing corn, wheat, and cotton for their real prosperity. A successful hay campaign will bring factories to the town. Hay means beef and pork which beckon the packing house and stock yards plant. More corn means cereal mills, glucose factories, starch factories. Flour mills locate in wheat producing sections. Creameries follow the dairy cow, and the truck patch calls for the canning factory.

Let us have more chambers of commerce and agriculture. Let us create wealth from the opportunities at home and not subtract it from other communities.

We must not forget that every farm is a factory, and that in every state there are thousands of these factories which need our best thought and effort to make them productive.

Views of German Exiles.

Frank Bohn, in the New York Times.

Being an incurable optimist I have been among those who, since the beginning of the war, have inclined to exaggerate the importance of the democratic forces in Germany. However my roseate expectations have recently suffered in Switzerland, a very severe setback. Every German democrat exile in Switzerland without one single exception, emphasized to me with the greatest clearness that only a decisive defeat of Germany's forces could begin the work of building up a German democracy. I have in mind four men in Switzerland with whom I have been on terms of the most intimate companionship. For evident reasons I shall designate them by letters of the alphabet.

A. has been for many years one of the most distinguished leaders in the industrial life in Germany. I had many interesting hours with him alone. We came to the matter of the internal life of Germany from every angle. His conversation may be briefly summarized as follows:

Place absolutely no hope in any party, or in any class, within Germany. There is no considerable group in Germany which understands democracy. All criticism of the government is based entirely on the fact that there is not enough food and clothing. But if the German government can provide her people with the necessities of life as she has in the past there is no reason why she should not make war for 50 years. The German people are growing accustomed to war losses. Losing the third or fourth son causes less suffering than losing the first. Any suggestion that the war is an evil is met by the answer, "Are we not better off than the others?" Are we not fighting upon enemy territory? Have we not won every battle?" Such is war. I am hopeless, utterly hopeless, about Germany. One complete defeat can give her a new beginning.

B. is a profound scholar and a jovial good fellow. He has just completed the writing of a stupendous history of philosophy. He tells me that it will give the world a totally new notion of what philosophy really is. This man possessed of wealth and having married into a junker family, has enjoyed life after the style of a healthy burger of Munich.

"Of course in Munich," I said to him, "you have at least some of the old South German love of life for its own sake."

"You're wrong," said he. "I was the only man in South Germany who loved life for its own sake. That's why I had to leave. There isn't a shred left of the old cultural life of Germany. Poetry is dead and real music is on its last legs. People think of absolutely nothing but getting rich individually and brow beating other peoples nationally."

C. is a socialist—also from South Germany. After telling the same story about present day Germany which the others had told, he set out to explain it.

"I am just now," he said, "writing a history of the German mind (Geschichte der Deutsche Intelligenz). The entire history of German intellectualism has been, from the very beginning a ridiculous perverted and utterly useless expression of life. The modern German is a liberal or a socialist in the same sense as he is Hegelian or Nietzschean or a Christian. That is he accepts a certain system of philosophical thought because it satisfies him and gives him an answer to the riddle of the universe. But he never dreams of applying any of these philosophical principles to actual life. German thinking is entirely theoretical."

D. is a distinguished journalist of Berlin. In this case I see no objection to mentioning the name. I refer to Doctor Rosemeier. Rosemeier and I have been friends for a long time, but one day he lost patience with me. We were having coffee in his little cottage out in the country. He was observing that if necessary, we should call in the Japanese, we should organize the black races. Some of his comparisons struck me as amusing and I laughed.

"Yes, yes, you may well laugh, you fellows who sit there in your America, 4,000 miles away from our Sabel Rattlers (saber rattling wretches) and enjoy yourselves. If you had had to endure what we have had during these years you would laugh out of the other side of your mouth."

I tried to turn the subject. "Can't you write something," I said, "that would really get hold of these people and bring them to their senses?"

"Write something! Write something! Nonsense! Haven't I been writing my fingers off for 30 years. What those fellows need is not ideas for their brains. They need bombs on their skulls."

"But we expect some help from within," I went on.

"Help can come only from one place," he said "from Bethlehem—Bethlehem Pa. But you do not realize it fully. They will cheat you yet those junkers. Having won half the world by bloody murder, they are going to win the other half with tears in their eyes, crying for mercy."

New Fields of Gold.

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

Kings are gathered again on a field of the cloth of gold. They are lords, not of thrones, but of farms. The field? It is the far reaching expanse of golden grain.

These kings are rulers of acre over which peace and quiet brood. No swords dangle by a thread above their heads. No dreams of fallen dynasties beset them in the night. They sleep the sleep of the just. They rise and greet the sun each day with consciences clear, with hearts unafraid, with the sense that there is no stain of blood upon their hands, no hideous wrong to answer for to their God.

In their retinues on the new field of the cloth of gold are honorable knights of toil—sheaf bearers and threshermen. Hard by are their ladies—maids and matrons—in waiting to attend on the knights betwixt the lively jousts of the harvest. What feasts they serve—every gathering at the board a banquet more toothsome, more wholesome, than the regal spreads that were laid for Henry of England and Francis of France on the plain of Guisnes and Ardres 400 years ago.

On this field are no silken hangings showing "like bullions of fine burnished gold;" no upholstery in golden tissue; no altars hung with cloth of gold embroidered with pearls, no censers and cruets and candlesticks fashioned chastely in precious metals, no fretted vestments from the looms of Florence, no crimson velvets hung with skeins of gold, no walls of man made damask, no jewel bedight mantles or cassocks, no bonnets of velvet in royal purple, gay with plumes and aglow with jewels.

Far lovelier is the setting of the new field than of the old. Its canopy is the far flung blue sky. Its gold is the gold of nature not inert, but rippling as the trout brook or rolling like the seas catching the splendor of the sun by day and the glory of the moon by night.

Since recorded history began—yea, long before as the secrets of ancient tombs disclose—wheat has been the grain of grains for human food. It is so today. Used and liked the world over, there is no other cereal to fill its place. Today it is more precious than gold as a factor in human destiny.

Nothing worth while came out of the meeting of kings on the field of the cloth of gold in France in 1520. Something tremendously worth while, something indispensable to the world's happiness, is coming out of the field of the cloth of gold in America in 1918.

Thrift As a Tonic.

From the New York Post.

A good many people have a wholly wrong idea of thrift. They look on it as something akin to stinginess, skimping, parsimony—a habit that narrows and makes little.

Nothing could be further astray. The closest verbal relative to thrift is thrive. Both words have precisely the same derivation, and thrift in its original significance meant prosperity. Today it means the straightest and most certain road to prosperity.

Ruskin explained at length that economy had as much to do with spending money as saving it—perhaps more. And thrift is rather the intelligent use of money than its withholding. The antithesis of thrift is not generosity, but waste.

The thrift habit is a stimulating habit. It acts as a tonic. It promotes industry; it strengthens courage; it quickens hope. The youngster whose pennies and dimes had meant merely gum and sodas until the thrift stamps came into his life, and began to grow into savings certificates, now has visions of bigger and more enduring things. He is laying foundations for future possessions.

The adult may well learn a lesson from the youngster. The thrift stamp habit is the simple process leads for those whose lack of appreciation for the value of accumulated littles has been the really restricting factor in their horizons.

The thrift stamp and savings certificate campaign that is now in progress should be encouraged by all who want to see the American people sturdy, self reliant, economically sound and prosperous. This method of saving and investment has the advantage of being continuous rather than spasmodic. Its educational value in supplementing the appeal of the Liberty loan is of great importance because of the multitude it reaches and the day-by-day influence it exercises upon character.

And these arguments are wholly aside from the impelling and immediate reason for enlisting as a thrifter—it is a way of helping to win the war.

A 74-Year-Old Officer.

From the Outlook.

It is said that probably the oldest officer of his rank on the active list in any army is First Lieut. Richard Peters, of Washington, D. C., who is 74 years old and is now with the American expeditionary force overseas. When the army first went to France he served for a time as an interpreter attached to General Pershing's headquarters. He was recently commissioned a first lieutenant and assigned to active duty.

"UNCLE SAM" IDEAL FIGURE

Old Gentleman Happy Blending of the Cardinal Virtues Typical of the American.

My father used to tell me that his great-uncle, Major Samuel Wilson, was quartermaster in Washington's army, and that when the supplies came in marked 'U. S.' the boys in the army used to say, 'More food for Uncle Sam!' When the war was over the army took this saying to every part of the land, and 'Uncle Sam' soon displaced 'Brother Jonathan' as the favorite nickname for our country.

"In picture and phrase, 'Uncle Sam' is still, for good or ill, our national figure. He incarnates the American character. What can you see in him?

"To me it means a happy blending of four cardinal virtues which are typical of the American—shrewdness and energy, kindness and humor. If Uncle Sam were only shrewd and energetic, he might be a very stingy old specimen, not at all to be admired. Sometimes our good friends across the water have only seen this side of him. If Uncle Sam were only kind and humorous, he might be a shiftless good-for-nothing. But, fortunately for us all, energy and shrewdness give him power without waste, while kindness and humor make him human and friendly."—H. N. Maccracken in St. Nicholas.

Get New Kidneys!

The kidneys are the most overworked organs of the human body, and when they fail in their work of filtering out and throwing off the poisons developed in the system, things begin to happen.

One of the first warnings is pain or stiffness in the lower part of the back; highly colored urine; loss of appetite; indigestion; irritation, or even stone in the bladder. These symptoms indicate a condition that may lead to that dreaded and fatal malady, Bright's disease, for which there is said to be no cure.

Do not delay a minute. At the first indication of trouble in the kidney, liver, bladder or urinary organs start taking Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules, and save yourself before it is too late. Instant treatment is necessary in kidney and bladder troubles. A delay is often fatal.

You can almost certainly find immediate relief in Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules. For more than 200 years this famous preparation has been an unfailing remedy for all kidney, bladder and urinary troubles.

It is the pure, original Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used. About two capsules each day will keep you toned up and feeling fine. Get it at any drug store, and if it does not give you almost immediate relief, your money will be refunded. Be sure you get the GOLD MEDAL brand. None other genuine. In boxes, three sizes.—Adv.

Interrupted Lesson.

An ancient French schoolhouse, deserted in the flight of the villagers, was taken over by the Americans as part of the headquarters of a field ambulance. The interrupted lesson could be read upon the bulletin board by the Yankee wounded, carried through, and a Dunlet among them could have woven a masterpiece from it. The moral that the teacher was inculcating when he held his "derniere class" was this:

"The free man obeys his conscience and the laws of his country."

And the phrase set before the pupils for their composition exercise that day—the date was written on the board, 29 Mai, 1915—was:

"Un jour de grand vent."

They might have written it: "The day of the big wind."—Stars and Stripes.

Proof that Some Women do Avoid Operations

Mrs. Etta Dorion, of Ogdensburg, Wis., says:

"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and side. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. STREET VENDERS

Monday and Tuesday nights there was a street vender in Klemme who sold out goods to the people from an auto truck. Now this gentleman had a fine line of "gab" and would dwell on the merits of his good for some time and then would proceed to cut prices and offer "real bargains" to the people and of course they would bite like fishes on the stuff The bargains looked big all right, but just use your head a little bit Now these fellows are not traveling through the country to give away stuff, they are out for the money and are making good profit. They do not sell standard brands of goods which are nationally advertised. They feed you a lot of gab on their goods and make you believe it is the only thing and make you believe you are getting a bargain and the unsuspecting buyers will fall head over heels to get to the wagon to grab the stuff. Now one of their fine bait is the scissors proposition They will sell you a fine pair of scissors and tell you they sell for $1 50, then they throw in another $1 pair and for good measure give you a whetstone to sharpen them with The whole thing goes for 50c All well and good, but listen, you can buy those scissors at a ten cent store for a dime each, the whetstone for a nickel total 25c Sure and you pay him 50c for the outfit and they are about as good as ten cent ones—which means they are worth about as much as you pay for them. Now use your head a little buy your goods of Klemme merchants they give you real value for your money. If you want something cheap they will sell it to you but the chances are they would have to order it as they don't aim to carry such cheap junk. And another thing these traveling peddlers are not helping to build up our town, they don't pay any taxes or spend their money here They come and are gone—for good They make a fine bunch of money and then go back to their home town to spend it Spend your money with the Klemme merchants, they are the ones who are helping to make Klemme a good place to live. Everything you want can be purchased right here at home. Get wise to these schemes, have you forgotten so soon about the "Crooked Sheaney"? Let's all pull for Klemme and buy our goods at home

BRING OUT YOUR WEAPON

By MELVILLE DAVISSON POST

That appalling damnation—intelligence without humanity—converting a whole people into a predatory monster has descended on the world.

No human institution, fine or noble, is any longer safe. Invasions from a gargantuan star or fabled beasts breaking up through the crust of the earth could not more awfully threaten us. Every energy of every civilized nation must be assembled for resistance.

An idle dollar is an idle weapon!

How shall we face enslaved men, mutilated children and forlorn women if in this hour of supreme peril we hold back idle in our house a weapon that would have helped to save the world?

HELP THE WORLD TO CLEAN HOUSE

By JAMES MONTGOMERY FLAGG.

Now comes the Fourth Liberty Privilege! The fourth opportunity to Americans to hit a goshalmity blow at the Huns! The scourge of the world—the fiendish and soulless and mighty machine of evil—that, although most of the nations of the earth are battling against, is still going strong!

It is so powerful that it will take the united strength of all the "white" peoples to crush it

The biggest and heaviest factor will be the United States of America. We are called by other nations a race of bluffers, blowhards, money grabbers—so we are! We bluffed at the beginning But though we bragged and have always left modesty to others, we are now making good our boasts—we are proving that when we said we could do certain things we were merely telling the truth We have threatened mighty things and now we are calmly doing those mighty things. We may not be as modest as 100,000,000 violets, but when we are hot under the neckband we can deliver "some" heavy punch!

We are money grabbers. But how lucky for our allies that fact is! If it had not been for our money, Germany would have been victorious some time ago.

We are gradually, steadily, relentlessly expanding our might.

The wealthy have not needed exhortation, argument, persuasion to invest in Liberty bonds—they quietly and immediately take all they can get—they know what's what in investments—that's why they are wealthy. Enough said.

The world is cleaning house. Its house is alive with crawling Teutonic vermin—vermin that if not destroyed will make the house uninhabitable and kill off its dwellers.

You are not asked to set the traps—use the clubs, spray the powder—but you are asked to pay for those traps, clubs and powder, so that others may wield these weapons for you, so that you and your family and your family's families, your loved ones may live in a decent house forever.

Your house is the United States, the vermin is Germany. We will not allow the vermin to overrun our house—as it will if not stamped out.

We are not pikers—no one can ever say that of us. We are not asleep!

Our soldiers, sailors and marines buy Liberty bonds by the millions, men who have offered their all to the great and holy cause! None of us have to be shamed by them into doing our least! When the window opens where they sell the Fourth Loan of Bonds be there in line Your bonds are reserved seats to the great spectacle of "Final Victory" The date of the performance to be announced later!

STUDIES GERMAN CUSS WORDS

Marine Fits Self to Be Able to Tell the Kaiser What He Thinks of Him.

Salt Lake City.—When the United States marines march into Berlin there is going to be one Salt Lake representative peculiarly fitted to tell one William Hohenzollern just what Zion thinks of him, for Covendish W Cannon of this city has enlisted in the Marine corps. For several months prior to his enlistment Cannon was studying German, but he insisted that his teacher school him in only one branch of the German language—profanity.

"I want to learn how to cuss fluently in German," said Cannon, when questioned concerning this peculiar studies, "so that I can tell Kaiser Bill and the rest of the gang just what I think of them. If I didn't know all the words in the German 'cuss dictionary,' how could I do it?"

Mrs C. W. Wiles,
Klemme, Iowa.

Dear Friend: I received the watch which the ladies of Klemme sent me, and am very much pleased with it. I can not thank them enough for their kindness. It sure makes one feel good to know that although they are away they are not forgotten. But in these times everyone should do his duty. I am studying to be a radio operator. Am located on the campus of the University of Washington. Sure are lots of sailors here, and it is a very nice country. If I were to name this country I would call it "the land of the roses," although we are in sight of perpetual snow Give my best regards to all. Thanking the Red Cross for their kindness, Iam,

HELP THE "RED CROSS"

What Two Little Klemme Girls Did For The Red Cross

Last Wednesday evening, two little seventh grade girls, Maybelle Johnson and Octave Church, conceived the idea of selling popcorn in order to help the Red Cross.

They confided their plan to the folks at home, who encouraged them to try it out.

Arthur Johnson donated the pop corn and Mrs. Church the butter. Maybelle said she would furnish the salt.

Miss Wernock after hearing their plan, excused them from school after recess on Thursday afternoon and they proceeded to pop corn and fill two market baskets which they sold so quickly that they had to turn in an S. O. S. to big sister who helped them out on the second lot.

They bought thirty-four paper sacks from Gruetzmacher's at seven cents and one hundred from Wellemeyer's for a like amount, making a total expense of fourteen cents and they have sacks enough left for another day's sale. They were occupied about one and one-half hours and turned in $2.76 to the treasurer.

RULES GOVERNING USE OF SURGICAL DRESSINGS ROOMS

The rom shuld be light and airy with a floor which can easily be washed. The tables should have tops of smooth wood, covered with oil cloth, in order that they may be cleaned daily. If the same room is used for garments, it is much better to have the workers work on alternate days, as the lint from the garments is apt to become mixed with the surgical dressings. All workers should wear a large white cover-all apron and cap. It is most essential that the hair be well covered. The hands should always be washed before handling gauze.

I am advised that these rules should be enforced in all surgical dressings departments

Very truly yours,
Katherine K. Read,
Supt. Surgical Dressings

Monday evening the 100 Per Cent Noise Makers again held their meeting. This time they serenaded Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Waterman who were married that evening at the C. F. Keraus home. A very enjoyable tin pan concert was given the Bride and Groom until they made their appearance. Refreshments were given the Noise Makers in appreciation of the concert. This makes the second meeting of the Tin Pan Concert Co., and they are now awaiting more dates. Who is next? Here's three cheers for Mr. and Mrs. Waterman and our best wishes go out to them.

128 REGISTER AT KLEMME LAST THURSDAY

Last Thursday was official registration day all over the United States and the Registration Board for Klemme reports there were 128 men who registered on that day for Military Service. The above number are those who registered from Ell township. Of the above number there will only be a small percentage who will be available for Class One as the greater number are married men with dependant. It may be very likely, however, that quite a number of Class Two men will be available from this registration. We have not been able to get the number who registered in the county. Questionnaires will be mailed out at an early date as it is expected a number from this registration will be called in the October draft.

Law Regulating Fashions.

In 1639 the general court of Massachusetts passed a law that "No garment shall be made with short sleeves; and such as have garments with short sleeves shall not wear them unless they cover the arm to the wrist. And hereafter no person whatever shall make any garment for women with sleeves more than half an ell wide (twenty-two and a half inches)" If laws regulating fashions were passed today, how many women would be fined for law-breaking?

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

The earliest use of deleterious gases in siege warfare is recorded in the history of the Peloponnesian wars from 431 to 404 B. C. During this struggle between the Athenians and Spartatus and their respective allies the cities of Palatea and Delium were besieged. Wood saturated with pitch and sulphur was set on fire and burned under the walls of those cities in order to generate choking and poisonous fumes, which would stupefy the defenders and make the task of attacking forces less difficult. Another form of the same method of attack used about this date was to fill a cauldron with molten pitch, sulphur and burning charcoal and to blow the fumes with the aid of a primitive form of bellows and airblast over the defenders lines. Greek fire, about which much was heard in the wars of the middle ages, was a liquid, the composition of which is now unknown, that was spurted through the air, chiefly in sea fights, in order to set fire to the ships of the enemy and it was used by the Byzantine Greeks at the sieges of Constantinople in the years 1261 and 1412.

To the uninitiated the treatment which a workman suffering from an electric shock receives at the hands of his coworkers is inhuman and brutal says Popular Science Monthly. When a lineman for instance stringing primary wires his received a shock which caused him to lose his balance and fall to the ground apparently lifeless the first thing his working mates do is to take firm hold of the ankles of the limp body raise it until the entire weight rests upon the back of the neck and then let it drop again. Next they will take a pair of connectors or any other heavy object and hammer the soles of the victim's feet without removing the shoes. While this is being done another comrade will pry open the mouth and yank forward the tongue, which is invariably swallowed in electric shock. By this time, unless the man was instantly killed, he has recovered consciousness the successive shocks of pain having in some way counterbalanced the effects of the electricity.

Prometheus, the organ of the German iron trade, makes an elaborate calculation as to the quality of steel which is now lying on the hillsides round Verdun. According to military reports it often happened that as many as 1,000,000 shots daily were fired from guns of various calibers. If however 1,000,000 shells are taken as the weekly instead of the daily average, we reach almost incredible totals. Taking the ground fought over as 260 square kilometers and the average weight of the shells as 90 pounds, no less than 1,350,000 tons of steel exploded on the area in question. This weight is sufficient to load 135,000 heavy goods wagons, and works out at 13 tons of steel per acre. Taking the price of scrap steel at $17.50 per ton, we have a crop of steel worth about $225 per acre, a crop which Prometheus thinks is well worth garnering.

The so-called Federation of Soviets is a superimposed class rule on a people in Russia who want to be democratic. It was put into power by a small group of fanatically extreme social democrats, the real, the conscious bolshevists, under the leadership of Lenine, and has never at any time expressed the will of the people. The soviets, beginning with the bigger cities spread over Russia in a very few weeks following the original revolution. They were socialists in character in the cities and in the army, where the socialists propaganda had been spread, but in the villages, where the great "masses" of the Russian people live, there was not much political education, and the soviet was simply the expression of popular will of all ginds. It was the town meeting.

In a recent storm at Torrington Point Peaks Island, Me., a large tree, of which measures almost a foot and a half in diameter, was split entirely in two for a space of about eight feet, the bottom for three feet or so up from the ground being as good as it ever was and the top also showing no signs of a break. At first it was thought the tree had been split by lightning but careful investigation disclosed no signs of a burn anywhere, and now the theory is that the rotary motion of the wind gave the tree a twisting motion that was too much for it.

Finger print identification, developed from a chance attempt to frighten dishonest East Indians, has become an important modern science. Every person in the world has his or her particular finger print which cannot be duplicated. These finger prints are now classified into two groups, four types, and eight patterns. Prints are taken by hospitals and naval authorities, for identification by large corporations, in order to avoid rehiring of discharged employes, by detectives, for criminal records.

When the British housewife buy sugar she hands Mr. Groceryman an orange color page. If she buys lard margarine butter or other fats, she offers a blue page. And there are four red pages in the new ration book, for meat and bacon. Boys and girls under 6 years old have their own ration book. Its color is green while the 7-year-olds carry a white ration book and get as much to eat as grownup folk.

The Japanese industry of making buttons, scarf pins shirt studs, cuff links and the like from sea shells brought from the Indian ocean, the Phillippines and the South Sea Islands has made mighty strides the last few years. Millions of shells are gathered from the ocean bottom by women divers, who work without the aid of any diving apparatus.

St. Louis has catacombs, like those of Paris. The mining of clay for brick and other products has left many chambers and tunnels beneath the outlying districts as the quarrying of stone for building materials long ago has undermined certain European cities.

The area of Germany is 208,825 square miles, about the same as the combined areas if Maine New Hampshire Vermont Massachusetts Connecticut New York New Jersey Pennsylvania and Ohio. The United States has an area of 2,987,890 square miles.

IOWA STATE COLLEGE TO INSTRUCT MANY

Is Preparing to Accommodate 3,000 Taking Training For the Army.

Ames, Ia., Sept. 12.—Iowa state college stands ready to provide instruction for 2,500 to 3,000 men under the terms of the new student army training corps. That was the statement made by Dr. E. W. Stanton, acting president.

The college has ample class room, laboratory and drill field facilities for such a number and even more. The club, fraternity and large rooming houses have in times past accommodated that many students. If the war department prefers to arrange for housing in large barracks, they may be constructed for whatever number of students is necessary and the authorities are now considering in a preliminary way plans and specifications for such structures.

To meet the war department's plans, Iowa state college has changed its opening date from September 24 to September 30. Entrance examinations will be given September 26 and 27 and registration will begin September 28. The [illegible] established semester plan will be [illegible] and the quarter system [illegible] college in continuous session through the year and admission [illegible] at any quarter.

BORN IN ENGLAND HE TALKED PRO-GERMAN

Waterloo, Ia., Sept. 12.—As the result of an argument over the relative merits of the German and American governments, Gus Tegler, a business man of Rock Island, Ill., was taken into custody here by the sheriff yesterday for investigation by United States Commissioner J. E. Dempster.

The conversation which resulted in the detention of Tegler started after an Illinois Central train had left Sioux City. As the train approached Waterloo, E. K. Greene, of Waterloo notified the local authorities.

Tegler has been in business in Rock Island for many years and claims to be a loyal American, having bought Liberty bonds and donated to the Red Cross. He stated he meant no disrespect to the American government when he stated the sanitary and other laws of Germany were strict and strictly enforced. [redacted]

Tegler was born in England of an English mother and German father who was naturalized.

IOWA BATTALION IS NEARLY ANNIHILATED

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 12.—During the final stages of the last German offensive an Iowa battalion, commanded by Maj. C. E. Worthington, of Des Moines, was virtually wiped out.

In 10 days' time its fighting ranks were reduced from 1,200 to 200 men, according to a letter received by Lafayette Young from the major. The ill fated battalion comprised Company A, Winterset; Company B, Des Moines, Company C, Creston, Company D, Centerville, and the Des Moines machine gun company.

Referring to the losses, Major Worthington said: "When I rejoined my organization after having been detailed for some time as an instructor in an officers' school I had 1,200 men. All losses had been replaced from regiments in the United States. These men participated in the big drive.

"Yesterday morning, when the battalion was relieved from the line for rest and reorganization I had a few less than 200 men. Most of the losses occurred during the last 10 days of the big drive.

"Company A of Winterset, came out of the line with no officers and under command of its first sergeant. A book could be written of the heroic acts of the men of my battalion. After the last fight in which my unit participated one platoon, originally 50 men appeared with only one man and one officer left."

WOUNDED WOMAN IS KNOWN IN ROCKWELL CITY

Rockwell City, Ia., Sept. 12.—Ruth Shoemaker, who was found shot in a hotel room at Kansas City Sunday was raised in Rockwell City. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Shoemaker. Her father left Rockwell City a few years ago and his whereabouts are unknown. Her mother remarried, is Mrs. J. P. Mortimer of Rockwell City. A sister, Mrs. F. B. Lang, also lives here.

Ruth Shoemaker left Rockwell City a few years ago for Des Moines, but has visited her mother here frequently. She talked to her sister over the telephone just before leaving Des Moines for Kansas City last week.

Jack Shoemaker, father of the girl, formerly was a well known character in Rockwell City. He boasted of having been a member of the James boys' game, and Cole Younger visited him here at one time.

ABANDONED CHILD IS BELIEVED TO BE HEIR

Davenport, Ia., Sept. 12.—The belief is gaining ground that "Billy," the 3-year-old boy deserted in this city, is the missing grandson of the late Samuel Thorne, banker, philanthropist and multimillionaire of Denver, Colo., and heir to a fifth of the Thorne millions.

Joel W. Thorne, jr., 3 years old, mysteriously disappeared from the palatial Thorne residence in Denver several weeks ago and a nation wide search for the child thus far has proved fruitless. Joel's description tallies with that of "Billy," who was abandoned over a month ago at the boarding house of Mrs. Georgina Bourasso by a well dressed woman who claimed to be his mother.

CEDAR FALLS' PRIDE IS ITS BAND MEN

Free School For Those Who Enter Organization—Boys 10 or 12 Years Old Desired.

Cedar Falls, Ia., Sept. —Cedar Falls' most unique institution, the free band school, from which the members of the famous Cedar Falls band are recruited, will open within the month for its season's work, according to an announcement made today by Prof. F. L. McCreary, the director of the band and head of the school.

The school has numbered in years past from 12 to 40, the ages of the members running from 6 to 59 years. Professor McCreary likes the youngsters of from 10 to 12, however, as being the best material, and he is making a strong bid for these this year. He is taking a look ahead for the next three or four years in order to guard against the depletion of the band by the war, as already the band has sent 30 men to the army. The boy of 10 or 12 will have years before him before he is called to military service, even should the war last beyond all expectations.

IOWA CAN'S SPARE LABOR TO OUTSIDE

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. —Enlargement of Camp Dodge, erection of 1,200 homes for arsenal workers at Davenport, the big corn harvest and the opening of the canning season make it impossible for Iowa to send men to government jobs outside of the state, Labor Commissioner Urick declared today.

DES MOINES—The work or fight regulation will be enforced against all September 12 registrants given deferred classification because of dependents, according to the same rules as other registrants, word received here from publicity headquarters for the draft in Washington declares. However, employment is now classified as either productive or non-productive rather than essential or non-essential, the new terms being somewhat broader than the old. Again the discretion of the local boards is to be used in enforcing the rules.

GLIDDEN—Lafayette Mace, aged 60, committed suicide at his home in Glidden by taking poison. Deceased recently held a sale and went ot New York state to look at farms. He returned much disappointed and dejected. He was a long time resident of this county. He came here from New England. There is a large family of boys and girls, children of his first wife. About 10 years ago he sold his farm and did not reinvest and it is said he watched yearly advances in the value of farm land with regret over having sold out.

DES MOINES—A standard price of $6.15 a ton for lump and $5.90 for mine run coal has been granted to Des Moines and Polk county coal dealers after an all day session of the Polk county fuel commission. The new price means an increase of 50 cents a ton. A committee of coal dealers demanded a flat increase of 80 cents a ton.

LOGAN—Following the resignation of Mr. Tupper as mayor, the city council appointed the Rev. F. K. Hargrove to fill the vacancy.

RAILROAD OFFICIALS STILL ARE WELL PAID

High Salaries Somewhat Reduced By Government, But Still Far Exceed Schedule.

Washington, Sept. 9.—Government operation of railroads for the seven months ending August 1 are reviewed in the first report of Director General McAdoo to President Wilson. The report reveals that salaries paid railroad executives by the government are much lower than received from companies under private control but they have not been pruned to the comparatively small figures of other officers in government service. The seven regional directors of the railroad administration get between $30,000 and $50,000 a year and federal managers of individual roads or systems varying amounts between $5,000 and $40,000, although under private control, salaries ranged as high as $100,000 for railroad presidents or chief executives.

Directors of the nine divisions of the railroads are paid between $20,000 and $25,000 each. Mr. McAdoo, their superior, receives only the usual cabinet members' salary of $12,000 as secretary of the treasury and nothing as director general of railroads. A number of assistant divisional directors of the railroad administration are paid at his direction more than he receives.

Of the 2,323 railway officers receiving more than $5,000 under private management 400 presidents and other officers have been removed from government payrolls, thought they may have been retained at company expense.

In reviewing accomplishments of the government management, Mr. McAdoo laid stress upon the railroad administration's efforts to move coal as fast as mines can produce it.

GERMAN FORCES ARE BEING WITHDRAWN FROM VITAL POSITIONS

By United Press.

Amsterdam, Sept. 10.—German war correspondents report Douai is being evacuated, according to dispatches received today.

Douai is the key to the northern plains of France. The fall of Douai would open the road to Valenciennes, the German supply base, and expose the important positions of Lille and Cambrai to flanking operations, the fall of which, in turn, would totally dislocate the German positions in northern France and Flanders. Military observers believe that with Douai lost the Germans must retreat to the Main Hindenburg Meuse line without delay.

FEDERAL EDUCATION FOR ALL VOTERS

Plan Is Indorsed By American Women According to the Canvass Made.

Chicago. — American women have indorsed a plan for a short course of federal education and training under military discipline for every American young man young woman before they become voters, according to members of a committee representing 50 national organizations who have just completed a canvass of opinion of women in various lines.

The movement was begun here early this year, and at the biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's clubs last May a resolution was adopted urging federal training for both women and men. The resolution was the expression of opinion of more than 2,000,000 women, organized in 10,000 clubs in America.

"Beneficial results of training in the cantonments demonstate what can be done under a broader educational plan, when young people of all nationalities, from all parts of the country, and all classes widen their horizon through intensive training in the essentials of life and government upon equal terms," says a statement issued by the committee explaining the objects of the movement.

"In addition to making strong, alert, clean cut, thinking Americans, the training would create a sense of individual responsibility, strengthen character and promote a higher regard for each other, for their country and the cooperation necessary for the welfare of all.

Would Begin Now.

"Preparations for the training cannot wait until after the war, as the responsibility for wise government will more than ever fall upon the new voters from all environments during the reconstruction period, and they should be the wholesome, red blooded missionaries to carry the message of orderly progress and cooperation into every neighborhood in the land. There is a deep conviction that the benefits of the proposed training will reach the heart of every home, lend constant inspiration to our national life and mean much to prosperity.

"This is the most important movement before the American people today and, in addition, this peace loving nation must never again bear the great penalty of being wholly unprepared to meet unexpected violation of its liberty. Young men and women trained to promote their own welfare and that of their communities and the nation should also be qualified to respond promptly to the call of their country in its hour of need."

Those who have strongly indorsed the plan include Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the National American Woman Suffrage association, and Mrs. Frederick Schoff, president of the National Congress of Mother and Parent-Teachers' associations and director of the home education division of the United States Bureau of Education.

"I am very glad to be one of the founders of the movement for federal training, and agree with all points made by the committee," said Mrs. Catt. "Like a searchlight the war has pointed out all our weak spots. We are a brave people and strong. There is nothing which we will regard as impossible to do. While it is a tragic price to pay, the war will leave us better informed and, more alive in the needs of our country than before."

POTATOES GROWING IN ROYAL FLOWER BEDS

London (by mail).—The 1918 potato crop in Victoria gardens in front of Buckingham Palace promises to be a great success. The potatoes are in beds which until 1917 were devoted to flowers on both sides of The Mall where it reaches the palace grounds entrance.

Paris, Sept. 10 (11:30 p. m.)—[illegible] element of St. Quentin by the British and French armies continued this afternoon. The four principal roads converging into the city from the east and south are in possession of the allies. All communications between Peronne and St. Quentin have been cut.

By Associated Press.

Increasing resistance by the enemy and weather conditions unfavorable to the swift movement of troops tended to slow down the allied offensive from St. Quentin to Cambrai. The British in local fighting have advanced their lines to Havrincourt Wood and Pieziere. To the south they have reached Vermond and Vendelles, the latter about five miles from St. Quentin.

On the British right the French have advanced to within four miles of St. Quentin. At Itez they are across the Crozat canal at Pate nearing Fere, which is burning. With the possession of Fere only a question of time the French command the region west of St. Quentin and are tightening their line around St. Quentin and in the valley to the south through which they must pass.

From La Fere to Laffaux artillery has increased in violence. Failure to stop the allied advance from strong positions furnishes evidence of the German inability to stop the allied sweeping movement against the Germans in the forest, the keystone of the German positions barring allied advance northward.

South of the Aisne where the British and Americans are advancing the enemy has concentrated much artillery and heavy firing is reported. Infantry engagements have been confined to patrol encounters.

London, Sept. 10.—British troops have advanced south of Havrincourt Wood, during the night Field Marshal Haig reported today.

"Yesterday the enemy's counter attack on positions gained in the fighting west of Gouzeaucourt was completely repulsed. Our line was slightly advanced during the night. We made progress Havrincourt We made progress northeast of Neuve Chapelle and north of Armentieres."

SAFE FARMING

Substitutes for Corn

Sorghum, Millet or Sudan Grass Make Good Feed

By F. G. HOLDEN.

THE poor condition of seed corn in the northern Corn Belt will no doubt result in a very poor stand of corn in many fields. In some cases entire fields will have to be replanted.

Many farmers cannot replant because of the scarcity of seed, and substitute crops must be planted or the land will remain idle.

In this emergency the growing of millet, sorghum, or even Sudan grass, is worthy of consideration.

Perhaps the best of these substitutes for the northern Corn Belt is sorghum. The Early Amber variety is good for either syrup or forage purposes. Other good varieties are the Orange, Red Top and Gooseneck. For growing as forage, sorghum can be sown as late as August 1, and will make more or less of a continuous growth, depending upon the soil and season.

When grown for hay it may be sown broadcast or with a grain drill, using from 50 to 70 pounds of seed to the acre. Or it can be sown in rows like corn, ... pounds of seed per ... cultivated crop ... for forage with a corn ... broadcast ...

Some years ago ... Justice Brandeis of the United States supreme court made a statement ... to the point of the ... he made it, and still more to the point today. Said Mr. Brandeis:

> There are vital unsolved social and industrial problems to be solved. And for the ... we need our ablest men. The reason ... we have not made ... progress in ... matters is that these problems have not been tackled by the practical men of high ability like those who have worked on industrial inventions and enterprises.

Yet if in the past "practical men of high ability" as a rule have failed to tackle social problems, they are not altogether to be blamed.

The spirit of the past has been excessively individualistic and to an inordinate extent materialistic. Accomplishment for self, gain for self, pleasure for self has been the teaching of our yesterdays. Under such teaching the social sense was of necessity well nigh stifled.

But circumstances are now compelling new views of the meaning and responsibilities of life. The old selfish individualism invites social disaster. "Practical men of high ability" must turn their thoughts to social rebuilding or perish in the ruins of society.

That is the situation which confronts them.

It will not avail to dismiss with bitter, contemptuous words the murmurings and protests of those oppressed in the present social order. The justice of the protests must be appreciated, and earnest thought given by the best trained thinkers to the devising of effective social reforms.

Again I quote Justice Brandeis:

> There is no such thing as freedom for a man who under normal conditions is not financially free.

ARMY TURNING OUT COOKS BY WHOLESALE

School at Camp Bowie Fits Men to Prepare Wholesome Food For Soldiers.

Fort Worth, Tex. Nine hundred skilled ... trained for overseas duty ... be graduated in classes of 200 ... from the ... army school for cooks ... and bakers ... largest school of its ... kind in the country, which is being ... on the Camp Bowie reservation ... supervision of Captain Fred H. Morrell.

... students graduating must reach the following ... standard. Practical work ... 50 per cent, recitation and theory, 20 per cent, care of kitchen, 18 per cent, discipline, 12 per cent. The majority of those graduated have been taken from the courses for second cooks with first cooks next in number and mess sergeants third.

The course includes lectures and instruction on rations, bills of fare, component parts, field specifications, preparation, sanitation, temperatures, mess management, stock sheets, field cooking, recipes and visits to the packing houses here. An understanding of food values most needed to suit conditions existing in various places is being drilled into the students.

Great attention also is given to food conservation. The army must not ... waste and cooks are taught to throw all particles of meat and bone into a 20-gallon pot where the mixture is boiled and the fat rendered. The stock is then used for gravies and soups.

Some communities here require the men to weigh what is left on their plates, and the amount is deducted from the ... meal that they ... for ... needed ... their appetites.

The sanitary ... course requires the ... keep kitchen, mess ... cooking ... clean. This applies to tables and floors. How to set the tables is an important part of the study.

Experiments are conducted to devise means of using substitutes for flour, such as oatmeal, cornmeal, and rice flour. Use of sirup instead of sugar wherever possible is encouraged.

"Food wastage," said Captain Morrell "is not always the fault of the soldier at the mess table. The cook is often to blame. If he doesn't cook the food right, it will be distasteful to the men and they will refuse to eat all set before them. The well cooked meal puts the men in good spirits as well as helping them physically."

A record of food conservation was kept at the detention camp where the recruits are quartered and fed under the direction of Captain Morrell. Of 72,179 pounds of flour allowed the camp in 14 days, only 36,165 pounds were used and yet every man had all the bread he desired.

"KAISER" BURNS CHILD.

From the New York World.

"Down with the kaiser!" shouted a group of children in front of No. 229 East One Hundred and Eighth street, which is in the heart of the Harlem Italian colony. They were dancing about an effigy of the German emperor which had been left over from a block party held the previous evening by young Americans of Italian descent who were departing for camp. The children had seized the dummy and set it afire.

Josephine Salvaggio, 5 years, whose home was in the house in front of which the kaiser flamed, danced too close to the blaze. Her skirt was set afire. All her clothing was burned off and she was terribly scorched. Her uncle, Amadeo Salvaggio, ran to her rescue. His hands and face were burned. Both were taken to the Reception hospital.

An illuminated door knob, for which a patent has been granted, is covered with a glass panel on which can be painted a house number or a name.

MOUNT GRAPPA HAS BECOME A BYWORD

Italian Who Took Part In Great Conflict Tells of Many Acts of Valor.

Front in Italy, (by mail.)—Mount Grappa is a synonym for valor in the Italian army. The proudest troops are those who defended the historic mountain against the Austrians last June and prevented their passage to the Venetian plain. A bowlder taken from the spot where the fight was hottest has been removed to Milan and erected as a battle memorial with imposing ceremonies.

"The effort to straighten our lines in the mountains, begun by the reoccupation of Mount Valbella, Col del Rosso and Col d'Echele (Col means hill) was extended to the northwest of Mount Grappa, between Col Moschin and the Asolone.

"Against this zone in his June offensive, General Conrad, as all remember, launched his best troops in an attempt which he expected would open the way to the valley through Bassano with comparative ease. He was halted instead in the valley of San Lorenzo, driven from the plateaus he had taken and through a bold stroke of our arms, obliged to abandon other positions which are of great advantage to the Italians in checking a new drive or starting an offensive against Austria as Conrad announced in one of his bulletins.

Artillery Fire for Two Days.

"For two days the Austrian artillery played on the zone without ceasing. The night preceding the attack the concentration of fire was redoubled by the Italians, fully engaging all the positions of the enemy, disorganizing his commands, cutting his communications and all the nerves of his movement.

In the morning the infantry went into action and at one dash occupied the positions of the enemy. Soon their importance was disclosed by the large number of prisoners who appeared to lay down their arms.

"At 6 o'clock our forces had achieved all their objectives. A Roman colonel commanded our infantry. A lieutenant with one arm led another body of men. He had refused to leave the service when crippled and he exerted an extraordinary ascendancy over his soldiers.

"At the same time our other detachments straightened our positions in the valley of San Lorenzo and improved the effectiveness of our lines.

"The resistance of the enemy was obstinate, especially by the Twenty-seventh Austrian division.

"The struggle in the trenches in the communication lines, in the dugouts which our artillery had half destroyed was bitter and at times fierce. With the impetuous charge of our attacking parties the first 200 prisoners were brought in in less than 20 minutes. Our infantry seized 20 enemy machine guns and forthwith turned 12 of them against him.

"We took about 600 prisoners in all and 27 officers including a company commander. The Austrian losses in killed and wounded, however, were about 1,200 men.

"Our artillery answered immediately with the greatest precision and silenced the enemy's barrage fire. It cut off the Austrians in their dugouts and decimated the occupants and supported the infantry at all times with great efficacy.

"The Austrians counter attacked several times in vain, keeping up the fight till 7 in the morning. They persisted in shelling the terrain with heavy artillery, but under it our troops succeeded in holding and consolidating our positions.

"The Austrian prisoners taken near Mount Grappa said they did not expect to be so quietly expelled from their strong positions.

"The enemy suffered heavily. Some companies were reduced to a few men. We saw battalions left in command of a lieutenant. Their supply department was poorly organized. The soldiers suffered from hunger, especially in the last few days. They asserted that lack of provisions to send them had as much to do with the conditions as the defective provision service.

"We saw a long column of Austrian prisoners defile in front of our lines, with their officers leading them. Their appearance was that of men happy to escape from a great disaster.

'One of our soldiers threw a loaf of bread among them. The Austrians, like a swarm of bees, flung themselves on the bread to grab it. They tore it to shreds. After that the column moved slowly through our lines, which stood at fixed bayonets.

"A Hungarian officer said:

"'It is useless. Mount Grappa has been and always will be our tomb.'

"In contrast with the state of the enemy, it is enough to say that the Italian troops of every class go into battle singing hymns, with their helmets decked with flowers, shouting: 'Fall back, Austrians, we are the soldiers of the Grappa!'

"Seven Italian war prisoners succeeded in regaining our lines. After escaping in spite of the great vigilance of the enemy, they related that the Austrians compel most of the prisoners to work immediately in the second line trenches and under fire. The Austrians lack food. They say that the hour of deliverance is eagerly awaited in the invaded territory, while the inhabitants make ostentatious display of their Italian patriotism, even in front of the Austrian gendarmes.

"The children almost all wear little Alpine caps and sing the 'Hymn of the Grappa,' even as they pass groups of Austrian soldiers.

"The success of yesterday, besides strengthening and improving our positions bars the road to the invader which symbolizes the valor of our army and the inflexible will of our country."

NEW GREENBACKS OUT.

Two new greenbacks—the first of the nation's wartime currency—are in circulation. They are the $1 and $2 federal reserve bank notes planned especially to replace the silver certificates withdrawn from circulation as the treasury's silver reserve is melted into bullion for export to the allies.

The $1 note bears a portrait of George Washington in the upper left hand corner of the face side, and otherwise resembles generally a federal reserve note. On the reverse side is shown in a center oval an eagle in full flight, typifying the nation mobilized for war.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Hollidayburg, Pa.—In anticipation of the enactment of the law extending the draft ages, John E. Elliott, a coal company president, registered before the local war board and passed the physical test. Mr. Elliott wanted ample time to arrange his business affairs before entering the army.

ARMY BANDS HAVE MORE ATTENTION

Musicians Will Be Required to Possess Ability—Other Work Also.

In France (by mail).—A recent general order of the American army increasing regimental bands to 50 pieces and giving all bandmasters the commission of lieutenant is understood to foreshadow a general reorganization of army bands and music. Like a good many things that military theory had either abolished or regarded as of secondary importance when this war began, music is to come into its own again as a primary essential of soldiering.

The commander in chief recently sought the advice of Dr. Walter Damrosch, American orchestra leader and composer, who is now in France, and as a result the army bands are to be brought up to date and perfected. At present army musicians also act as stretcher bearers when action is on. It is proposed to relieve them of this duty, if the military authorities think it feasible, and compel them to practice constantly. The band leaders are to be examined as to their musical ability and an effort will be made to find the best instrumentalists in the service, so that every regiment will have a highly trained band.

The army authorities have learned that music is a big part of war. The men want it and they appreciate good music, as is shown by the big turnout for the concerts. Good music is a tonic to the units relieved from the front lines and wearied troops straighten up inwardly and outwardly when they are played into rest camps after action. It also has been found that to play the men out when they start for the front improves their morale.

Experiments are being made with a view to the introduction of the French bugle in our bands. The American bugle is keyed in C and does not lend itself well to a band, while the French army bugle, keyed in B flat and with a clear ringing tone, is excellent counterpoint in band music.

GENDER OF THE PIAVE WORRYING ITALIANS

BY HENRY WOOD.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Rome (by mail)—Italy is very much interested in settling the question of whether the Piave river is masculine or feminine.

Names of rivers, like names of all things in Italian have gender which is indicated usually by the last letter of the word and as a consequence of which all articles or adjectives modifying the word must be of the same gender. Unfortunately the gender of the Piave has never yet been definitely established, and the question now being discussed is whether it is "La Piave" (feminine) or "Il Piave" (masculine).

But for the fact that it was on the banks of the Piave that the Italians checked the great Austro-German drive of last fall and the new Austrian offensive of this spring, it is doubtful if the question of the Piave's gender would ever have been discussed or settled. As it is, the question has become one of great importance and one that Italian writers are proceeding to have permanently established.

Supporters of the two sides are citing all authorities possible to support their respective contentions.

Maria D'Angelo is for having the river masculine, and has in his support two of the greatest Italian writers, Carducci and d'Annunzio. D'Annunzio especially feels that the river should be masculine as a permanent tribute to the vicinity of the Italian army that was manifested there.

On the other hand nearly all of the most celebrated Venetian writers, such as Bembo, Goldoni, Sarpi and Gasparo Gozzi used the Piave in their writings as feminine.

Meantime it develops that both the maps of the Italian Touring Club and those of the Italian general staff have adopted the feminine form. The general staff especially is credited with having chosen the feminine for the Piave after careful study of historical documents and the common usage along the river.

The question, however, is still open.

AFRICAN ELEPHANT TO AID RECONSTRUCTION

Pittsburgh.—John Ringling, circus owner, has determined to propose to the allied governments that African elephants be tamed and used in the reconstruction of France after the war.

Because gun and shell fire at the battle fronts are slaughtering mules and horses by the tens of thousands, Mr. Ringling and Edmond Laplea, of the University of Louvain, Belgium, met in conference here the other day and discussed plans for using the heretofore African elephant in reconstruction work in Europe.

The men agreed that the loss of horses and mules could not be replaced for many years, and, since African elephants may be found in vast numbers, and be tamed easily, both felt positive that the allies would assist in the shipment of the big beasts.

"One elephant will do the work of 26 horses," said Mr. Laplea, who has charge of the Belgian government's business in the Congo. "Europe must be reconstructed and there will be no horses. We are using the African elephant in carrying timber from the forest, in plowing and in all kinds of farm work. He carries and lifts beams and girders for the construction of buildings."

A Call of the Wild.

From the Birmingham Age-Herald.

"I wish to buy a motor car horn to replace the one we now have—something distinctive," said the haughty matron.

"Yes, ma'am," replied the salesman. "Would a siren do?"

"Dear me, no. It must be something entirely different from the ordinary motor horn."

"But we have a siren that exactly imitates the howl of a timber wolf."

"Ah! That ought to suit my husband. He's a great lover of nature."

BOY TRAVELS PARCEL POST.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Versailles, Ind.—On its first trip from Cincinnati to Versailles, the parcel post automobile truck carried a much alive 13-year-old boy weighing 73 pounds and wearing 78 cents of postage stamps as one of its packages. The lad was tagged "Freddie Prinz, Versailles, Ind., care of the postmaster." He was sent by a Cincinnati newspaper. He remained overnight in Versailles and was "posted" for his home the next day by the postmaster, who stamped on his collar "Fragile and perishable."

NEW WHEAT PRICES FOR IOWA.

By J. F. DEEMS, United States Food Administrator for Iowa.

The establishment of new freight rates by the railroad administration has necessitated a change in the government price basis for wheat. After consideration of all factors the food administration announces price basis at various markets for the grades No. 1 Northern spring wheat, No. 1 hard winter wheat, No. 1 red winter, No. 1 durum, No. 1 hard white, in store in public elevators, approved for storage by the grain corporation (seaboard or in store on export terms) as follows

New York	$2.39½
Philadelphia	2.39
Baltimore	2.38¾
Newport News	2.38¾
Chicago	2.26
New Orleans	2.28
Galveston	2.28
St. Louis	2.24
Duluth	2.22½
Minneapolis	2.21½
Kansas City	2.18
Omaha	2.18
Frisco	2.20

The basis for No. 2 wheat will be three cents lower than No. 1.

The basis for No. 8, 7 cents below No. 1.

Grades below No. 8 will be dealt in on sample.

It is expected that the changes in federal grading standards will throw more wheat into higher grades than last year. The changes in price are worked out as nearly as possible to compensate for increases in railway and sea freights.

BOOZE AND FOOD

This statement has been issued by the United States food administrator:

"As to the discussion over the suppression of brewing, I wish to say emphatically that from a strictly food conservation point of view I should like to see the use of foodstuffs suppressed in all drinks hard and soft

"This is not, however, the whole story. We stopped distilling a year ago. There is a long supply of whisky, gin and other 20 per cent to 40 per cent distilled drinks in the country. We have reduced the consumption of foodstuffs in brewing by 80 per cent and reduced the alcohol content of beer to 2¾ per cent. If we stop brewing the saloons of the country will still be open but confined practically to a whisky and gin basis.

"Any true advocate of temperance and of national efficiency in these times will shrink from this situation, for the national danger in it is greater than the use of some four million bushels of grain monthly in the breweries. If the American people want prohibition it should prohibit by legislation to that end and not force the food administration to the responsibility for an orgy of drunkenness. It is mighty difficult to get drunk on 2¾ per cent beer; it will be easy enough if we force a substitution of distilled drinks for it

"The food administration has gone as far as it can towards temperance without precipitating a worse situation. If the American people or congress will stop the sale of distilled liquors the administration will find no difficulty in stopping brewing."

CANNING FOR OUR SOLDIERS

Same Result If People Use Home Canned Products in the Home.

Although the American housewife is urged to can or preserve every ounce of fruit or vegetables possible her product must be reserved for civilian use. Home canned or preserved goods cannot be purchased or accepted as gifts by the army or navy. No governmental department is permitted to accept any article without paying for it and furthermore the difficulty of handling small lots of goods for which the containers are not uniform makes such acceptance impossible. Uniformity is essential because of the necessity of utilizing every particle of shipping space. However, it must be borne in mind that every jar or can filled by housewives and used in the homes releases a like quantity of commercially canned goods for export. There will also be saved the labor, transportation space, and cost of transportation involved in the commercial distribution of factory preserved goods.

MORE WHEAT IN ENGLAND

Increase of Wheat Production in Great Britain Is Not Enough.

Although the wheat acreage in Great Britain has been greatly increased it is not likely that the increased yield of cereals in the United Kingdom during 1918 will materially affect the amount which must be delivered abroad by the United States and Canada. In other words, in comparison with the total needs the amount which can be raised in the United Kingdom is small. The wheat production of the United Kingdom in 1917 was 64,000,000 bushels and the increased acreage this year is estimated at about 45 per cent.

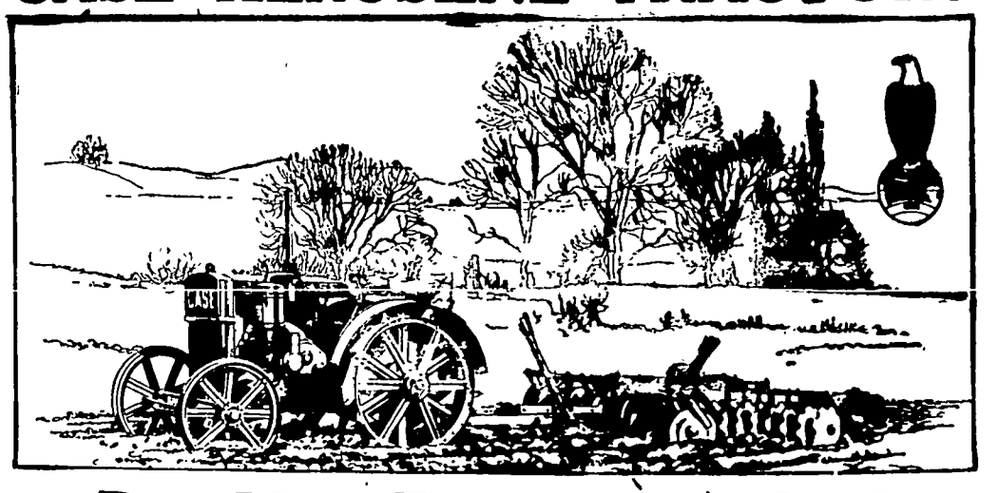
CASE KEROSENE TRACTORS



Do Not Pack the Soil

Case 9-18 Features

1—Pulls two plows anywhere a good team can pull one plow. Two speeds forward, 2¼ miles and 3½ miles per hour; and reverse. Delivers 33⅓ per cent more drawbar horsepower than its rating.

2—Weighs but little more than team of horses. Turning radius, 11 feet.

3—Has 4-cylinder Case valve-in-head motor—head removable. Burns kerosene successfully and economically. Efficient air strainer prevents dust and grit entering cylinders.

4—All-steel gears, enclosed and running in oil. Hyatt Roller Bearings throughout.

5—All wheels run on unplowed ground when plowing.

6—Friction clutch pulley with brake, regular equipment. Drives 20x28 Case Thresher, fully equipped; Case No. 12 silo filler; Case 17x24 Hay baler and other machines requiring similar power.

YOU need not fear "soil packing" when you take out a Case 9-18 Kerosene Tractor for any operation over plowed ground.

The pressure under the wide-faced drivers is approximately 15 pounds per square inch. With an ordinary farm horse it is about 20 pounds. So this light tractor goes right over plowed ground without miring or injuring the seed-bed if the land is at all fit to work.

The Case 9-18 is economical too, at such operations. For example, among 1917 tractor tests made by the University of Nebraska it was found that the Case 9-18 Tractor can disc an acre in less than 23 minutes at a fuel cost of 9c (kerosene).

Other jobs can be done quicker, better and cheaper, at big saving over team and man power. This Case 9-18 handles as easily as a team. Its short wheelbase affords a turning radius of only fourteen and one-half feet. We'd like to tell you more about this splendid tractor.

TURN TO BOWDITCH

Book by Salem Man, Long Dead, Has Become War Factor.

Young Officers of the United States Merchant Marine Are Poring Over "American Navigator," Famed as Sailor's Guide.

No American of today is exercising so potent an influence in the country's present extraordinary development in seagoing as Nathaniel Bowditch, who has been in his grave for more than eighty years, and whose name is unrecognized by millions of his fellow countrymen.

Persons who follow the rise and decline of the "best sellers" among books may be surprised to know that Bowditch was the author of one of the best-selling books ever produced, which has run through hundreds of editions, in all civilized languages, has been selling steadily for more than a hundred years, and since the great war began has been in greater demand than ever.

This book is known as the "American Practical Navigator." It is the guide of every keel that sails the Seven Seas, and is familiarly known to sailors the world over as "Bowditch," or "Bowditch's Epitome."

With America's entry into the war, the demand for Bowditch's "Navigator" became so great that a special edition of the book was published to meet it by the United States hydrographic office, notwithstanding that edition had been as recently issued as in 1916 and also in 1914. For a time it was difficult to obtain a copy of the "Navigator." Since the appearance of the 1917 edition, however, all demands for the book can be met.

The increased demand for the book was caused chiefly by the stimulus given the study of navigation among young Americans by the training service of the United States shipping board which is schooling hundreds of young men to serve as officers on the ships of the new merchant marine.

Bowditch was called by his contemporaries "an intellectual prodigy." He has since been termed "the Ocean Pathfinder." On receipt of the news of his death, in 1836, vessels in the chief ports of the world half-masted their flags. His book was then said by one eulogist to be "in practical utility second to no work of man ever published."

Of the personality of the man who achieved this great distinction very little is recalled today, in spite of the vital influence of his work in the present development of his country.

He was born in the old shipping town of Salem, Mass., in 1773. His people were poor, and he was obliged to leave school when but twelve, to serve in a ship chandler's shop.

There, while selling rope and marlinspikes, the youth fell in with men from far voyages. One was an old British sailor, who taught the lad navigation. Algebra so fascinated the boy he "could not sleep after a first glance at it."

It chanced that about this time a privateer came into Salem with the booty of a cruise that included a library of philosophical works, the property of Dr. Richard Kirwan, an Irish scientist, taken from a freighter captured off the Irish coast.

The books were sold at auction, and bought by Salem citizens as the nucleus of a library. Young Bowditch had access to them, read them eagerly, and copied most of them for further use.

When twenty-two, Bowditch made his first voyage to sea, as captain's clerk on a Salem ship. He sailed nine years in all, one voyage being on the Astrea, the first American ship to visit Manila harbor.

Every man in the Astrea's crew soon learned they had a genius among them. Bowditch looked the scholar and devoted many hours a day to study. He made every man aboard a navigator, and it was said, each of them "could work a lunar observation as well as Sir Isaac Newton."

When not studying young Bowditch paced the deck in deep thought. At such times nobody spoke to him, knowing that in due course he would dash into his cabin to set down the results of his concentration, as he rarely failed to do.

It is related that one day the ship was attacked by a privateer, and Bowditch was assigned to pass powder from the magazine. The gun crews got no powder, and investigation showed Bowditch seated on a powder keg, working out a difficult problem on his slate.

On arriving in Boston harbor from a voyage in 1802, Bowditch attended the commencement at Harvard college, and was surprised to find himself named for an honorary degree as bachelor of arts, his work as an authority on navigation having won him recognition.

Retiring from the sea in 1804, Bowditch became president of a fire insurance company. He declined professorships at Harvard, the Military academy at West Point and the University of Virginia.

His life was devoted largely to perfecting his "Navigator," and to the translation from the French and annotation of La Place's "Celestial Mechanics," a collossal work on astronomy showing great erudition by the translator, but now known only to a few astronomers.

Even a Stranger.

"Then, Monsieur le Prefét, you may take it that I am the culprit, and you have only to arrest me. This day, between 5 and 6 o'clock, you will see before you, in this room, the person who killed the Mornington heirs. It is, humanly speaking, impossible that this should not be so. Consequently, the law will be satisfied in any circumstances. He or I: the position is quite simple."

M. Desmalions was silent. He gnawed his mustache thoughtfully and walked round and round the table within the narrow circle formed by the others. It was obvious that objections to the supposition were springing up in his mind. In the end, he muttered, as though speaking to himself:

"No, no. For, after all, how are we to explain that the man should have waited until now to claim his rights?"

"An accident, perhaps, Monsieur le Prefet, an obstacle of some kind. Or else—one can never tell—the perverse longing for a more striking sensation. And remember, Monsieur le Prefet, how minutely and subtly the whole business was worked. Each event took place at the very moment fixed by Hippolyte Fauville. Cannot we take it that his accomplice is pursuing his method to the end and that he will not reveal himself until the last minute!"

M. Desmalions exclaimed, with a sort of anger:

"No, no, and again no! It is not possible. If a creature monstrous enough to commit such a series of murders exists, he will not be such a fool as to deliver himself into our hands."

"Monsieur le Prefet, he does not know the danger that threatens him if he comes here, because no one has even contemplated the thought of his existence. Besides, what risk does he run?"

"What risk? Why, if he has really committed those murders——"

"He has committed them, Monsieur le Prefet. He has caused them to be committed, which is a different thing. And you now see where the man's unsuspected strength lies! He does not act in person. From the day when the truth appeared to me I have succeeded in gradually discovering his means of action, in laying bare the machinery which he controls, the tricks which he employs. He does not act in person. There you have his method. You will find that it is the same throughout the series of murders."

"In appearance, Cosmo Mornington died of the results of a carelessly administered injection. In reality, it was this man who caused the injection to prove fatal. In appearance, Inspector Verot was killed by Hippolyte Fauville. In reality, it must have been this man who contrived the murder by pointing out the necessity to Fauville and, so to speak, guiding his hand. And in the same way, in appearance, Fauville killed his son and committed suicide. Marie Fauville committed suicide. Gaston Sauverand committed suicide. In reality, it was this man who wanted them dead, who prompted them to commit suicide, and who supplied them with the means of death."

"There you have the method, and there, Monsieur le Prefet, you have the man." And, in a lower voice that contained a sort of apprehension, he added, "I confess that never before, in the course of a life that has been full of strange meetings, have I encountered a more terrifying person, acting with more devilish ability or greater psychological insight."

His words created an ever increasing sensation around his hearers. They really saw that invisible being. He took shape in their imaginations. They waited for him to arrive. Twice Don Luis had turned to the door and listened. And his action, more than anything else, helped to complete the image of the man who was coming.

M. Desmalions said:

"Whether he acted himself or caused others to act, once it has hold of him [illegible] how to——"

"The law will find it no easy matter, Monsieur le Prefet! A man of his powers and resource must have foreseen everything, even his arrest, even the accusation of which he would be the subject; and there is little to be brought against him but moral charges without proofs."

"Then you think——"

"I think, Monsieur le Prefet, that the thing will be to accept his explanations as quite natural and not to show any distrust. What you want is to know who he is. Later on, before long, you will be able to unmask him."

The Prefect of Police continued to walk around the table. Major d'Astrignac kept his eyes fixed on Perenna, whose coolness amazed him. The solicitor and the secretary of Embassy seemed greatly excited. In fact nothing could be more sensational than the thought that filled all their minds. Was the abominable murderer about to appear before them?

"Silence!" said the Prefect, stopping his walk.

Some one had crossed the anteroom.

There was a knock at the door.

"Come in!"

The office messenger entered, carrying a card tray. On the tray was a letter, and in addition there was one of those printed slips on which callers write their names and the object of their visit.

M. Desmalions hastened toward the messenger. He hesitated a moment before taking up the slip. He was very pale. Then he glanced at it quickly.

"Oh!" he said, with a start.

He looked toward Don Luis, reflected and then, taking the letter, he said to the messenger:

"Is the bearer outside?"

"In the anteroom, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Show the person in when I ring."

M. Desmalions stood in front of his desk, without moving. For the second time Don Luis met his eyes and a feeling of perturbation came over him. What was happening?

With a sharp movement the Prefect of Police opened the envelope which he held in his hand, unfolded the letter and began to read it.

The others watched his every gesture, watched the least change of expression on his face. Were Perenna's premonitions about to be fulfilled? Was a fifth heir putting in his claim?

The moment he had read the first lines, M. Desmalions looked up and, addressing Don Luis, murmured:

"On whose part, Monsieur le Prefet?" Don Luis could not help asking.

M. Desmalions did not reply. He finished reading the letter. Then he read it again, with the attention of a man weighing every word. Lastly, he read aloud:

"Monsieur le Prefet,

"A foreign correspondence has revealed to me the existence of an unknown heir of the Rousset family. It was only today that I was able to procure the documents necessary for identifying this heir and, owing to unforeseen obstacles, it is only at the last moment that I am able to send them to you by the person whom the question. Respecting a secret which is no more and wishing as a [illegible] outside business in [illegible] only [illegible] to [illegible] Monsieur le Prefet, upon [illegible] I do not feel called upon to [illegible] my name to this letter."

So Perenna had seen rightly and events were justifying his forecast. Some one was putting in an appearance within the period indicated. The claim was made in good time. And the very way in which things were happening at the exact moment was curiously suggestive of the mechanical exactness that had governed the whole business.

The last question still remained: who was this unknown person, the possible heir, and therefore the five or six fold murderer? He was waiting in the next room. There was nothing but a wall between him and the others. He was coming in. They would see him. They would know who he was.

The Prefect suddenly rang the bell.

A few seconds elapsed. Oddly enough, M. Desmalions did not remove his eyes from Perenna. Don Luis remained quite master of himself, but restless and uneasy at heart.

It was Florence Levasseur.

CHAPTER XVI.

Weber Takes His Revenge.

Don Luis was for one moment amazed. Florence Levasseur here! Florence, whom he had left in the train under Mazeroux's supervision and for whom it was physically impossible to be back in Paris before eight o'clock in the evening!

Then, despite his bewilderment, he at once understood. Florence, knowing that she was being followed, had drawn them after her to the Gare Saint-Lazare and simply walked through the railway carriage, getting out on the other platform, while the worthy Mazeroux went on in the train to keep his eye on the traveler who was not there.

But suddenly the full horror of the situation struck him. Florence was here to claim the inheritance, and her claim, as he himself had said, was a proof of the most terrible guilt.

Acting on an irresistible impulse, Don Luis leaped to the girl's side, seized her by the arm and said, with almost malevolent force:

"What are you doing here? What have you come for? Why did you not let me know?"

M. Desmalions stopped between them. But Don Luis, without letting go of the girl's arm, exclaimed:

"Oh, Monsieur le Prefet, don't you see that this is all a mistake? The person whom we are expecting, about whom I told you, is not this one. The other is keeping in the background, as usual. Why it's impossible that Florence Levasseur——"

"I have no preconceived opinion on the subject of this young lady," said the Prefect of Police, in an authoritative voice. "But it is my duty to question her about the circumstances that brought her here; and I shall certainly do so."

He released the girl from Don Luis's grasp and made her take a seat. He himself sat down at his desk, and it was easy to see how great an impression the girl's presence made upon him. It afforded so to speak an illustration of Don Luis's argument.

The appearance on the scene of a new person, laying claim to the inheritance was undeniably, to any logical mind, the appearance on the scene of a criminal who herself brought with her the proofs of her crimes. Don Luis felt this clearly and, from that moment, did not take his eyes off the Prefect of Police.

Florence looked at them, by turns as though the whole thing was the most insoluble mystery to her. Her beautiful dark eyes retained their customary serenity. She no longer wore her nurse's uniform; and her gray gown, very simply cut and devoid of ornaments, showed her graceful figure. She was grave and unemotional as usual.

M. Desmalions said:

"Explain yourself, Mademoiselle."

She answered:

"I have nothing to explain, Monsieur le Prefet. I have come to you on an errand which I am fulfilling without knowing exactly what it is about."

"What do you mean? Without knowing what it is about?"

"I will tell you, Monsieur le Prefet. Some one in whom I have every confidence and for whom I entertain the greatest respect asked me to hand you certain papers. They appear to concern the question which is the object of your meeting today."

"The question of awarding the Mornington inheritance?"

"Yes."

"You know that, if this claim had not been made in the course of the present sitting, it would have had no effect?"

"I came as soon as the papers were handed to me."

"Why were they not handed to you an hour or two earlier?"

"I was not there. I had to leave the house where I am staying, in a hurry."

Perenna did not doubt that it was his intervention that upset the enemy's plans by causing Florence to take to flight.

"So you are ignorant of the reasons why you received the papers?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet."

"And evidently you are also ignorant of how far they concern you?"

"They do not concern me, Monsieur le Prefet."

M. Desmalions smiled and, looking into Florence's eyes, said plainly:

"According to the letter which accompanies them they concern you intimately. It seems that they prove, in the most positive manner, that you are descended from the Rousset family and that you consequently have a right to the Mornington inheritance."

"I?"

The cry was a spontaneous exclamation of astonishment and protest.

And she at once went on insistently:

"I, a right to the inheritance? I have none at all, Monsieur le Prefet, none at all. I never knew Mr. Mornington. What is this story? There is some mistake."

She spoke with great animation and with an apparent frankness that would have impressed any other man than the Prefect of Police. But how could he forget Don Luis's arguments and the accusation made before and again? The person who would arrive at the meeting?

"Give me the papers," he said.

She took from her hand a small blue envelope which was carefully fastened down and which was found to contain a number of faded documents damaged by folds and torn in different places.

He examined them amid perfect silence, read them through, studied them thoroughly, inspected the signatures and then, through a magnifying glass, said:

"They bear every sign of being genuine. The seals are off——"

"Then, Monsieur le——!" said Florence, in a trembling voice.

"Then, Mademoiselle, I must tell you that your ignorance strikes me as most incredible."

And, turning to the secretary, he said:

"Listen briefly to what these documents contain and to Gaston Sauverand, Cosmo Mornington's heir in the fourth degree, had, as you know an elder brother, called Raoul who lived in the Argentine Republic. This brother, before his death, sent to Europe, in the charge of an old servant, a child of five who was none other than his daughter, a natural but legally recognized daughter whom he had had by Mlle. Levasseur a French teacher at Buenos Ayres."

"Here is the birth certificate. Here is the signed declaration written entirely in the father's hand. Here is the affidavit signed by the old nurse. Here are the depositions of three friends, merchants or solicitors at Buenos Ayres. And here are the certificates of the father and mother.

"All these documents have been legalized and bear the stamp of the French consulate. For the present, I have no reason to doubt them; and I am bound to look upon Florence Levasseur as Gaston Sauverand's daughter and Cosmo Sauverand's niece."

"Gaston Sauverand's niece!" muttered Florence.

The mention of a father, whether she had, so to speak, never known left her unmoved. But she began to weep at the recollection of Gaston Sauverand, whom she loved so fondly and to whom she found herself linked by such a close relationship.

Were her tears sincere? Were they the tears of an actress able to play her part down to the slightest details? Were those tears really revealed to her for the first time? Or was she acting the revelations which the revelation of those facts would produce in her under natural conditions?

Don Luis observed M. Desmalions, even more narrowly than he did the girl, and tried to read the secret thoughts of the man upon whom the decision lay. And suddenly he became certain that Florence's arrest was a matter already solved upon as definitely as the arrest of the most monstrous criminal. Then he went up to her and said:

"Florence."

She looked at him with her tear-dimmed eyes and made no reply.

Slowly, he said:

"To defend yourself, Florence—for, though I am sure you do not know it, you are under the obligation—you must understand the terrible position in which events have placed you."

Major-General Davidson, who was elected to parliament recently, left general headquarters in France by aeroplane, motored from his landing place to Westminster, took the oath and sat in the house of commons a while, then he went back to his seat before the house anxious to [illegible] so [illegible] could get on [illegible] there was no other way to go.

And in 1918 ... campaign and in 1916 at Verdun the Germans have come ... of success and have failed only after brilliant preliminary ...

But again there has been a repetition of the Waterloo circumstances. The German Napoleon has sought three times to overwhelm the allied Wellingtons, Joffre Petain and Foch in turn, but each time Blucher has arrived in time—the Russians in 1914 the British in 1916 and ourselves in 1918. As a result each ... has failed at the moment when the German people and the German soldiers have not too rashly believed that victory was within plain sight.

Now, going ... to the former occasions, we see ... at the failure in the Marne campaign was followed by a transfer of German effort for nearly a year and a half to the east front. Germany could not fight offensive campaigns on both sides so she abandoned the west to settle matters in the east. When she came back ... the west in the Verdun campaign she was too late. Britain was almost ready and France able to hold until Britain could begin. After the Verdun failure it was necessary to go east and south again. Russia having once more become dangerous and Rumania a fresh foe.

But Russia definitely destroyed for military purposes Rumania disposed of, the east at her feet Germany came west again this spring. America was as unready far more unready than Britain in the Verdun time. The chance to dispose of the older enemies before the new one was on the field in troublesome numbers was unmistakable. The battles of Picardy, Flanders and the Aisne seemed to promise the ultimate victory just as Morhange, Charleroi and Mons seemed to promise it in 1914. The most optimistic allied observer could not deny that Germany had a fresh opportunity to gain a decision on the continental battlefield the moment it was disclosed that the Germans had devised a system of battle tactics which abolished the value of trench systems as then heavy guns had abolished the value of forts nearly four years before. The parallel was again striking but fortunately the end was the same.

Now it is one thing to say that Germany has lost the chance to win a military decision in this war and another to say she has lost the war. Still a third statement is the declaration that we, the nations which are allied against Germany have won the struggle. This last is emphatically not the case. Nor is it true that Germany has lost the war. She has lost the chance of winning it on the battlefield she has other methods and they are bound to be used now to the uttermost.

Germany was beaten in 1916 at the close of the campaign of that year and she knew it. Accordingly the kaiser proposed peace not because he desired peace, not because his proposal was intended to be the basis of ... but because he reasoned that a proposal of peace might disarm his foes and accomplish what his armies had failed to bring about namely a real German victory. His calculations were amazingly correct. His peace proposals threw his foes into confusion immediately led to Russia's collapse temporarily brought Italy to the point of seeming impotence and enabled the German army to open the campaign of 1918 with a new chance to secure a military decision.

Beyond all doubt ... will now repeat his strategy of ... shall have a new ... within a brief time ... ment that some ... tively unimportant ... such as still remain ... give a temporary ... We shall have to be on our guard therefore both in the matter of pessimism and optimism. At the present moment there is a dangerous degree of optimism afloat. The reaction from the depression of recent months is natural and proper, but it should not lead to exaggerated hopes. We have blocked the enemy ... and we have defeated him in the crucial battle of this campaign. The enemy and we have defeated him in this year was to prevent the Germans from winning the European phase of the war. ... and ... will take one or two more years for us to win it by our own efforts. The second Marne was like the first a great and successful battle of arrest, but nations are not conquered by battles of arrest. Such battles merely save the nation or nations attacked. There remains the urgent task of beating the enemy, and he remains despite his recent reverse still unbeaten in the larger sense.

A World of Oil.

From the Omaha World-Herald.

A professor lecturing to his class in chemistry recently remarked that the whole world was soaked in oil. It was not only in the earth, but was found in a great portion of the vegetable kingdom. He must have been reading some of the consular reports on the production of vegetable oil in Hull, England, which seems to be the greatest producer of vegetable oil in the world. The production comes from imported material. Hundreds of thousands of tons of oil are produced there. While the larger part comes from cotton seed there are a score or more sources of supply.

Other seeds from which oil is extracted are flax, castor beans, soy beans, rape seed and sunflower. Many different kinds of nuts contain large amounts of oil. Coconut oil coming from that source is very costly, yet considerable is extracted for certain purposes. Besides the pure oil an immense business is done in oil meals for cattle feeding purposes. Lately some of these meals have been used for human food. There being no discriminative tax on oleomargarine in England like there is in this country, large amounts of these vegetable oils enter into that product. The best grades sell in England at less than half price of butter, and many of the people say that they like it better. Recently in reply to a question in the house of commons it was stated that the weekly United Kingdom output of margarine reached 5,039 tons in February, 1918. The food controller fixed the price of best margarine at 21 cents a pound.

Gallantry.

From the Chicago Daily News.

An amusing little incident occurred a few days ago in a crowded tramcar on the Dublin to Bla-Krock line. A lady wishing a seat looked smilingly round. A portly handsome old gentleman immediately stood up and politely offered the lady his place. "Oh, you're a jewel, sir," said the lady as she bowed her acknowledgments for the courtesy. "Not at all, madam," replied the gentleman with an engaging smile. "I'm a jeweler. I have just set the jewel. Could anything be more gallant than that?"

Killing Places.

A Frenchman was waiting at a railroad station in Ireland when a couple of natives sat down beside him.

"Sure, Pat, it's dewy to-day," said one. "Sure, Pat, it's dewy to-day," said the other. "It is, and I'm on me way back to Kilcarrick." "Sure, Pat, it's dewy to-day," said the other. "It's ... been down to Kilmallock ... before I ... Would that I were ... dly ...

Children Cry For Fletcher's CASTORIA

Mrs. John W. Derrick, of Lexington, S. C., says: "My children cry for Castoria, I could not do without it."

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gaines, of Ripley, Tenn., say: "We enclose our baby's picture hoping it will induce some poor tired mothers to give your Castoria a trial. We have used it since baby was two weeks old."

Mrs. J. G. Parman, of Nashville, Tenn., says: "The perfect health of my baby is due to your Castoria—the first and only medicine he has taken. He is never satisfied with one dose, he always cries for more."

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Johnson, of Stevens Point, Wis., say: "When our baby was two weeks old he cried so much we did everything for him, then got some Castoria and he is now strong and fat. We would not be without it, and are very thankful to you."

WHY SHE COULDN'T SEE HIM

Hubby Didn't Happen Just at the Time to Be in Wife's Line of Vision.

The young lawyer was defending a man accused of burglary, and the woman whose house had been entered was under examination.

"Madame," asked he, "what time of night was it when you saw the prisoner in your room?"

"Close to two o'clock in the morning," came the reply.

"Was there a light in the room?"

"No."

"Could you see your husband at your side?"

"No."

The lawyer frowned impressively and shot a side glance at the jury as he fairly thundered "Then please, madame, explain how it was you could see the prisoner and yet not see your husband?"

"My husband was the quiet answer, "was at the club."

SHE GOT WHAT SHE WANTED

Young Irish Girl Resourceful When Unaccustomed Word Had Temporarily Slipped Her Memory.

In his amusing book, "Old Irish Life," Mr. L. M. Caldwell tells a story of a young peasant woman—Sally Sweeny—who used to walk into Galway twice a week to do shopping for his family.

She could neither read nor write, yet she never made a mistake with any of the messages that were intrusted to her.

Once, however, her memory did fail her. One of the ladies of the family had commissioned her to bring back a yard of satin, and the unaccustomed word had slipped out of Sally's recollection.

She did not allow herself to be beaten, however, and made an effort to recall the word; so she went into the principal shop in Galway still thinking hard.

"What is't that ye call the divil?" she asked, "with it's not divil that ye say to him?"

"Is it Satan you would be meaning?" asked the astonished draper.

"The very wan," said Sally, delightedly; "an' ye'll give me a yard."

Some Exceptions.

Secretary McAdoo, in commenting on the sales of War Savings stamps, took occasion to remark upon the splendid work done by the pretty motion-picture actresses.

"It's a funny thing," he remarked, "but I know of hundreds of cases where men had refused to buy stamps from other men, but later bought them from the screen beauties. I heard of one, however, who was an exception:

"'Why didn't you buy your War Saving stamps from me?' asked the girl, and added, "some other girl was prettier, I suppose?"

"'On the contrary, I bought mine of a girl who was plain enough so that I could get a little credit for being a patriot.'"

Keep Yourself Fit

You can't afford to be laid up with sore, aching kidneys in these days of high prices. Some occupations bring kidney troubles; almost any work makes weak kidneys worse. An Iowa Case

Sever Olson, blacksmith, Maple Ave., Decorah, Iowa, says: "Many years of hard work as a blacksmith weakened my kidneys and brought on attacks of backache. When I stooped, sharp pains caught me in the small of my back. The kidney secretions were in bad shape, too. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they fixed me up in fine shape. Whenever I have taken them since, they have done good work."

SAVE SEED CORN FOR TWO YEARS

Governor Harding Calls On Iowa Farmers To Safeguard Their Big Crops Against Future Failure

Governor Harding has issued a proclamation to the farmers of this and every other county in Iowa asking them to go into the fields some time between Sept. 16th and 28th and save enough seed for two years' planting. He reminds them of the very serious seed shortage of the past year and suggests that the best way to safeguard Iowa's biggest crop is to save an abundance of seed in a good year like this.

The slogan of the seed saving campaign is "Every farmer 100 per cent That means that an effort is to be made to get every farmer in the State to pick his seed in the field and to pick enough for two years In this county this campaign is in charge of the County Agent and the County Farm Bureau and its co operators The co-operators are active men, one from each school district of the county. They will carry the call of the governor to every individual farmer in the county; no man will be missed The same plan will be worked throughout the state with about 15,000 co-operators in all

To make sure that the county does its part, the campaign will be followed by a careful census about October 1st Every co-operator will visit every farm in his school district and ask whether seed has been saved or not and how much. He will report to the County Farm Bureau and it will report to the state authorities This census will show exacly how the farmers of every community in Iowa stand on saving seed corn

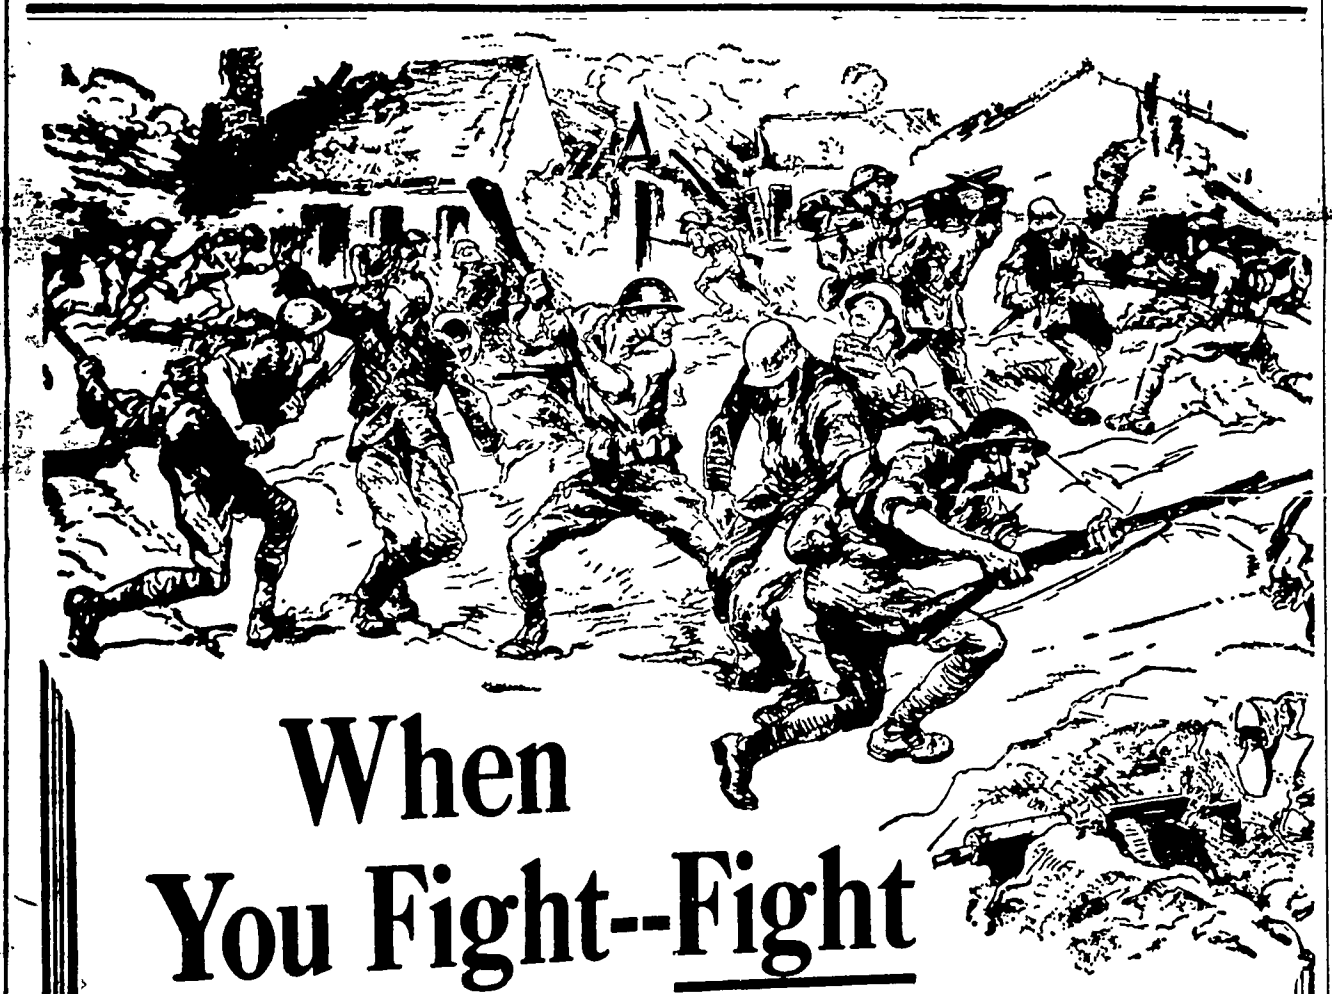
Women as a Power.

"If ever the time comes when women shall come together simply and purely for the benefit of mankind, it will be a power such as the world has never dreamed of"—Matthew Arnold.



When You Fight--Fight

FIGHT as these American soldiers fought in the streets of Fismes. "They covered themselves with glory," the papers say. Of course they did—they are Americans.

They met the finest of the enemy's troops in a terrific hand-to-hand struggle. They used their guns—their bayonets—their bare fists. Every American soldier went after his man desperately, fearlessly, persistently, with one great driving purpose—to whip that Prussian Guard, to silence its machine guns—to win!

It's a pretty good way to fight—this American way. It wins battles over there, it will win a splendid victory over here—if we fight when we fight—if we buy Liberty Bonds to our utmost.

When you fight—fight! When you buy—buy!

"A Good Place to Do Your Banking"

THE "TEA PARTY" AND THE KAISER

By LOUIS ALBERT LAMB.

My grandsire painted red his hide
In ancient Mohawk style,
And crept down to the Mystic side
To wait a little while.

Then other Yanks in redskin guise
Collected at the bay
And took the tea ship by surprise
And threw the tea away.

Old George the Third was much averse
To freedom for the Yanks;
His taxes were a deadly curse—
He taxed and gave no thanks.

But when the Mohawk Boston men
Dumped all the tea to port
King George began to think again
And arm for warlike "sport."

He sent his Hessians over here
To kill Cap. Barker's boys.
To burn the school and meeting house
And other such annoys;

But when they came to Bunker Hill
That jolly day in June
And Warren met 'em with a will
They piped another tune.

The Yanks have got a job today
That's worthy of the race;
The kaiser treads a rocky way
And spars to save his face.

But all the Yanks have gone to France
En route for old Berlin:
If we buy Bonds at every chance
You bet the Yanks will win!

Our grandsires dished King George's will
And salted all his tea.
Our boys will do the same for Bill,
Kaiser of Germany!

The only way to push the work
And make Berlin our own,
Is this: Get busy, do not shirk
But BUY THE "FIGHTING LOAN."

FARMERS AT START OF TWO VITAL CAMPAIGNS

Tillers of the Soil Must Prepare for Next Year's Harvest and Have "Fighting Loan."

Farmers of the United States, whose work the last twelve months in fortifying the food lines of the allies has been of such supreme importance, are now at the start of two vital campaigns—preparing for the 1919 wheat harvest and for the "Fighting Loan." The wheat harvest of 1919 will be the Liberty Wheat Harvest and the government has asked again for the cooperation and support of the wheat producers to sow 47,500,000 or more acres of winter wheat this fall to guarantee against possible partial crop failure next year. Uncle Sam knows from past performance that the American farmer again will "come across" at the call. The United States grain grower now realizes fully that he is the main line of defense in the allied food army, and he is proud of his position and of his achievements. Without the essential food reserves there will never be a grand smash that will overwhelm the destroyers of the world's peace, but with the American farmer holding the line, the food reserves will be on call, and the grand smash will come as surely as the American nation is in the war.

Coincident with the beginning of the campaign for the Liberty Wheat Harvest will be the inauguration of the campaign for the Fourth Liberty Loan—the "Fighting Loan." Both of these campaigns are vitally important. Both will be backed to the limit by the farmer. Both will bear positive witness to the enemy of the solidarity and singleness of purpose of this country; both will heighten the morale of the allied peoples and give a conquering spirit of confidence to the allied armies; and both will enable Uncle Sam to throw the whole weight of his mighty resources against the cracking German line, so that the harvesting of the Liberty Wheat Crop may indeed be a harvest of freedom, the Hun overthrown, justice and right triumphant, and the world at peace.

WHAT LIBERTY BONDS CAN DO

One fifty-dollar Liberty Bond will pay the United States war bill for 1-10 of a second, or buy 1,000 cartridges, or 100 hand grenades, or 104 rifle grenades, or 37 first aid packets and cases, or 10 bayonets and scabbards, or kits for a platoon, or knives, forks and spoons for a company, or four gas masks. It will feed one soldier for four months, or will feed 100 sailors for a day, or provide life preservers for 10 men or hammocks for 10 sailors, or windproof suits for 10 naval lookouts, or save 1,000 men from smallpox by paying for vaccine, or save 006 men from typhoid fever by paying for their inoculation, or save 180 wounded men from lockjaw by providing antitoxin, or buy 1,000 yards of adhesive tape, or bandage 100 wounds.

A one hundred dollar bond will buy eight 75m. field gun shells or three rifles and their bayonets, or 5 incendiary airplane bombs, or T N T. for the bursting charge of a 14-inch shell. It will clothe a soldier for overseas service, or clothe a sailor It will feed a company of infantry for a day. For the medical department it will provide 25 pounds of ether for anaesthesia, or 145 hot-water bags, or 2,000 surgical needles.

By H. C. Witwer.

(With a genuflection to George M. Cohan.)

Johnny save your mon, save your mon, save your mon!
Help us lick the Hun, lick the Hun, lick the Hun!
Uncle Sam's calling on you and me
For another loan for Liberty!
Hurry right away, get your pay, go today!
Buy bonds by the score, then some more, win the war!
They're not asking much of you, look what our boys in France must do!

Over Here!
Over Here!
We can fight with all our might right over here!
Every Yankee dollar makes the kaiser holler
And fills our boys in France with cheer!
So do your share, make this loan a bear,
For every bond you buy helps over there!
Put this loan over, put this loan over,
And keep on buying till it's over, over there!

ROOKIE GETS HIS INTERVAL

It Lasts Fifteen Minutes and Is Taken Up Most With Conversation.

Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C.—A bunch of new draft men were marching across camp in charge of a sergeant who occasionally sung out sharply "Keep your intervals"—this being a military term used in keeping the squads at the proper distance from each other.

One of the rookies complained to the captain: "Say, Cap, the guy that brung us over here told us to keep our intervals. They haint gimme one yet."

"Is that so!" mused the officer, thoughtfully. "Well, when you get through medical examination tell the personnel officers about it. You must have an interval, by all means. Try to make them give you one before night."

When the rookie demanded savagely later that Captain Coffin, personnel officer, issue him an interval the captain gave him one of fifteen minutes, taken up with very earnest conversation.

TOSS HATS INTO THE WATER

United States Marines Have Superstition That There Is Luck in It.

Port Royal, S. C.—Instead of "tossing their hats in the ring," the U S. marines now toss 'em in the water.

Tossing their hats in the ocean for luck was adopted as one of the marine customs when a gust of wind snatched the chapeau of a recruit while he was crossing the bay off Paris Island, S. C., the marines' training camp. The "lid" sailed gracefully out into space and was soon bobbing merrily on the dancing waves.

Taking the accident as a cue "just for luck" the remainder of the recruits immediately sailed their hats out into the deep, and the bay was soon dotted with hundreds of straw hats.

The boys "passed the word" and now no recruit can expect to have good luck unless he has cast his hat upon the receding tide.

"Ukraine" means border land The Ukrainians are known as little Russians in Russia and as Ruthenians in Austria and Hungary There are about 34,500 000. They have asserted their right to independent existence for centuries. They claim that they own the land from the Carpathians to the Caucasus, extending well north into Russia including part of Russia and Austrian Galicia and part of Russian and Austrian Galicia and part of what is known as Russian Poland When the Poles were conquered by the Russians, the Ukrainians became subject to Russia, but they have never lost their racial sense

The bearing of the prince of Wales all through the war has won him the admiration, respect, and affection of the British peoples, here and overseas We need not enlarge upon this, for every one knows what to say so is no courtly form of words. The prince will go to the oversea countries of the empire when the time comes with the unique advantage of having seen with his own eyes the shining qualities revealed during the ultimate test of character—of the races that make up the empire He will go too, for his own instruction and enlightenment as the king said frankly of him last year when he foreshadowed his visit

It is difficult to realize but it is none the less true, that the Murman coast of Russia which the allied troops recently occupied is as far north as King William land, where Sir John Franklin and his men abandoned the Erebus and the Terror But the gulf stream makes all the climatic difference For that reason it is possible for Quebec to be much farther south than London, and Boston and New York to be on the parallels of latitude of Spain and yet have winters of great severity

MANUFACTURERS MAY GET SUBCONTRACTS

Secretary of Iowa Association Says Hawkeye Concerns Must Be Satisfied.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept 19—George Wrightman, secretary and treasurer of the Iowa Manufacturers Association, believes the government contract problem so far as it relates to Iowa factories, can be solved if the factories of this state will go after subcontracts

He has come to the conclusion, after several visits to Washington, that it will be impossible for Iowa manufacturers to get contracts directly from the government and that the Hawkeye Companies will be forced to take subcontracts in order to save themselves.

This week he will call several meetings of metal and wood manufacturing companies in all the industrial towns of the state to discuss the proposition with them He says there are any number of large companies holding government contracts which will be glad to give subcontracts for parts that they are not in position to make advantageously

Peace? Huh! Just Ask Boys at Front How They Feel About

BY LOWELL MELLETT.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the British Armies in France, Sept. 18.—When Austria's peace proposal became known here I asked a high officer, in a position to know, what the sentiment was throughout the army, in his opinion.

He grinned.

I asked a general who had just finished dinner.

He grinned.

I asked a private just back from the front line.

He grinned.

Each said that Austria's move was German inspired, the private putting it: "I don't know anything about Austria, but it's easy to see the fix Germany is in on this front. She is whipped and she is squeaking."

The general's view was slightly different.

"We can't say yet that Germany is beaten," he said, "but she can see defeat coming. This is a military move. Germany's hope, so far as the British are concerned, is to prevent being compelled to evacuate the strong Hindenburg defenses this fall. She wants to keep us in the barren, unshattered ground this side of the line all winter."

Recently captured letters and prisoners' statements show the utter depression of the German troops. A number of letters openly talk 'revolution'—a word that a German's vocabulary heretofore was not supposed to contain. In contrast to this attitude one has only to see the British armies afield and on the roads. The armies seem to grow bigger weekly. There are more men, horses, guns and tanks

Rejection of Peace Offer Will Cause Renewal of Huns' Ret

BY J. W. T. MASON.
United Press War Expert.

New York, Sept. 18.—President Wilson's rapid fire counter attack against the Austro-Hungarian peace offensive will soon start Von Hindenburg retreating once more out of western France

It is to be expected that the kaiser will hold fast a little longer until he sees there is absolutely no hope of any of the allies being trapped into a secret conference for ending the war; but President Wilson has made inevitable the resumption of the west front retirement. Von Hindenburg must now see he cannot tarry long if he does not desire the American invasion of Germany to go by default. The American advance at St Mihiel has had an effect not only on the battle front west of Metz, but also along the entire line running throughout Lorraine and into Alsace to the Swiss border. There are indications that Von Hindenburg has begun already the reinforcement of certain vulnerable positions in this area and is preparing to abandon outposts now lightly held at the first sign of an American advance.

Patrol encounters in Alsace and Lorraine are being [illegible] and raids by the Germans to [illegible] formation concerning the disp[illegible] the American troops are espe[illegible] ticeable in Alsace The Germ[illegible] eral staff cannot fail to be deeply impressed by the [illegible] among the Ame[illegible] units [illegible] pating in the St Mihiel offen[illegible] some removed [illegible] in the Marne also have been rolled by the [illegible] that scarcely any American have taken part in the Pic[illegible] Flanders drives though large were known to have been [illegible] cently

CROWDER RUSHES CLASSIFICATION

Gives Boards But 100 Days to Complete Big Program—Allied Plans Require Haste.

One hundred days is the time limit set by Provost Marshal General Crowder for the classification of 13,000,000 men who registered under the new age limits September 12. In communications to governors of states and to local boards the provost marshal general's immense plan is outlined.

The requirements of the allied war program and the approaching exhaustion of Class 1 under the first registration impose the inevitable condition of promptness and celerity in disposing of the task, says the communication addressed to governors of states. An operation which required 15 months under the first registration must now be compressed into the space of 100 days.

Must Keep Up.

A full knowledge of conditions of program is each local and district board should be available at all times at the state headquarters and a report system will be organized for that purpose, upon the recommendation of General Crowder.

"The state board should be in position to know specifically just where the short comings are in any part of the state, their causes and what measures of pressure should be brought to bear in remedying that district," says the order.

"I do not hesitate to emphasize the above time limit as being not only necessary but also feasible, because you have demonstrated already your capacity to do this task in that amount of time," says General Crowder's communication, received by Sioux City local boards today

Like First Draft.

MAYBE THIS IS WHY LETTER WAS DELAYED

BY WEBB MILLER
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris (by mail).—Every day tens of thousands of letters from home to the American soldiers in France are delayed or sent astray through lack of sufficient or correct addresses. In a large percentage of the cases, the mail is finally delivered, but after days and weeks of delay.

During the month of June 21 per cent of mail arriving in France for the army was either insufficiently or incorrectly addressed. More than 700,000 letters and thousands of sacks of paper mail were delayed in this way.

Instead of being rushed direct to their destination, these letters had to be forwarded to the central postoffice in the interior of France where clerks went through directories of the expeditionary forces in an effort to ascertain the correct address. This task is terribly difficult because of the duplication of names in the army. For instance there are 157 John Smiths in Henry Browns, 94 James Wilsons in Henry Jacksons, and so on according to statistics compiled by the postoffice department. Eighty per cent of the mail addressed June mail was mis-addressed. Somewhere in France or "A. E. F."

The postoffice department advises persons writing to soldiers in France to include in the address the regiment and company number and if possible, the A. P. O. (Army Post Office) number. The following form of address should be used to insure quickest delivery:

Pvt. John Smith,
Co. A, 95th Regiment Infantry,
American Expeditionary Forces,
A. P. O. ... (number).

Otherwise the mail is subject to indefinite delay, while the mail clerks are hunting for the correct address.

MINOTTO "MODEL ALIEN."

From the Chicago Tribune.

Count James Minotto, son in law of Louis F. Swift, is said by those who have visited the federal internment camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., to have made a place for himself in that prison, where he is regarded as the model alien enemy.

There is little to do in Camp Oglethorpe, more particularly in "millionaire row," where are kept the prominent victims of federal displeasure, wherefore Count Jimmie," as he has come to be known among guards and fellow prisoners, makes the best of the situation by being uniformly cheerful. He has acquired a deep athletic tan and also acquired a deep athletic tan and he never misses his daily promenade.

Countess Minotto, who was Miss Ida May Swift, frequently visits her husband, but not for long, and always in the presence of a guard. It is not permitted for visitors to be alone with prisoners.

The harvesting of crops in Canada is done mainly by women who have enlisted in the farm service department of that country.

FAMOUS FAILURES.

From the Philadelphia North American.

Some day when you are mending that great three-cornered rent in your little Johnnie's trousers and discover tucked away in one of the pockets a ragged garter snake, a tin tobacco box, a handful of [illegible] stones and a large ball of putty don't [illegible] him to you and read him a lecture on untidiness.

He is satisfying his normal taste for collecting. He is looking about to find his hobby. History shows us many a man that would have gotten his start in the world much sooner had his relatives taken pains to find out what it was that interested him most.

Look at poor Oliver Goldsmith. Who knows how many more beautiful poems he might have left to us had he been allowed to follow his natural bent from the beginning instead of taking a try at all the professions one after another an making a fizzle of them all. No one thought of encouraging him to write for his living.

An uncle advised him to study for the ministry first and he did for two years, but when he made his application at the bishop's he appeared so gayly attired and seemed so flippant it was refused. Then he became a tutor in a private family but he didn't stay there long for he quarreled with his employer over a game of cards.

The same uncle came forward again and sent him to Dublin with $200 to study law. He gambled away that money before he had even entered the law school. Then once again the long suffering uncle came to the rescue but this time insisting that he take up the medical school.

He failed as a doctor he was a dire... He succeeded in getting an appointment as a physician to the East India company but it was revoked before he was able to do any damage. Even when he presented himself as a surgeon in a naval hospital he failed to pass the examination. But we would never call Oliver Goldsmith a failure.

A great many other men became doctors early in life but gave up the profession for something more congenial when they discovered that their genius lay in other directions.

When the parents of Henrik Ibsen, the great Norwegian dramatist, lost their money they apprenticed him to an apothecary for seven years. His intense hatred for his work left a mark on him forever.

He was considered a chronic grouch. He walked about the town like a mystery sealed with seven seals, a friend said of him. Later he decided that he could do better in the realm of literature than in that of medicine and he did.

Schiller, the author of "William Tell," was another unsuccessful physician before he found himself. He was a medical officer in the Prussian Guard was expelled from his regiment, after serving less than three years, for incompetency.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle was not incompetent as a physician. He followed his profession at South Sea in the 80s, and for his services as commandant of a field hospital in the Boer war he received the thanks of the government. But after he became known as the creator of the famous "Sherlock Holmes," he abandoned his profession and devoted his entire time to writing.

Robert Gatling, the inventor of the famous gun that bears his name, got interested in medicine when he had smallpox and entered the university and got his degree. But it failed to keep his interest long. When the Civil war broke out he went back to his inventions and perfected the Gatling gun. As one has said, it has probably destroyed more lives than he had ever hoped to save through his profession.

Dr. Roberts Bridges, the poet laureate of England, had a flourishing practice in Midlands about 25 years ago.

But he gave it all up while he was still a young man in order to devote himself to the writing of plays, poems and essays, and those charming verses that have won him such a high place in literature.

AIRPLANE OBSERVERS MUST BE WELL TRAINED

Behind British Lines in France—(by mail). Every British and American airman nowadays undergoes a special course of training in counter-camouflage. He is told all the tricks of the German camouflage artist to deceive the entente airmen, and his eye is carefully trained to penetrate all the devices of the enemy.

It is diamond cut diamond all the time in the conflict between the German [illegible] and the allied observers. Troops may be moved on roads canopied by camouflaged canvas but there is camouflage also even in the business of moving troops in the open where the German practices a simple little deception by varying the space between one rank and the next so that in a long column the observer's estimate of the number on the move is hopelessly inaccurate.

The airplane observer of today has to combine the wits of a first rate detective with the eyes of an eagle. He has first to see, then to deduce, and has to be certain that he is not making deductions from falsified evidence.

A heavy howitzer is sometimes converted into a woodland growth and a grove of bushwood erected about it. But suppose a gun is seen nakedly plain, with well worn tracks leading to it, and as an airplane appears above, flashes coming from the gun. The obvious deduction is that here is a dummy gun, with dummy flashes, intended to draw the bombs of the airplane and the fire of the British batteries. But it may be the real gun after all, exposed for purposes of deception.

Troops hiding in woods are well concealed from an airplane observer, so long as they are motionless. But let one man move, and detection of the whole party may follow.

MOUNTAIN WA... ARE SUITS AMERICANS

Fighting on the Heights of Alsace Is Like That Done By Their Forefathers.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the Americans in Alsace-Lorraine (by mail).—American soldiers are becoming mountaineers of Alpine skill up in the heights of Alsace, where they are holding long stretches of the line. They measure the line in three ways in Alsace as the crow flies, horizontally and vertically. As the crow flies the line across Alsace is comparatively short with the horizontal twists north and south, east and west, it is longer, but when the vertical measurement is made up and down the mountain sides, this Alsatian line becomes enormous.

The doughboys become mountaineers with facility. They like fighting in the mountain peaks because it is individual and calls for ingenuity as well as courage. Some of the peaks on which they are opposing the Germans are over 4,000 feet high. It is always cool and often cold up in the tree covered peaks. The lines run up and down these peaks and through forests so dense that only constant vigilance prevents ambush parties. The Americans have shown a peculiar adaptability to this warfare, which is nearer the type their forefathers waged in America than any other phase of the great war.

You get to the American positions only after crossing high ridges along which ran the French-German boundary before the war. Then you drop abruptly down the German side of the ridges into Alsatian towns where the natives speak German as well as French, but deny that the former is German.

"It's not German, but Alsatian," they tell you firmly. "We don't speak boche." But the German you learned in school enables you to converse freely with them.

The little Alsatian villages are clean and distinctly different from those over the line in France. Signs everywhere are written in both German and French, and in many places English has been added, out of courtesy to the Americans who go through to the lines up the mountain sides. Alsatian architecture adds attractive gables to the houses, which are more often surrounded by attractive yards and lawns than one finds in strictly French France.

Down in a little town on the road to Thann, a place buried between two towering ridges, you stop for lunch. The woman in charge speaks German and is not displeased at finding you speak it too, so long as you do not call it German and agree that the language is Alsatian not German. She assures you it is a bad day, a meatless day in France and there is not much to eat. But you may have what they have, she says, if you will but wait. Then, while you anticipate eggs, with little else, her German speaking assistants bring on four courses of meat, eggs, and Alsatian cake for dessert, more than you can find anywhere in France.

"The Americans must eat well by us, for they will win Alsace back to France," she tells you, by way of explanation.

The outstanding feature of the line in Alsace is the system of strongholds and observation posts which take the place of a continuous line for both sides. There is a line of barbed wire, which the Germans have attempted to electrify in some places running the length of Alsace up and down, and through the pine and fir forests or through meadows colored with flowers. Streams and waterfalls and all the means at the disposal of nature tend to hide the ravages of war.

In these mountains you at length find the Americans learning the means which both the allies and the Germans have come to use to wage war here, and devising new ways of fighting. Around mountain peaks strongholds in woods or in rocks are built from which patrols operate usually in force through the woods. These patrols cross No Man's Land often without knowing it. It is comparatively easy to penetrate the line here, but it is harder to get back undetected, owing to density of vegetation.

It is an artillery warfare in this area. Big guns operate on strong points and villages from the rear, and little mountain artillery guns do the close range work. Machine guns play across from both sides, fairly well hidden in woods. Into this the Americans are introducing a more aggressive element, constant patrol raids.

From observation posts the doughboy can see German positions for miles, and farther back can see German towns. On clear days he can see through the glasses every train that enters some of the cities, and can count the people on the streets. It puts one idea into the average doughboy's head. "Just let us loose and put some more Americans in here with us, and we'll take those towns," said one of them. "We could get them before the Germans know we're started." That is an optimistic idea, but it is not an idle boast.

Back in the towns and secluded spots less subject to bombardment you find still more doughboys, fresh from the states, eager to get into the mountainous trenches and hold a few feet of the long line now assigned to the Americans. The doughboys went in brigaded with the French at first, but were soon given their own sectors.

Farther down the line to the northwest, in Lorraine, the problem is much the same, except that the mountains are less steep. Here it is hills the doughboys hold, and in numerous places the younger forests have been shot out by artillery fire from both sides, leaving a definitely formed No Man's Land, which is usually well controlled by the Americans. As you approach the Vosges area the battle line again crosses back into France, and it is again a war of defense.

Americans in Alsace consider themselves lucky to be where they are. "This is the best part of France we have seen," said one intelligent doughboy, and others echoed his sentiments, "No wonder the Germans wanted to steal the country. But we'll run them out in time if they'll just let us go."

THE SPEED OF DOGS.

How fast can a dog run? "Trout and Stream," which is an authority on out-of-doors matters, says:

"Eskimo dogs can travel 45 miles in five hours, according to an authority, who relates that he once drove his dog team seven miles in half an hour. Ordinary domestic dogs, at full speed, run at the rate of from 33 to 49 feet a second; setters and pointers, about 18½ to 21 7-10 miles an hour, and they can maintain this speed for two, or even three hours. Foxhounds are very fast, and in a recent trial one of them beat a thoroughbred horse, covering four miles in six and a half minutes. Greyhounds can run at the rate of 59 to 75 feet a second. Horses cannot exceed 53 feet a second."

IS MOST INTERESTING MAN IN SWITZERLAND

Former Head of Krupp Works Could Not Square Conscience With Militarist's Acts.

Gumligen, Switzerland (by mail).—One of the most interesting characters in Switzerland today is Dr. Wilhelm Muehlon, whose recent revelations of German political and diplomatic secrets of the day before the war—at a time when he was in confidential touch with the high councils of the imperial German government—led to official surveillance over his movements and finally to his expulsion from his native land.

His disclosures, which have created sensations in entente capitals, have been regarded in many quarters as faithful interpretations of events which contributed to the outbreak of the war and as conclusive proof that the German emperor's machinations were responsible for the world conflict. They led to a German government statement in the reichstag that he was not pathologically responsible, and today he lives the life of a retired farmer on the outskirts of a small Swiss village. Once he was director of the great Krupp war establishment—a position he took at the request of the German foreign office—and a conspicuous figure in civil and official circles.

A man of 45 years, tall and broad shouldered, with yellow Saxon hair and a small mustache, Dr. Muehlon, challenger of the German emperor's own version that he endeavored to maintain peace from time to time addresses his compatriots across the border with vigorous and independent views which he declares a great many Germans share secretly. His personal appearance shows none of the nervous agitation which the German authorities have sought to attribute to him. He declares he has never had to consult a doctor, physically and mentally he seems a man of iron.

Dr. Muehlon was asked how he could be an opponent of militarism and war particularly the present struggle, and at the same time be a director of Krupp's, the greatest war machine in the world.

"That appears to be inconsistent," he said, "but the explanation is simple. I have always been opposed to war, and even to large combinations like Kruppe, as my inclinations were toward the welfare and equality of the people and the adjustment of differences by reason instead of by force. But it was felt desirable to have on the Krupp directorate various shades of opinion, even though not in strict accordance with the war activities of the establishment, so that all views could be expressed and something like common agreement obtained on the many vexing problems presented. To that end I came into the organization, at first in a subordinate position and later in the directorate. It was stipulated, however, that my activities should be mainly devoted to the branch not engaged in war work, for Krupps has two branches of about equal size, one devoted to war work and the other to work unconnected with war. Insensibly, however, my work led to my being consulted on war arrangements having an international bearing, such as the armament of Turkey."

Dr. Muehlon went on to tell of his growing dislike to the war work and his final determination to give up all association with it even at the sacrifice of one of the most important business careers in Germany. Dr. Muehlon has brought with him a large fund of material bearing on the causes leading up to the war. Much of it is documentary with letters from persons and organizations in high position. This may reach the public in due time, and become a part of the historical data bearing on the responsibility for bringing on the war. For the present, however, Dr. Muehlon said he is avoiding further controversial questions which would be likely to arise if this mass of data was made public at once. The only departure has has made from this policy is in assembling a pamphlet of day by day notes made at the outset of the war giving his personal impressions on various phases of the war. This is not in line of disclosures or revelations, but rather of vigorous personal criticism of German official and military methods, he said. One of his references to German conditions is as follows:

"The general feeling of the people since the outbreak of the war is that German diplomacy has failed everywhere. Many assert that it has been due to a day to day policy of opportunism without far reaching plans. My opinion is that it could not have done better with the controlling influence and continual interference exercised by the kaiser. Only he who bowed to every wish of the kaiser could retain his place, and all wanted to stay. There are few people in Germany with convictions so strong that they will give up magistracies and offices in order to uphold their convictions. They all ask: 'How shall I do to get on and retain favor?' not 'Does it correspond with my own judgment.'"

Dr. Muehlon takes a gloomy view of what would become of Europe if Germany secured the ascendance. "With Germany sovereign over Europe," he says, "there would be a general scattering and flight of European races and population to get away from German rule. The remotest corners of Europe would become asylums of refuge. An immense shifting of life's forces would occur. And with Germany paramount in Europe there would be a real migration to the overseas countries."

TEXAS WOMAN SHERIFF.

From the Washington Times.

Coleman, Tex.—Mrs. John G. Bannister is the new sheriff of Coleman County. All who know her say that when she buckles on her six-shooter and goes out to make an arrest the offender had better make peaceful surrender if he knows what is good for him. It is not meant by this that Mrs. Bannister is a woman of the rough type. On the contrary, she is unassuming, quiet, and prepossessing. She belongs to a stock of westerners that does not know fear when it comes to doing official duty.

Mrs. Bannister's husband, Captain Bannister, who died recently, was sheriff of Coleman County for many years. His wife assisted him in his work in many ways, and is thoroughly familiar with the details of the office. It was but natural that she should be elevated to the vacant position, her friends say.

HE BACKED HIM.

"Ever back a horse in your life?"

"Once only."

"Win anything?"

"No, you see I backed this horse through a shop window and had to pay $50 damages."

GARDEN IN MIDDLE OF CITY

At one of the busiest corners of New York city—Union Square—a model back-yard garden is growing as a demonstration of what may be done with a small plot to relieve the threatened food shortage, the Scientific American states. Two squares, measuring 20-by-20 and 20-by-40 feet, are cultivated scientifically by John McCarthy, the gardener in charge of the square; and the cultivator is always ready to lay aside his hoe to answer the questions of prospective planters.

The ground of the model garden was correctly prepared and fertilized and is planted to potatoes, cabbages, lettuce and onions; in fact, just the variety of vegetables that the average householder would care to raise. The operation of planting and tending the garden has been observed by thousands, and a large proportion of the spectators will surely benefit by this example. In addition to explaining the art of back-yard farming, Mr. McCarthy gives little pamphlets to all who are interested, with complete directions for starting a garden plot and tending it to produce results. This is essential, for the ignorance of the average city dweller regarding agriculture is limitless.

The demonstration garden, a project of Park Commissioner Cabot Ward, is an object lesson to the throngs of commuters who pass it daily. The sight of the growing things that look so fresh and appetizing is enough to make anybody want to shed his coat and dig in a garden of his own.

To Teach Care of Game.

For the first time in the history of this or any other country the science of the breeding and preserving of game birds will be taught in one of America's great universities. This is made possible by the passage of a bill in the New York legislature appropriating $15,000 for the purchase of a farm in Tompkins county, New York, on which it is provided experimental and practical breeding of game may be carried on. It is further provided that the trustees of Cornell university shall accept, maintain and administer the farm and that it shall form a part of the New York State College of Agriculture "for the purpose of conducting practical experiments in and giving instruction on the breeding of game." It is specifically provided that the farm shall be run in close co-operation with the state conservation commission and that its surplus product shall annually be placed at the disposal of the commission.

Detached Motor Barge.

The first stage of a striking experiment in inland water transport was completed with the arrival in London of two barges laden with coal from collieries in the north of England. The barges were propelled for 160 miles by a detachable motor. The new device consists of a four-cylinder, 17-horse power marine engine, capable of hauling two boats with a load of 100 tons. It is mounted on the top of the cabin, and controlled from the helm. Petrol is employed for starting, and paraffin when running. The engine and attachments can be transshipped from one barge to another in a few minutes, and it is stated that its use means economy in time and money by comparison with towing by horses.

Savory Rice.

Add one cupful of rice to six cupfuls of boiling water and cook for five minutes. Then drain. Fry out six slices of bacon in a saucepan and in it fry one small onion. Then add rice and stir gently with fork until all the fat is absorbed. Add one cupful of strained tomato pulp, season with one-half tablespoonful salt and one-fourth teaspoonful paprika. Then add two and a half cupfuls boiling water and cook until rice has absorbed all the liquid and is very tender.

BOAR SALE

Wednesday, October 2

ON YANKEE RIDGE FARM 1 MILE NORTH OF MAIN ST., ALGONA

23 HEAD OF PUREBRED CHESTER WHITE SPRING BOARS 23

They are the big stretchy fellows; high backs, deep bodies, good length, and have bone to spare. THEY ARE THE 1918 MODEL.

When I started this herd I had a certain type of hog in my mind. I wanted the big high back, mellow kind. I spent time and money looking for foundation stock. When I found a sow that just suited me and bred to the right boar, I bought her regardless of price. In this way I got nine sows together that look mighty good on Yankee Ridge, in fact they would look good anywhere or in any company.

These sows did just what I expected them to do. They produced the best crop of spring pigs I ever saw.

In the nine sows I got several different blood lines. Two of them were sired by Combination Rex, by Old Combination 2nd, one of them out of Florence 2nd, mated to Joy Boy. Another out of White Lady, that great producing sow, owned at Knoxville, Iowa. Several sows strong in the blood of old Chief Keokuk. Others trace back to Eden Valley Queen and Queen Viola. They were bred to Chickasaw Kossuth, that 1100 pound boar owned at Cylinder. Industry Big Bone, one of the best boars of the breed today. Highland Model, surely a quality hog, Frank Evans, by old Frank and Highland Boy, by Highland Model.

The 23 boars I offer October 2nd are from the above matings. I will be glad to have you come out that day. If you want a spring boar you will not be disappointed.

The farmers will get high class hogs at farmers' prices and it will be a snap for the breeders. Entire herd double treated.

I will also sell two registered sows with their fall litters.

Lunch at 12 o'clock—sale begins at one o'clock.

PLAN TO BE WITH US OCTOBER 2nd.

At Yankee Ridge you will find no miser,
We are raising pigs to beat the kaiser.

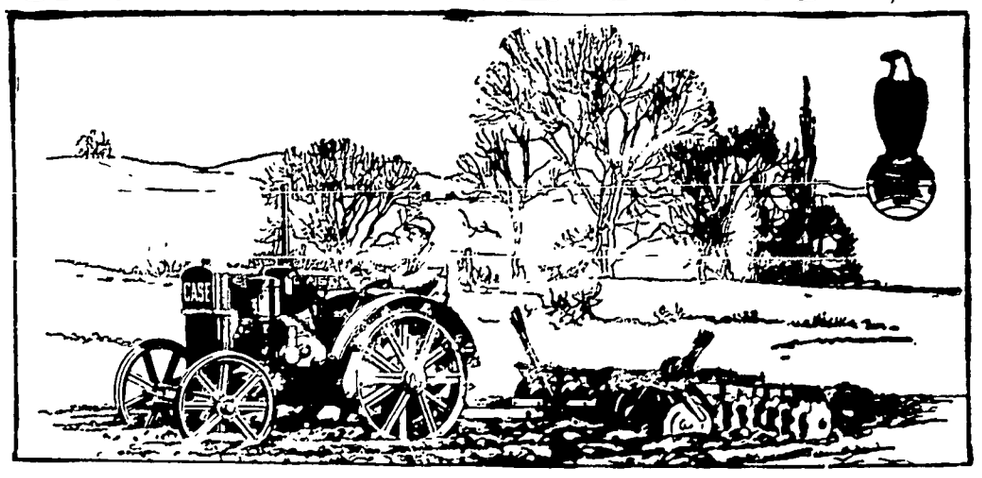
CASE KEROSENE TRACTORS



Do Not Pack the Soil

Case 9-18 Features

1—Pulls two plows anywhere a good team can pull one plow. Two speeds forward, 2¼ miles and 3½ miles per hour, and reverse. Delivers 33⅓ per cent more drawbar horsepower than its rating.

2—Weighs but little more than team of horses. Turning radius, 11 feet.

3—Has 4-cylinder Case valve-in-head motor—head removable. Burns kerosene successfully and economically. Efficient air strainer prevents dust and grit entering cylinders.

4—All-steel gears, enclosed and running in oil. Hyatt Roller Bearings throughout.

5—All wheels run on unplowed ground when plowing.

6—Friction clutch pulley with brake, regular equipment. Drives 20x28 Case Thresher fully equipped; Case No. 12 silo filler; Case 17x22 Hay baler and other machines requiring similar power.

YOU need not fear "soil packing" when you take out a Case 9-18 Kerosene Tractor for any operation over plowed ground.

The pressure under the wide-faced drivers is approximately 15 pounds per square inch. With an ordinary farm horse it is about 20 pounds. So this light tractor goes right over plowed ground without miring or injuring the seed-bed if the land is at all fit to work.

The Case 9-18 is economical, too, at such operations. For example, among 1917 tractor tests made by the University of Nebraska it was found that the Case 9-18 Tractor can disc an acre in less than 23 minutes at a fuel cost of 9c (kerosene).

Other jobs can be done quicker, better and cheaper, at big saving over team and man power. This Case 9-18 handles as easily as a team. Its short wheelbase affords a turning radius of only fourteen and one-half feet. We'd like to tell you more about this splendid tractor.

Regulating Fashions.

The general court of Massachusetts passed a law that "No garment shall be made with short sleeves; and women have garments with short sleeves shall not wear them unless the same reach from the arm to the wrist. And if any person whatever shall make a garment for women with sleeves more than half an ell wide (eighteen and a half inches)." If such foolish fashions were passed in our day many women would be law-breaking?

Output of Copper.

The copper mines turned out 1,000,000 pounds of copper in 1912, 100,000 less than in 1911, but the value was $8,502,499 greater.

Buttons Deliberately Came Off.

Harry, age four, was investigating mother's sewing basket while she was busy. Mother told him not to take the buttons off the card, as they would be lost. The little boy continued to play with them; however, and some of the buttons came off the card. "Harry, I told you not to take the buttons off the card. Now you have disobeyed me." "But, mother," said Harry, "I didn't take 'em off. They ist thelibertly came off!"

HELPING FINANCE WAR A PRIVILEGE

Not Only a Duty Which Every Good American Owes His Country at This Time.

AMERICA IS RE-DISCOVERED

Autocratic Rulers of Germany Have Learned That They Cannot Foist Their Theories of Kultur Upon Our Democracy.

By THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice-President of the United States.

A very remarkable thing about America consists in the fact that it does not require discovered, for a country is discovered only when the world knows where it is and what it is. If the world be mistaken in either particular, it remains still an unknown land. Historians say that Columbus discovered it in 1492, and so far as locating its geographical location to the world is concerned that is true. But in 1776 it was rediscovered when the fat headed German who sat on the English throne made the great mistake in the life of the British empire in thinking that he might treat the colonists as he chose.

Dream of World Dominion

The average German junker, if he had any religious sense which rose higher than the mere worship of power would have made a splendid theological professor in those days when it was wittily said of Andover that every five years the professors took a solemn oath to the effect that they had learned nothing in the preceding five years and would learn nothing in the succeeding five. This German hierarchy became obsessed with the idea of world dominion emanating from a great empire in middle Europe. It proceeded with a diplomacy that would have made Machiavelli seek admission into the kindergarten. It organized by an act of the congress of the United States what is known as the German Alliance. Ostensibly a fraternal organization, its underlying purpose was to obtain possession of the schools, colleges and universities of America, and by a course of training from generation to generation teach this people that the individual was nothing, that the state was everything. It thought in forty years it had so divided the American people that there were but two courses open to them, either a ready acquiescence in the purposes and aims of the Imperial German government or in the having of sufficient power at the close of this bloodthirsty and cruel war to collect off the American people a sufficient tribute to indemnify in dollars and cents the vast expenditures of the German empire in the waging of this war and the making of the entire western continent a mere appendage of the German crown.

Now that the war is on some of its leading men boldly disclaim the right of the American government to have any immigration laws whatsoever. They brazenly announce that Columbus discovered America for the world; that the Germans have an unrestricted right to come to America, and if they can get a sufficient number here imbued with their theories of kultur to shift our individualistic democracy into a state autocracy. The Lusitania, the Arabic and the Sussex would never have been sunken, the indignities heaped upon the flag would never have occurred, the brutal and autocratic course of conduct would never have been taken, had their government not imagined its forty years' influence upon the thought and purpose of American life had so weakened the fiber of American citizenship that in the hour of trial it would be as impotent as a leprous hand, or as water spilled upon dry ground that may not be gathered up again.

Peaceful Man Can Fight.

It has rediscovered America. It has found that it was mistaken. It has been suddenly confronted with the fact that the peaceful man is the most dangerous man when he concludes to engage in a fight.

But this fight is not yet won. There are no half dozen courses open to the American people. They must win or they must lose, and if they lose, what was sought to be accomplished by insidious propaganda will be given to them by the mailed fist of the conqueror. Holy Writ declares that all a man hath will he give for his life, but more than a century and a quarter of American life has disclosed that life is not life unless with it goes liberty. We are therefore up against the real thing. We must win or we must be contented to be slaves, despoiled of our houses, our lands, our stocks, our bonds, our mortgages and our money. I am not a graduate of the Wharton School of Finance. I learned my financial system from the Indiana official who felt that he had been a faithful public servant when he made a report in his fiduciary capacity which simply showed that the money was all paid in and all paid out. But with blood in my veins, not a drop of which on either side of the house has landed on this soil since 1776, my idea of what constitutes America in not extent of territory, nor vast resources, nor unlimited power. It is rather that America is the land of opportunity and obligation, of a chance to get on in the world honestly if you know how to get on, and of the duty to see to it that you do not lay an unkind hand upon the chance and opportunity of any other striving son of God.

Sacrifices Necessary.

You we are up against the real thing and the only question is, regardless of your race, your faith, your station in life, are you willing to face it like people who are worthy to be free? Will you hoard your money and take your chance that providence will win this fight for you and save it from the coffers of the German empire? Or will you go in partnership with your government and win it certainly, although your incomes may thereby be lessened. The latter I think is the course of conduct for the wise and patriotic man. There lived in my town in Indiana a man who for 40 years had been a pillar in one of the prominent churches. One day he left it and joined another. Upon being asked what he thought of his new church, he said it was just as good as the old one and a little cheaper. That, I think, ought to be the attitude of mind at the present time. To be a little poorer at the close of this war, and yet to feel that your children and your children's children are safe from the incursion of ambitious and bloodthirsty men is just as good as to take a chance on Heaven winning this war for a people who are willing to win it for themselves, and will be, in my opinion, a good deal cheaper.

To help finance this war is not only a duty, but it is a great privilege. Heretofore you have been political stockholders in this republic. Some of the evils of our politics have arisen from the fact that the interest is purely political and not financial. Now you have a chance to become a financial stockholder in your country. The war of course will be financed, if need be, by the very rich of the country, but it ought not to be, in the interests of the good of the country, for the debt some time must be paid, and if you will all take as many shares as you can in this financial company of yours, it will tend to prudence and economy in the administration of public affairs in the future. It will lessen your taxes, and you and your children as you pay them will feel that you are helping to pay yourselves rather than helping to pay persons who you believe have unjustly profited out of the necessities of this war. You can prevent anybody getting an undue financial advantage out of the indebtedness which this people must contract, if you will do your best. If you will not do your best, and prefer to keep for needless luxuries your little earnings, justice and fair dealing suggest that you do not complain if the rich take the obligations of your government. No man has a right to growl when he has had an equal chance with his fellow men. Put up or shut up.

IN PRAISE OF THRIFT

By Alice Duer Miller, Author of "Are Women People?" Etc.

I heard a lovely lady say
Self-righteously the other day,
That since this war so dark and cruel
Began, she had not bought a jewel—
"At least, not one," she quickly pleaded,
"That was not absolutely needed."

I turned a face with scorn distraught;
"Are ladies people?" was my thought.
And then I thought of all that I
Had bought I did not need to buy—
A Pullman seat, a cake, a fur—
To me, perhaps, as gems to her.

Extravagance, we all concede,
Is buying things we do not need:
But oftentimes, I think you'll grant,
It's buying things we do not want—
Things which we later have to pay
The furnace man to take away.

But Thrift! Ah, think what thrift can do
For foolish folk, like me and you;
Not only keeping us secure
From buying things we can't endure,
But daily teaching us to use
Man's highest gift—the power to choose.

HAS WOODEN LEG; DRAFTED

He Is Taken Before Army Officers at Camp Dodge as a Slacker.

Des Moines, Ia.—Sam Alanko, with a wooden leg, was sent to Camp Dodge as a draft evader from Fort Snelling.

When he was called up before the Camp Dodge officers he limped considerably.

"What's the matter with you?" he was asked.

"I've got a wooden leg," he replied.

It was found that Alanko's left leg had been amputated above the knee and he was equipped with an artificial limb.

"What did you come down here for?" the officer asked.

"It beats me," Alanko replied. "I guess they want me."

VALUABLE CARGO IN PORT

Nine Million Dollars Worth of Egyptian Cotton and Gum Arabic Arrives Safely at Boston.

Boston, Mass.—The most valuable cargo to reach this port in many years was recently discharged at the Boston docks. A conservative value of $9,000,000 has been placed upon it.

The cargo consists of 18,657 bales of Egyptian cotton weighing 13,433,040 pounds, valued at 60 cents a pound; also 3,447 bags of gum arabic, now worth 55 cents a pound. The steamer carrying this cargo was 28 days on the way from Alexandria, Egypt, and passed through the submarine infested waters of the Mediterranean without mishap.

Coal Consumers Organize.

Recent developments in the coal situation in the Philippines, including a shortage in the supply of fuel for the archipelago during the last few months and the increasing use of fuel in the islands for industrial purposes in which fuel costs are of prime importance, have led to the organization of an association of large coal consumers in Manila which is likely to be of great importance in industrial matters in the far east.

Mizpah.

The word Mizpah or Mizpeh, is Hebrew, and means "Watch Tower" For example, see Genesis 31:49, where we read, "And Mizpah, for he said, the Lord watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another." For additional light on the subject you may look at Judges 10:17; 11,11; 20:1. Also I. Samuel, 7:5; 10:17.

Actor's Powers.

A great actor's sensibilities are stimulated beyond the common scope, and he may express them passionately or profoundly in terms of his own personality; and, again, an accomplished actor can create something as concrete as a character in Dickens and make it true to itself.—The Manchester Guardian.

Improving Influence.

"You have a new cook?" "Yes," replied Mrs. Crosslots. "Is she doing good work?" "Yes. She can't cook very much, but she served notice that she wouldn't stay if my daughter didn't quit playing ragtime on the piano."—Washington Star

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

CHAPTER SIXTEEN (Continued)

"Florence the Prefect of Police has been led by the logical outcome of those events to come to the final conclusion that the person standing this room with an evident claim to the inheritance is the person who killed the Mornington heirs. You entered the room, Florence, and you are undoubtedly Cosmo Mornington's heir."

He saw her shake from head to foot and turn as pale as death. Nevertheless, she uttered no word and made no gesture of protest.

He went on:

"Here's a formal accusation. Do you say nothing in reply?"

She waited one time and then declared:

"I have nothing to say. The whole thing is a mystery. What would you have me reply? I do not understand."

"Is that all? Do you accept?"

After a second, he said in an undertone:

"Explain yourself. I beg of you. What you mean, I suppose is that you do not reply. I accept the situation?"

"Yes."

"And you are ready?"

"Yes, sir."

She seemed to be suffering hideously. Her beautiful features were distorted with fear. To her mind, Don Luis evidently represented the lawyers undergone by Marie and Gaston Sauverand. It must mean a spare, shame, death, all those horrors which Marie and Sauverand had been unable to avert. And of these she in her turn would become the victim.

An awful sense of loneliness overcame her and she moaned:

"How cruel I am! If only there were something to be lost in all this! If the mystery were not so dreadful! Oh, if I could only see clearly!"

She broke off. Leaning over her, M. Desmalions studied her face with concentrated attention. Then as she did not speak, he put his hand to the bell on the table and struck it three times.

Don Luis did not stir from where he stood, with his eyes despairingly fixed on Florence. A battle was raging within him between his love and generosity which led him to believe the girl, and his reason which obliged him to suspect her. Was she innocent or guilty? He did not know. Everything was against her. And yet what had he never ceased to love her?

Weber entered followed by his men. M. Desmalions spoke to him and pointed to Florence. Weber went up to her.

"Florence!" said Don Luis.

She looked at him and looked at Weber and his men and suddenly, realizing what was coming, she recreated staggered for a moment, bewildered and fainting and fell back in Don Luis's arms.

"Oh, save me, save me! Do save me!"

The action was so natural and unconstrained, the cry of distress so clearly denoted the alarm which only the innocent can feel, that Don Luis was promptly convinced. A fervent belief in her lightened his heart. His doubts, his caution, his hesitation, his anger [illegible] a certainty that dashed upon him like an irresistible wave. And he cried:

"No, no, that must not be! Monsieur le Prefet, there are things that cannot be permitted—"

He stooped over Florence, whom he was holding so firmly in his arms that nobody could have taken her from him. Their eyes met. His face was close to the girl's. He quivered with emotion at feeling her throbbing, so weak, so utterly helpless, and he said to her passionately, in a voice too low for any but her to hear:

"I love you. I love you. Ah, Florence, if you only knew what I feel, how I suffer and how happy I am! Oh, Florence, I love you, I love you—"

Weber had stood aside, at a sign from the Prefect, who was with us these and more as well, for we cannot have too many to capture the loathsome brute in his lair."

M. Desmalions did not reply. After a brief moment he took Weber aside and talked to him for some minutes. M. Desmalions did not seem very favourably disposed toward Don Luis's request. But Weber was heard to say:

"You need have no fear, Monsieur le Prefet. We run no risk."

And M. Desmalions yielded.

A few moments later Don Luis Perenna and Florence Levasseur took their seats in a motor car with Weber and two inspectors. Another car, filled with detectives, followed.

The hospital was literally invested by the police force and Weber neglected none of the precautions of a regular siege.

The Prefect of Police, who arrived in his own car, was shown by the man servant into the waiting room and then into the parlor where the mother superior came to him at once. Without delay or preamble of any sort he put his questions to her, in the presence of Don Luis, Weber, and Florence.

"Reverend mother," he said, "I have a letter here which was brought to me at headquarters and which tells me of the existence of certain documents concerning a legacy. According to my information, this letter, which is unsigned and which is in a disguised hand, was written by you. Is that so?"

The mother superior, a woman with a powerful face and a determined air, replied, without embarrassment:

"That is so, Monsieur le Prefet. As I had the honor to tell you in my letters, I would have preferred, for obvious reasons, that my name should not be mentioned. Besides, the delivery of the documents was all that mattered. However since you know that I am prepared to answer your questions."

M. Desmalions continued, with a glance at Florence:

"I will first ask you, Reverend Mother, if you know this young lady?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet. Florence was with us for six months as a nurse, a few years ago. She gave such satisfaction that I was glad to take her back this day fortnight. As I had read her story in the papers, I simply asked her to change her name. We had a new staff at the hospital, and it was heretofore a safe refuge for her."

"But, as you have read the papers, you must be aware of the accusations against her?"

"Those accusations have no weight, Monsieur le Prefet, with any one who knows Florence. She has one of the noblest characters and one of the strictest consciences that I have ever met with."

"Let us speak of the documents, Reverend Mother. Where do they come from?"

"Yesterday, Monsieur le Prefet, I found in my room a communication in which the writer proposed to send me some papers that interested Florence Levasseur."

"How did any one know that she was here?" asked M. Desmalions, interrupting her.

"I can't tell you. The letter simply said that the papers would be at Versailles, at the poste restante, in my name, on a certain day that is to say, this morning. I was also asked not to mention them to anybody and to hand them at 3 o'clock this afternoon to Florence Levasseur with instructions to take them to the Prefect of Police at once. I was also requested to have a letter conveyed to Sergeant Mazeroux."

"To Sergeant Mazeroux? That is odd."

"That letter appeared to have to do with the same business. Now, I am very fond of Florence. So I sent the letter, and this morning I went to Versailles, and the papers there as stated. When I got back, Florence was out. I was not able to hand them to her until her return, at about 4 o'clock."

"Where were the papers posted?"

"In Paris. The postmark on the envelope was that of the Avenue Niel, which happens to be the nearest office to this."

"And did not the fact of finding that letter in your room strike you as strange?"

"Certainly, Monsieur le Prefet, but no stranger than all the other incidents in the matter."

"Nevertheless," continued M. Desmalions, who was watching Florence's pale face, "nevertheless, when you saw that the instructions which you received came from this house, did you not entertain the idea that person——"

"The idea that Florence had entered the room, unknown to me, for such a purpose?" cried the superior. "Oh, Monsieur le Prefet, Florence is incapable of doing such a thing!"

The girl was silent, but her drawn features betrayed the feelings of alarm that upset her.

Don Luis went up to her and said:

"The mystery is clearing, Florence, isn't it? And you are suffering in consequence. Who put the letter in Mother Superior's room? You know, don't you? And you know who is conducting all this plot?"

She did not answer. Then, turning to the deputy chief, the Prefect said:

"Weber, please go and search the room which Mlle. Levasseur occupied."

And, in reply to the nun's protest:

"It is indispensable," he declared, "that we should know the reasons why Mlle. Levasseur preserves such an obstinate silence."

Florence herself led the way. But as Weber was leaving the room Don Luis exclaimed:

"Take care, Deputy Chief!"

"Take care? Why?"

"I don't know," said Don Luis, who really could not have said why Florence's behavior was making him uneasy. "I don't know. Still, I warn you——"

Weber shrugged his shoulders and accompanied by the superior, moved away. In the hall he took two men with him. Florence walked ahead. She went up a flight of stairs and turned down a long corridor, with rooms on either side of it, which, after turning a corner, led to a short and very narrow passage ending in a door.

This was her room. The door opened not inward into the room but outward into the passage. Florence therefore drew it to her, stepping back as she did so, which obliged Weber to do likewise. She took advantage of this to rush in and close the door behind her so quickly that the deputy, when he tried to grasp the handle, merely struck the air.

He made an angry gesture.

"The baggage! She means to burn some papers!" And, turning to the superior:

"Is there another exit to the room?"

"No, Monsieur."

He tried to open the door, but she had locked and bolted it. Then he stood aside to make way for one of his men, a giant who, with one blow of his fist, smashed a panel.

Weber pushed by him, put his arm through the opening, drew the bolt, turned the key, pulled open the door and entered.

Florence was no longer in her room. A little open window opposite showed the way she had taken.

"Oh, curse my luck!" he shouted. "She's got off!"

And, hurrying back to the staircase, he roared over the balusters:

"Watch all the doors! She's got away! Collar her!"

M. Desmalions came hurrying up. Meeting the deputy, he received his explanations and then went on to Florence's room. The open window looked out on a small inner yard, a sort of well which served to ventilate a part of the house. Some rain pipes ran down the wall. Florence must have let herself down by them. But what coolness and what an indomitable will she must have displayed to make her escape in this manner!

The detectives had already distributed themselves on every side to bar the fugitive's road. It soon became manifest that Florence, for whom they were hunting on the ground floor and in the basement, had gone from the yard into the room underneath her own, which happened to be the mother [illegible] a nun's habit, and that, thus disguised, she had passed unnoticed through the very men who were pursuing her.

They rushed outside. But it was now dark, and every search was bound to be in vain in so populous a quarter.

The Prefect of Police made no effort to conceal his displeasure. Don Luis was also greatly disappointed at this flight, which thwarted his plans, and enlarged openly upon Weber's lack of skill.

The Upper Class.

From the Detroit Free Press.

"So you wish to marry my daughter," said the proud parent.

"Yes, sir," replied the young man.

"How much money are you making?" asked the governor.

"Forty dollars a week," was the reply.

"Forty dollars a week! Why my daughter can make that in a munitions plant and not work overtime."

HUSBAND AND WIFE FINALLY REUNITED

Separated at Galveston Flood She Believed He Was Dead.

St Louis—Mrs. Zealia Phelan has been re-united with her husband after a separation of 18 years during which time she was under the impression that her husband had died and that she had buried him. Instead, she had buried another man who perished in the Galveston flood of 1900.

After her husband's supposed death Mrs Phelan re-married and then, after the death of her second husband recently, she learned that her first husband had become demented searching the country for her.

When the great flood overwhelmed the Texas city, Mrs. Phelan relates, she and her husband became separated during the excitement. Phelan did not return and Mrs. Phelan began a search of undertaking establishments and morgues. Finally she identified a body as that of Phelan and buried it.

After Hardpen's death a few weeks ago, Mrs Phelan visited Alton, the place of their marriage, and while there was invited to inspect the Illinois state hospital. While passing through the hospital she came face to face with her first husband. The great shock of the reunion restored Phelan's reason, and Mrs. Phelan obtained his release from the institution.

Phelan said he had traveled over the entire country searching for his wife.

Worry over her superinduced by a blow on the head received during his rescue in Galveston, brought about his mental aberration, it was said.

"At times I was all right," Phelan said, "but during the greater part of the last several years, I was mentally unbalanced. Physicians said the injury from the blow would have been healed speedily if I could only have thrown off the great worry about Zealia."

DIED IN ACTION AS HE HAD LONG HOPED

BY WEBB MILLER.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, (by mail.)—There'll be many moist eyes among the "Old Army" men who are now wearing gold and silver leaves and silver stars on their shoulders when they hear that "Ol' Sergt. Jim Payne of the—th Infantry fell riddled by machine gun bullets, on the first day of the Soissons fighting.

Sergeant Payne was one of the oldest and most experienced of the old time non-coms, and had seen service in every land where American soldiers set foot for the past 20 years. He "soldiered" and fought Moros in the wilds of Mindano under Capt J. J. Pershing, and helped Pershing chase the Villistas into the interior of Mexico.

In many a headquarters dugout and mess shack they will say "Poor 'ol Jim. God bless him," when they hear that Payne is gone. Probably no other man in the army had as many close friends among the officers. For the last 20 years Payne has been training second lieutenants and seeing them gain their first lieutenancy, then captains' bars, majors' gold leaves and so on toward the major generals' double stars.

A good many of the youths that Payne mothered" are now generals in the new army. But no matter how high they went in rank, they always retained their love for the leathery-faced, grizzled old sergeant. Year after year, Sergeant Jim has been taking "shave-tails" fresh from West Point, and nervous as cats about their first commands, under his arm and teaching them the fine points of handling men, as only an old first sergeant can do.

But Payne remained always a first sergeant. In the old days there wasn't much chance for a man to rise out of the ranks to a commission—especially if he 'hadn't had much schoolin'," as Payne would tell his friends who urged him to try for a commission.

At the outbreak of the war Payne was offered a captaincy, but refused it.

"I want to win my shoulder bars on the field with my boys," he told them. Last winter he served as first sergeant but this spring asked to be reduced to a sergeant, so he could go out and lead a platoon. Only a few weeks before he was killed the recommendation went through for his promotion to a lieutenancy. Within a few days Sergeant Jim would have been wearing the coveted silver bar, won as he wanted to win it. But he died as he wanted to die—"with the boys."

And there will be many misty eyes along the lines when they hear about "Ol' Jim."

Electric Melting Furnace.

From Science.

The bureau of mines announces the perfection of a type of electric melting furnace that may be revolutionary in the making of brass. Patents on this furnace, known as the rocking electric furnace, have been taken out by the bureau and have been assigned to Secretary Lane as trustee. Free licenses to operate these furnaces under the patents, it is understood, can be obtained by making application through Van H. Manning, director of the bureau of mines. The new furnace, which it is claimed will reduce the important losses in brass melting is the result of five years' experimentation by H. W. Gillet, chemist of the bureau of mines, in cooperation with the laboratory of Cornell university, the American Institute of Metals and a number of manufacturers of brass.

Ice Eating in Japan.

From the Tokio Advertiser.

The Japanese are probably the only civilized people in the world who eat ice in the way they do. Blocks or small [illegible] pieces are eaten with sugar and lemon or any other mixture one may fancy.

But by far the commonest way of eating ice is to shave it into snowy flakes by means of a plane and swallow it with sweetened water into which various appetizers may be thrown, such as fruit juice or sweetmeats.

Ice cream, milk and eggs shaken with ice, and other kinds of cooling beverages, are sold in ever increasing quantity, but the old style of eating ice—that is, in the above described "kori midzu" fashion—is still in the greatest vogue.

Dandelion Has Value.

From the New York Sun.

Idaho owns a regular gold mine and thought it was nothing but a lot of yellow weeds. The lowly dandelion has come into its own. Director Lee Flaherty of the University of Idaho extension department has received a communication from an eastern chemical concern quoting a price of 12 cents a pound for the dried roots of the lowly, despised dandelion plant.

In addition to the dandelion there are a number of other Idaho weeds which have a similar medicinal value. Some of them are skunk cabbage leaves, with a value of 6 cents a pound; yellow mustard seed, 12 cents; mullein leaves, 2½ cents, and the dried flowers of white and red clovers, which have a value of 12 and 14 cents a pound respectively.

Captured Order From General Ludendorff Makes Plain Low Morale of Germans

BY HENRY WOOD
United Press Staff Correspondent

With the French ...

Copies of an order signed by ... Ludendorff and ... captured from the Germans ... reveal the fact that German ... a victorious offensive on the western ... front are steadily being thwarted by ... information given the French and ... allied commands by German prisoners.

That the German soldier has become ... so weary of the war that when he ... is taken prisoner he takes little effort to ... conceal what he knows about the ... man's offensive plans becomes ... apparent in the order issued by Ludendorff in which he frets and fumes ... two of the big German drives of the ... year have been checked partly as a result of information divulged by German prisoners. The order, which ... follows, indicates an astounding decrease in the morale discipline and patriotism of German soldiers, undoubtedly worn out by the length of the war and the repeated failure of the impossible high commands promising victory, ... quick and victorious peace.

"A captured document coming from the Second French army dated May 26 proves that German soldiers belonging to the Seventh regiment of chasseurs of the 197th division of infantry, captured as prisoners north of the Chemin des Dames during the night of May 25 and 26 revealed to the enemy our impending attack.

"Very probably they told also that they knew about the preparations made in their sector and in the adjacent sectors. The enemy was thus able to know precious details concerning the hour, the form of our attack, the artillery preparation, the units engaged etc! etc!

"Another document dated May 26 which has come into our hands also shows that the enemy, awaiting our attack, gave warning to their troops against our gas and were able to bring into position on the heights between the Aisne and the Vesle the reserves (the Thirteenth French division) which they were holding on this portion of the front. The resistance of this division cost the lives and limbs of many German soldiers.

"Without the treason committed by these two prisoners, the surprise of May 27 would have succeeded completely, and the success might even have been much greater than it really was.

"It has likewise been established that our attack of June 9 was known to the enemy through the declarations of prisoners, which alone enabled the enemy to be prepared for this attack.

"We are struck by the precision and richness in details of the information which the enemy is able to secure from German prisoners.

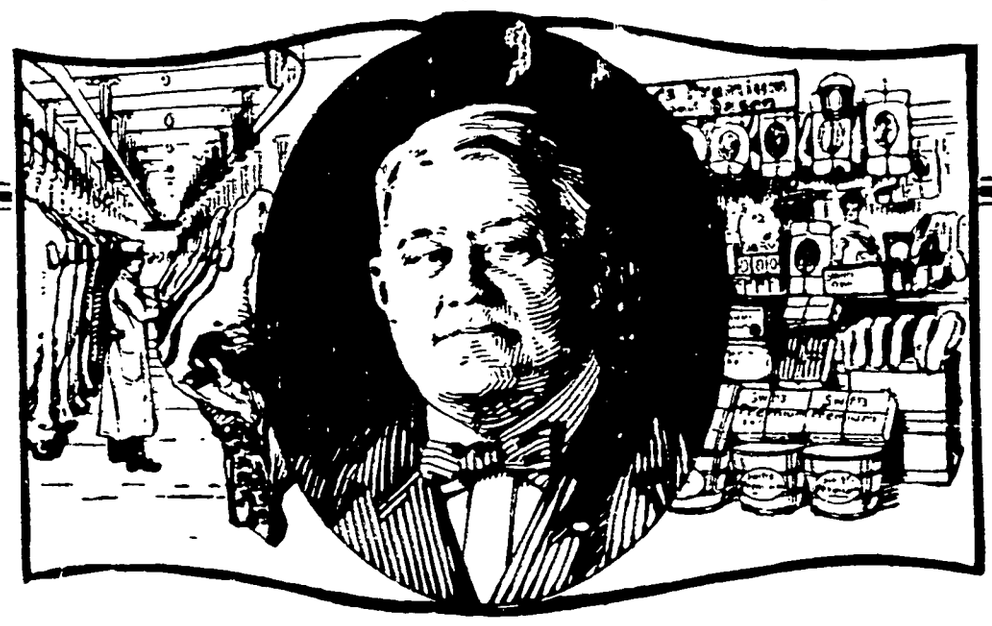
Less Gasoline

... allowed ... but ... them some good. The ... last at ... has issued ... order against the use of pleasure ... on Sunday. But it has made a request and ... these times a request from ... a thing ... comes with almost the same force as an order. Owners of motor cars are asked not to use them on Sunday unless engaged in such work as hauling freight going to fires answering calls for physicians and the like. This will restrict the use of automobiles to a comparative few.

Having a few of the old fashioned brand of Sundays is not going to hurt anybody. Men and women who are in the habit of riding many dusty miles every Sunday will find that they have feet and legs and that these useful members are admirably suited for the purpose of locomotion.

The old habit of visiting the neighbors may be revived and happy thought the old custom of staying at home on Sunday afternoon. Barring the use of the pleasure automobile on Sunday will give the riding public a chance to get its breath and its bearings. The gasoline is needed somewhere else and we ought to be willing to give it up without protest. And bear this in mind: there is nothing in the request to prevent the head of the family from putting on his unionalls and spending the afternoon on his back, under the car, learning all about its internal economy and diagnosing its ills.

But, to treat the announcement more seriously, many people, who own cars have no other time to use them than on Sunday. If Sunday riding is prohibited for them they will ride little. The main thing involved is the saving of gasoline. Perhaps a better way to have accomplished this would have been an order limiting pleasure cars to a certain number of gallons a week. Under the fuel ... request ... owner ... as much fuel as he likes and ... use as much ... he must ... ghout the week. But he must ... the garage who ...



The Branch House Man

This is one of the Swift & Company Branch House Men.

They are all pretty much alike in the way they feel toward their work—and that is what this ad is about.

They know that most people couldn't get such good meat promptly and in good condition if it weren't for the branch houses of which they are in charge.

They know that the branch house is one of the most important links in the chain of preparing and distributing meat for a nation.

They know that Swift & Company must have its branch houses run at the highest notch of usefulness; that even a Swift & Company branch house won't run itself, and that it is up to the branch house man to run it properly.

Any branch house man who doesn't see his work in this light is transferred to some other place with Swift & Company to which he is better adapted.

They are picked men, these branch house men. Every time you sit down to a steak or chop, or cut of roast, you can give a grateful thought to the whole crew of them.

And remember, in a general way, that everything that makes life smoother and more convenient for you, is the result of the thoughtfulness and effort of a lot of people of whom you have never heard.

"Isn't it a grand and glorious feeling to write a long winded editorial on the town's needs and then have half the business men tell you they didn't read it?" demands the Billfam Globe.

This question moves the Arrow Rock Statesman to philosophize a bit: "My dear brother, it is astonishing and you will be surprised, after you have been in the business a little longer, to find how few of the people really do read.

"Many, even in these war times, never look at a paper. A few sketch the city dailies and read a piece here and there, a few others glance at the headlines on the first page, over some neighbor's shoulder, and many others merely sit around and catch the drift of the news from the conversation of others and are then fully posted and ready to argue with a Kentucky lawyer."—St. Louis Republic.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.

Milling Corn Flour.

It has been found possible to use much of the wheat-milling machinery of the United States for milling corn. In this way the output of cornmeal was almost doubled within five months. Instead of using 8,000,000 barrels of wheat flour each month, America can now depend upon corn products for all breadstuff demands.

When You Fight--Fight

FIGHT as these American soldiers fought in the streets of Fismes. "They covered themselves with glory," the papers say. Of course they did—they are Americans.

They met the finest of the enemy's troops in a terrific hand-to-hand struggle. They used their guns—their bayonets—their bare fists. Every American soldier went after his man desperately, fearlessly, persistently, with one great driving purpose—to whip that Prussian Guard, to silence its machine guns—to win!

It's a pretty good way to fight—this American way. It wins battles over there, it will win a splendid victory over here—if we fight when we fight—if we buy Liberty Bonds to our utmost.

When you fight—fight! When you buy—buy!

"A Good Place to Do Your Banking"

GREATEST CHANCE A MAN EVER HAD

Can Help Himself, His Boy and His Country by Buying Liberty Bonds.

WE MUST ALL DO OUR BEST

Scores of Things We Can Do Without Which Seem Necessities and Yet Are Really Luxuries — Get Into the Fight.

By EDWARD BOK.
Editor of the Ladies' Home Journal.

Each time a new Liberty loan is announced we should hail it with pleasure. For years we have used the phrase "as good as a government bond" as indicating the safest investment possible, but before the war it was impossible for the average investor to secure a government bond. Periodically an issue was made, but it was so quickly subscribed for by the bankers that the small investor had little chance. Now we all have a chance, and a chance at all that we can afford to buy.

It will, of course, be argued by some when the fourth Liberty loan is announced that they have not as yet paid for the third loan bonds for which they subscribed. That may be true, but that is no reason why we should fail to subscribe again. Before the fifth loan can be issued we will have paid for the third loan bonds and begun paying for the fourth loan bonds that we subscribed for. Thus if we go on we will have a distinct part in each loan, have each month put aside a sum for the best investment on earth, have acquired the steady habit of saving, and when the last loan is announced and we shall have taken part of that and paid for it, we shall find ourselves in possession of a collection of bonds that will make us proud of the share we took in the war and have a comfortable "nest egg" in the bargain.

Must Do Our Best.

Never, really, was there such a stimulant given us to do without the nonessential and save. Not only is it saving for our boys and helping them to fight, but it is saving for them when they come home and saving for ourselves. Is there, in imagination, a prouder parent than that father or mother, who when his or her boy comes home from serving his country, can open a drawer and pull out a neat little package of Liberty loan bonds? That is what we mean by "keeping the home-fires burning;" by "backing up our boys," by "doing out bit." The only point is that we should change the latter to "doing our best." We've done our "bit" in the past loans; in this fourth loan we should do our "best." We want to be able to show our boy a bond or two or three in each loan; not have him ask: "Oh, didn't you get in on the fourth?"

It isn't as if we can't do it. We can, if we will only set our minds to the job of real saving. There are scores of things we can do without which seem necessities and yet are really luxuries. Our boys "over there" are doing without them and offering their lives besides. We are not asked for the latter. All we are asked to do is to do without here something and there something, and by doing this we are patriots! And all the time while we are adjudged patriots we are investing our money in the safest thing on earth and getting a good interest on it in the bargain. Frankly, can you "beat it?" It is something to ask a man to give money, without a return, and be a patriot. But in these Liberty loans all the government asks that a man shall loan is his money, safely guarded and at a good interest, and still he is a patriot.

Must Lend or Be Taxed.

Another point we must remember, taking this whole matter simply on an economic basis: That the more of these Liberty bonds we buy the less taxes we will have to pay. The government must have the money to keep up the war and feed and clothe our boys. This year it needs about $24,000,000,000. This amount it must get from the people. And if the people won't loan in bonds, it must take in taxes. Hence, the more we loan the less we will have to give.

It's all a question of saving, saving, saving—and never was there a better time to begin than now with the Liberty loan bonds as an attraction. The man who has no ready money with which to buy the bonds is the very man that the government wants above all other classes of men to loan it his money; his money saved here with a dollar and there with a quarter. It is the finest kind of money to give to our country: the money that we save by some act of self-denial. It isn't the money that we have in the bank that we want to draw out and buy Liberty bonds with; it is the money that next winter we can save, month by month. That is really helping your boy "over there" [illegible] the government to keep him warm and fit, and, incidentally, helping yourself to lay by the most valuable pieces of paper that you can buy, put away, and all the time getting a good interest on them.

Black Eye for the Hun.

Seventeen million individual subscribers were part of the third Liberty loan. That means one in every six of the population of the United States. But there is no reason why with the coming fourth loan this should not be changed to one in every three persons in the United States and finally that every person in the United States shall own a bond. Fancy the state of mind of the German war lords if they were made to realize that every one of the one hundred millions of Americans were so determined to beat them that they had all invested with the one idea to beat them Would the war continue another year? Most unlikely. Most of us ask each other or ourselves, "When will this war end?" There is no quicker way to end it than to make it possible for our government to throw into it every resource that we have The moment that the Prussian war lords realize this fact, they will come to their senses. And the only way to bring this about is for you and me to do our part and to do it fully This means to loan every cent we can to the government; hold nothing back, but give it our all It isn't a question of when can we end the war; it is a question of when you or I end the war. It is what you and I do. It is the drop of water, multiplied by millions, that makes the deluge. It is what you and I do in our small way that, multiplied by the millions, makes for a united strength before which nothing can stand. Win the war we will, but when we win it depends upon us. "It can't be too soon for me," we say. Then let's get busy, real busy, and save and loan to our government what we save.

U-BOATS USE OIL CAMOUFLAGE

Submarine Commanders Try a New Trick, but 'Twas Quickly Found Out.

London.—Tricky German U-boat commanders have conceived a new plan designated to deceive crews of the allied submarine destroyers in the game of hide and seek in European waters. When a depth bomb is discharged and does not cripple or destroy the German undersea boat, as sometimes happens, a quantity of oil is released by some device of the submersible and quickly rises to the water's surface. The hope of the German U-boat captain is that the commander of the destroyer will see the oil, believe that the submarine has been wrecked and drop no more depth charges. Meantime, the German is endeavoring to escape. American and British commanders of destroyers and submarine chasers discovered the scheme of the Germans some time ago and since then have been dropping depth bombs in greater numbers than previously, using the oil as a guide to the general location of their target. "Oil camouflage" the American and British navy men call this latest German submarine trick.

WOMEN HANDLE BIG SHELLS

Young British Mother Settles Question of Their Physical Fitness to Do So.

Liverpool, Eng.—When women first were put to work in shell factories here they handled only the light field-gun shells. Later it became necessary for them to turn out larger shells, and doubts were raised as to whether the women were strong enough to handle them. A young mother settled the question.

"Let me heft the shell," she said, picking one up from the floor. "Aye," she commented, "this shell is a mite heavy, 'tis true, but it's not so heavy as my baby."

There is a shell factory in this district operated almost exclusively by the daughters of business and professional men. Many are young girls who had never done any kind of work other than needle work and cooking. The heavy work of the establishment is performed by the wives of sailors

This is a nonprofit making factory and it is the reply of the Cunard company to the Germans for the sinking of the Lusitania.

THE EDITOR'S PANTS

There are still a number who are back on their subscriptions. We need the money and Uncle Sam says we must stop your paper if it is past due. What Uncle Sam says goes with us, and we won't argue with our delinquent subscribers. Get your Liberty Bond first and then come down and pay your subscriptions so we can buy bonds too. Our little poem, "The Editor's Pants" brought us in a lot of back dues who were thus gently reminded. Now you come in and maybe we can "buy a new pair of pants" and possibly a pair of suspenders, too.

ONE IOWA MAN ON MISSING CYCLOPS

Vessel Now Officially Declared Lost—Lieut. Frank Nigg Was Maquoketa Boy.

Bellevue, Ia., Sept. 23.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels has officially removed the missing American collier Cyclops name from the register of the navy and at the same time designated her crew as officially dead.

In doing this one more Jackson county boy has been recorded as giving his life for his country, as Lieut. Frank Nigg, a Maquoketa boy, was an officer on the ill fated Cyclops.

The Cyclops mysteriously disappeared in March and nothing has been heard since of the ship or her crew. The losing of a ship at sea of which no record can be made of the disappearance is a rarity in martime circles.

The action of the navy department is taken mainly to legalize payment of insurance to beneficiaries of the Cyclops crew Otherwise settlements of estates would have been impossible.

The navy department long ago gave up hopes of finding any trace of the missing vessel.

BULGAR FORCES CUT TO PIECES

Serbians Pouring Across Vardar River In Pursuit of Beaten Army Fleeing Northward.

ALL HIGH GROUND LOST

London, Sept. 25.—Italian troops operating on the left flank of the British and Greeks in the Vardar valley, have advanced 10 miles since yesterday, according to a dispatch from the Saloniki front today.

The Serbians alone have taken 12,000 prisoners and 140 guns so far, it is reported.

London, Sept. 25. — The Serbian troops continue to cross the river Vardar northeast of Monastir and are in contact with the Bulgarians, says the Serbian official statement of Monday.

The Bulgarians are burning villages and stores of material. The Serbians, however, have captured great quantities of materials.

Around Prilep the Serbians are on the Gradsko-Prilep road, to the northeast while to the southeast they have reached the steep massif of the Drenska mountain range.

The official number of Turks taken prisoner will exceed largely the 25,000 already reported, the official statement announces.

By Associated Press.

With their center broken by the onslaught of the French, Serbian and Italian armies, with the British and Greeks sweeping over the strongest defenses in the lake Doiran region and with their railroad communications virtually destroyed the Bulgarian Austro-Hungarian and German armies on the Macedonian front have begun a retreat which seems to threaten disaster.

Over a front of over 90 miles, the Teutonic allies are streaming back in disorder which is said to be indescribable. On the west they are trying to reach Prilep from the vicinity of Monastir, but Prilep is outflanked by the advancing Serbians, who are marching upon the city. The railroad from Uskub to Saloniki running along the Vardar valley, and forming the chief artery of communication for the Bulgarian forces around Lake Doiran has beeen cut by the Serbians who have crossed the Vardar. In the center the enemy resistance appears completely broken and the French and Serbians are moving northward at a rate which indicates the absence of any organized resistance.

The disaster which threatens the Teutonic armies on this front is one which may change the whole complexion of affairs in the Balkans. The enemy armies appear to have been split in twain and forced to retreat northward over mountain roads which are, in a majority of cases, merely paths. It is probable that the retrograde movement will spread east of Lake Doiran and involve the whole front.

ON BULGAR BORDER.

Paris, Sept. 25.—Entente allied cavalry yesterday was three miles from the Bulgarian frontier in the region of Strumitza, according to news dispatches received here from the Macedonian front. The 11th German division was reported to have been cut from the main Bulgarian army and to be retreating in disorder.

The news dispatches say the first Bulgarian army in the region of Monastir and Prilep has been cut off from communication with the second army in the Doiran sector.

The Franco-Serbian troops are pursuing the Bulgarian army which is in full retreat The entente allies now command the mountain zone from which they will be able to debouch in the plains.

SERBS REPORT GAINS.

London, Sept. 25.—"The allied offensive in Macedonia is continuing successfully," it was reported in the Serbian communique of Sunday, received here today.

"We continued to cross the Vardar, where we are in contact with the enemy toward Prilip," the communique said.

"Serbian troops have the Massiff and Drenska Planina and have reached several points on the road from Gradsko to Prilip.

"The enemy continued to burn villages and high stores. In spite of that a great quantity of different war material fell into our hands.

"On the railway line in the Vardar plain, we captured several trains."

MANY ARE DESERTING.

Paris, Sept. 25.—Many Bulgarian troops are deserting, according to advices from the Macedonian front. It is reported that 500 men from one regiment have been executed at the command of German officers.

IN SIX MILES OF PRILIP.

London, Sept. 25.—Allied successes in Macedonia continue to grow. Control of Siberia also is being rapidly completed by the allies.

The operations in the Balkans are taking on the aspect of a major defeat for the Bulgarians. Their armies in southern Siberia and northeastern Greece have been virtually split by cutting of the Uskub-Saloniki and Gradsko-Prilip railways. The allies are advancing in the whole region between Monastir and Lake Doiran, and the original front of about 75 miles has been stretched ton early 100 miles by the growth of the big wedge being driven northward. Through the seizure of Kalyani, allied troops are now only six miles southeast of the important city of Prilip, which is one of their immediate objectives.

To the eastward, they have penetrated much farther north, and are paralleling the Vardar from the Doiran region to its junction with the Cerna. West of Doiran the allies are within reach of Bogdance, six miles west and north of the village of Doiran, while their left wing has passed Mogila, five miles north of Monastir.

Official reports of prisoners and guns to date are lacking, but it is unofficially stated that the Serbians alone have taken nearly 10,000 Bulgarians and 120 guns.

ADMIT THEIR DEFEAT.

Sofia Sept 25—Retirement of the Bulgarian armies between the Cerna and the Vardar was announced Bulgarian war office toda

"As a result of the front giv between the Cerna and the adjacent units have withdra southward of Prilep and northw Doiran," the communique said.

Where Rare Books Came From

Book collecting is one ... of millionaires in this country and the zest shown in it is one of those few things the war hasn't lessened. It is not so in England, although we look to that country for most of the things, even Americana, that figure with fabulous prices. The auction room where these precious volumes are bartered is a center of romance for many who find that there is something more in the matter than the glamour of high figures. Mr. Clement H Shorter writes in the London Sphere of a little volume recently privately printed, called "Notes On the History of Sotheby's" the great book auction room of London Mr Shorter, with the enthusiasm of a frequenter, says that the author of the book, Mr G T Hobson, has "told the story • • • with that dash of romance which must always obtain where the book auction is concerned. Here is some of the romance.

"The first book auction held in this country took place in 1676 but the first great book auctioneer was Samuel Baker, whose first sale was held in 1744. There were not regular book auctioneers or auction houses until his time. In 1778 Baker was joined by his nephew, John Sotheby and three generations of Sotheby's were associated with the firm, the last of whom was an author who wrote Ramblings In the Elucidation of the Autograph of Milton.' He died in 1861. A Mr John Wilkinson became a partner in 1842 and a Mr. William Hodge in 1861, and thus we have the firm of Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge, although not one of these names is now in the business. • • •

"But to return to the real romance of Sotheby's, its wonderful sales of books, connected with which it has issued no fewer than 7,000 separate catalogs. Some of them beautifully illustrated, are so interesting that one binds them in one's library especially when they are concerned with the books of noteworthy people. The recent Morrison sale was a case in point when the letter of Mary Queen of Scots probably the most wonderful letter in existence, was privately purchased for the benefit of the nation and when the Nelson autographs and manuscripts, many of the letters being to Sir William Hamilton or to his wife Lady Hamilton, were knocked down for £2,500.

"The most interesting feature with regard to these sales as it strikes me is the large place which the Greek and Latin classics played in the sales of the 18th century and the small place they play in the modern world. But the most amazing thing of all is the great enhancement of prices under modern commercial conditions and largely due, no doubt, to the fact that the American millionaire is frequently a great book buyer, although his brother in England is rarely so. This would account for the fact that one of Shakespeare's first folios sold for £40 19s. [$205] in 1799, and a copy fetched £3,600 [$18,000] in 1907. Mr Hobson points out that a collection of early quarto plays sold in 1798 for £22 3s [$110.75], and that it would be considered cheap at £5,000 [$25,000] today, and might easily fetch double or treble that sum. When the sale of Henry Fielding's library took place in 1764, books with his autographed notes fetched only a few shillings, whereas in 1911 the novelist's copyright agreement with his publisher sold for £1,015 [$5,075].

"One of the most interesting things in this book is a facsimile of one of each of the love letters of Robert and Elizabeth Browning, a collection of letters which in 1913 sold for £6,550 ($32,750). But the material provided in Mr. Hobson's interesting book is infinite, and is worthy memento of the firm's change of address from the Strand to the West End of London a change, however, which I personally greatly regret. As an inhabitant of Fleet street, an occasional visit to the salesrooms when they were in my immediate neighborhood was an agreeable pastime, but to me the West End of London is usually inaccessible and more so than ever now that the taxicab has departed from our streets. Moreover, I greatly regret that these sales should be held at the awkward hour of 1 o'clock. I am quite sure that it is not a wise decision which keeps up this curious custom. From 1 till 2 is the conventional luncheon hour of the English public, and I can imagine that, fortified by a good lunch, many buyers would bid more briskly if the sales commenced at 2 or even at 3 o'clock."

Thirst, a War Weapon.

From "The Desert Campaigns."

Our troops worked to make it impossible for the Turks to cross the desert and attack the defenses of the Suez canal. The Turk then drew his water from a few pools and the cisterns cut into rock by races who peopled the desert many centuries ago. If the sources of water supply were denied the Turk it was obvious he could not march across the desert in any force large enough to cause damage, unless he brought a large camel transport column, which we knew was not available. Therefore it was decided to draw off all water within a radius of some 60 miles from the canal. There was a big pool at a spot known as Er Rigm where the winter water ... Wadi Muksheib supplied themselves and a party of engineers protected by Australian light horse under ... cut trenches round the lake and ... 5,000,000 gallons from it in ... days. Other detachments took out small parties le... pumping sets and filled the water ... innumerable cisterns, adopting this plan rather than that of destroying these underground reservoirs, which will retain their usefulness when the world enjoys peace again. Not one of them was damaged. The Turk had been engaged on a rather elaborate well boring operation at Jifjaffa, east of Er Rigm, for some months; an Australian engineer superintending the work, with an excellent plan. Major Scott took a squadron of his regiment, the Ninth Australian light horse, and some men of the Bikaner camel corps, to put an end to this attempt to secure a water supply, and by a well conceived surprise attack captured the Austrian officer and most of the Turks, killing and wounding the remainder. The bore holes and plant were destroyed. Before there was not a bucket of water available for the Turk in a wide belt of the desert, and, though vigilance was never relaxed, patrols rarely had anything to report.

HUNS MUST HOLD NOW OR LEAVE FRENCH SOIL

If Ludendorff Has Been Able to Save Enough Men to Bring the Allied War Machine to a Pause For the Winter, He Can Rest His Tired Armies on the Hindenburg Line—But If the German Troopers Have Been Battered as Badly as the Capture of Troopers and Guns Indicates, the Kaiser's Leader Will Have to Make His Way Back to the Belgian Frontier, Fighting at Every Step.

By Frank H Simonds.

(Copyright, 1917, New York Tribune.)

When this article was written Foch's offensive had reached its supreme crisis. Within a relatively brief time will be answered the question of utmost interest and importance—Can Ludendorff regain the offensive? If he can even briefly, the lines will stabilize themselves on the front familiar throughout the campaign of 1917 and the end of the fighting season will arrive before the Germans can be pushed to the Belgian frontiers.

On the other hand if the cost of the retreat has been so great that Ludendorff has consumed his reserves then he alone will wrest the initiative from Foch and he will have to continue to conform to the strategical movements of his great enemy as he has had to conform to them for the last two months ever since July 18, when the thrust of Mangin toward Soissons definitively deprived the Germans of their advantage gained at the battle of Picardy, on March 21 and retained up to the transformation of the second battle of the Marne from a German to a French operation.

The Initiative Counts.

Now the essential thing to recognize at the outset is that it will be impossible for Ludendorff merely to retire to the Hindenburg line and there conduct a passive or even an active defense. This would only be possible if Foch's armies had been used up by their offensive of the last week a thing which may be regarded as utterly unlikely. The change in the methods of combat in the last summer has brought back something of the old fashioned tactical conditions of the period which temporarily ended at the first Marne.

Looking back at that campaign of 1914 we can derive valuable information as to the campaign now in progress. In the opening phase of the war Joffre took the offensive just as Ludendorff seized it in March of this year. In the first half of August Joffre pushed armies into Alsace, Lorraine, Belgium, Luxemburg and up to Charleroi. But toward the end of August these armies were heavily beaten, 3 of them compelled to retreat and the initiative passed from the French to the Germans.

In this situation Joffre had two courses open to him. He might have sought to regroup his armies and conduct an operation of purely defensive nature from the Somme to the Moselle, covering Amiens, Rheims and Nancy. But such an operation would condemn him to a permanent defensive and in the view of all modern strategy which has returned to the Napoleonic conception the defensive spells defeat. You may possibly hold your enemy for a certain period of time but you can never destroy him you will have always to conform to his will, and the whole purpose of war, of all war beyond all other ways is to destroy the armies of your foe.

Accordingly Joffre adopted the principle of a wide swinging retreat a fighting retreat behind which he undertook to regroup his armies with the deliberate intent to regain the offensive when this reorganization was complete. While the defeated armies slowly retired from the Belgian frontier into France he created two new armies, those of Foch and Maunoury and when those armies were at last created he was ready while the enemy had by this time advanced into a perilous position. Joffre accordingly retook the offensive, defeated the Germans and compelled them to retire to the Aisne. More than this, once the Germans were at the Aisne and preparing to renew their advance upon Paris, Joffre opened a turning movement east of Amiens which compelled the Germans to abandon their own plans to meet the new danger. The result was that the campaign of 1914 ended before Ypres, with the initiative still escaping the Germans. And they never fully recovered this initiative on the western front until the present year.

On the other hand owing to the superior preparations of the Germans their greater numbers and the unreadiness of the British—an unreadiness wholly comparable with our own last year—Joffre was never able to exploit his various successes. He had broken the German strategy, but his own was not to be carried to its logical conclusion because he lacked men, munitions and guns. Not until the recent fighting in July was the mechanical equipment of the French and British equal to the German, although numerically allied superiority in the west was fairly steady from May, 1915, up to the beginning of the present year.

Now when Ludendorff was beaten at the second Marne his position was similar to that of Joffre after the failure of the French offensive in 1914. His own strategy was temporarily wrecked. He recognized that he must retire out of untenable positions taken only as a detail in his own effort to bring the French and British forces under unfavorable conditions and destroy them. He realized that retreat was necessary in order that, while parrying the blows of the enemy delivered under advantageous conditions, as a result of their Marne victory, he might regroup his forces and at the appropriate moment, following Joffre's example, take the offensive again and accomplish what Joffre had accomplished at the Marne.

Map Tells Little.

It is in this light we must view all that has happened since July 18. The retreat of the Germans, important for the French and British, as if released valuable and necessary lines of communication and greatly improved the general physical situation of the allies, was of relatively minor importance in the larger sense, unless its consequence should be the demoralization of the German army and the elimination of all chance that when it had effected a retirement it could pass to the offensive and not merely regain the initiative, but force its pursuers to conform to its will for the balance of the year.

The essential thing in all war is not the occupation of territory, save as the occupation of that territory forces your enemy to fight under unfavorable conditions, and, thus fighting, to meet utter defeat. We all of us look at the map and see there, as it may happen, causes for hope or for fear. Yet it is not on the map that Foch or Ludendorff seek the answer to their questions. The whole object of both strategies, for both German and French staffs are wholly permeated with the Napoleonic view of war, is to destroy the armies before them.

As a consequence we have now to face this situation Ludendorff has made a long and desperate retreat, not with the idea of reaching the Hindenburg line and, once behind it, of halting and checking his pursuers in that line. Only the advent of bad weather would make any such tactics possible. What he has sought has been to retire to a new position and while retiring to regroup his forces for the express purpose of attack when the right moment came, just as Joffre sought to retreat from the frontier to the Marne, solely to reorganize his forces and strike back.

Now we are coming to the great test of the present year within a brief time Ludendorff is substantially back on the last line, from which he can strike back, if he is to attempt to stay in France short of the Meuse and Scheldt line for the rest of the year. He may have been so closely pursued so heavily beaten upon that he will be unable to undertake a counter blow at the Hindenburg line accepting this as meaning the whole German front from the sea to Switzerland. If this be the case then Foch will have accomplished all that he sought to accomplish when he began the series of attacks which opened with Rawlinson's thrust along the Somme on August 8.

The whole clash of the rival strategists for the last five weeks has been over the condition in which Ludendorff's army would arrive at the Hindenburg line. All the swift blows of Foch have been directed at accomplishing two things, at breaking down the resources of the Germans and at shaking their morale. In 1917 Hindenburg retired to his new positions behind the Somme battlefield with absolute freedom of movement. The pursuit was not organized until the escape was accomplished. He did not leave 5,000 prisoners in drawing an army of nearly 1,000,000 back over a front of 100 miles and to a depth of 25 miles in various places. He thus retained freedom of action, and when Haig attacked at Arras and Nivelle, north of Soissons, the Germans were able to beat both attacks down by counter attacks. And the morale of his troops was not affected for they saw the retreat as a piece of successful strategy.

Different This Time.

In the present case however, Ludendorff has been less lucky. We may assume that after the second Marne he knew that he must draw in his troops in Picardy whether to the line of the Canal du Nord and the upper Somme or to the Hindenburg line is immaterial but his own purpose was to effect the retirement in his own time and way. We saw him begin this in the first days of August by drawing his troops back behind the Ancre and the Avre and starting a similar limited and local retreat in the Lys salient. But the moment he began these withdrawals Foch was upon him with a tiger spring.

What has happened since has been a series of swift, heavy blows delivered all along the line, which have compelled the German to halt and fight, to abandon his plan of an orderly retreat to check an enemy whose further advance would bring disaster. Foch has overrun the retiring forces before they could organize their withdrawal, and the result has been battles in which German infantry fought without the aid of German artillery and under the most unfavorable conditions. We may gather how unfavorable these conditions have been by the fact that between August 8 and September 8, that is, in the period of a single month, 110,000 German prisoners have been taken. But this is only a detail. Remember the main purpose of Ludendorff was to get back to the selected line and to have there, when he got back, a strategic reserve, a mass of maneuvre, an unexpended balance of fresh divisions, call the thing what you will, which would enable him to do what Joffre did at the Marne, and Foche on the same battlefield four years later, namely, take the offensive again.

Question of Reserves.

Instead of this he has had constantly to put his reserves, strictly limited in numbers, back into the furnace to save the troops attacked by Foch in their retirement from utter ruin. You may illustrate the thing by a simple figure. A man with a fixed income and a small accumulation in the bank, laid away for a rainy day, is striving to live on his income, leaving his savings for the future. But business becomes so bad that his capital has to be fed into the daily expense, and when the evil day comes he will find himself without any reserve in the bank. Now, exactly this is what Foch has sought and Ludendorff has endeavored to avoid.

In 1914 the German general staff was satisfied that they had beaten Joffre so heavily in the opening battles, pursued his armies so closely, that the French commander had no reserve in the bank. This was the object of German strategy, and in the first days of September, four years ago, they were satisfied that they had attained their object, and, accordingly, they risked everything at the Marne. But they were mistaken. Joffre had kept reserves, they were available, and by putting them in he won the battle of the Marne and saved France and the world from the incalculable consequences of German supremacy.

What is the situation in 1918? This is the present question the great question. Has Ludendorff been able to preserve a mass of divisions sufficient ... to take the offensive and ... Foch back, halt his advance until the few brief weeks of the campaigning year are gone? Has Foch, ever mindful of the great test that was to come, been able to do two things, to harry the Germans sufficiently to exhaust their available reserves in the attempt to prevent his strokes from being fatal, and also to keep sufficient reserves of his own to continue the tactics he has been employing for the past month with such great success?

Here is the whole problem of the balance of the campaign of 1918. If Ludendorff has exhausted his reserves in getting his army back to the Hindenburg line he can only attempt to stand there at the risk of supreme disaster. And the chances are 10 to 1 that he will not attempt to stand at the Hindenburg line, but will go back to the frontier, for a retirement to the frontier will give him a shorter line to hold, and therefore, greater available free reserve, provided only that he does not use up this prospective reserve in saving his retiring troops from the disaster which Foch will try to prepare.

Eliminate Armies.

Laying aside all questions of territory, of geographical circumstances, interesting and appealing as these are, Foch has taught and preached for a quarter of a century the strategy of Napoleon, which which was to bring his foe to battle and destroy his armies. Bernhardi and all the German writers are of the same school. The struggle is not a struggle to liberate French towns or seize advantageous positions. As long as Foch remains in command of the allied forces all of his strategy will be directed toward the destruction of the armies of his opponent, and these armies can only be destroyed by constant attack, not under conditions imposed by the enemy, but upon those created by himself. We may say that Foch and Ludendorff were equally confident that the German armies could get back to the Hindenburg line, but while Ludendorff sought to get them back in such condition that they might, with the help of reserves collected for the purpose, pass to the offensive, Foch was determined to inflict upon the retreating troops such losses that they would reach the Hindenburg line exhausted and would only be able to reach it because reserves were thrown in to cover their withdrawal.

The Hindenburg line has imposed itself upon the minds of the people of the western nations for more than a year and a half; it seems to be as irrefragable an obstacle as the Alps or the Atlantic, but the truth is that Horne's exploit the other day, the successes of the Germans in March before St. Quentin and in May on the Aisne clearly demonstrate that lines can be taken, broken, swept aside by a well prepared and skilful attack. Everything depends upon the condition of the men who hold the lines and the skill of those who attack them.

Now, it is idle to hazard any forecast at the moment when we are entering the critical period of the campaign, and yet it seems to me that Foch has so far imposed his will upon Ludendorff that any long pause at the Hindenburg line will be impossible. The German has too nearly exhausted his reserves; we may guess this from the number of prisoners taken and equally from the fact that half a dozen times he has been surprised in the act of retiring and compelled to turn around and fight, losing men and guns and using up his reserves.

Signs Look Good.

If there is acute danger for the Germans in merely undertaking to hold the Hindenburg line, and no one can fail to perceive that there is such danger, then Ludendorff is just as certain to clear out of the line as was Joffre to give up the line of the Somme and the Oise in August, 1914, and go back behind the Marne to enable his reserves to reorganize. Ludendorff has got something of a start upon his pursuers in the last week. The last few days have seen no such close fighting, no such captures, as did other periods since the retreat began. He will lose this advantage if he undertakes a long stay in the Hindenburg line, and when he does have to retire he will have to run all the risks of the recent retirement, the chief of which is that he may reach his next line in such shape that he cannot there take the offensive.

In sum, and the point is capital, Ludendorff cannot accept an absolute defensive, to do this is to fly in the face of all German and French military principle. He must retire, whether to the Hindenburg line, the line of the Scheldt and the Meuse, the line of the Meuse or that of the Rhine, until he gains a sufficient free reserve to enable him to strike back. If his retreat to the Hindenburg line has been as successful as he hoped, as successful as was necessary, he will shortly be able to employ his reserves and we shall have a German counter offensive which will, for the moment, pin down the allies and prevent further allied offensives for the few weeks that remain of the present campaign. We are going to know about this in a very short time. This offensive, too, may come anywhere between Nieuport and Belfort.

But if, as all signs would seem to indicate and as I believe, the German retreat has been unsuccessful, unsuccessful because in the course of retirement the reserves that were to have been used at the end of the operation have been consumed, then Ludendorff will go back to the Belgian frontier and stand on a line from the coast either north or south of Lille, through Valenciennes and Maubeuge to Hirson and thence to the Meuse near Mezieres; and thereafter behind the Meuse to the Verdun front, where it will follow the present line. Such a retirement, successfully conducted, would free the Germans from the present close pursuit of Foch and enable Ludendorff to organize his counter offensive, or, at worst, occupy the time between now and the end of the fighting season and enable the German commander to prepare for the next campaign.

Meantime, if Ludendorff attemps to stand on the Hindenburg line without the adequate reserves for a counter offensive he will do so only because of the political conditions which will be created by a further retirement. These are unmistakable. Retreat to the frontier will mean the surrender of most of all the French territory now held as a basis for negotiation and as a pawn for German colonies. A German peace offensive launched at the close of a campaign which has seen the Germans retire from the Marne to the Belgian line will gain little headway, because in no allied capital will there be any disposition to grant favorable terms to an enemy whose defeat has been so clearly established upon the map and in the battlefield. In a word, the allies will seek not a negotiated peace on the basis of existing things, but a peace based upon that complete triumph which will seem to all their publics now assured.

We cannot measure the relative value of the moral and the military elements and therefore we cannot know whether Ludendorff will undertake the risk at all, trusting to possible bad weather and banking on every element of luck, to hang on to the Hindenburg line until the end of the campaign. We cannot be absolutely sure, although we have sound reason for believing that there should be no counter offensive at the Hindenburg line. If this should be possible, then and only then would this line be tenable for the Germans from the military point of view.

On the other hand, we may be sure, and Foch has given us his word for it, that every effort will be made to continue the allied offensive, and for this Foch has the British second army of Plumer's about Ypres, which has not been engaged; the French army east of Rheims, which won the first and most important stage of the second battle of the Marne, and a very great number of American divisions, unquestionably concentrating in Lorraine for the new blow which began Thursday.

Foch has now reached the point Ludendorff reached in July; to retain the offensive now means to win the whole campaign decisively, turn the Germans out of Northern France and expose them to the deadly perils of still another retreat, with all that this will mean to the organization and spirit of the army and to the morale of the civil populations not merely of Germany but of all the allied nations. A further German retreat will have unmistakable effects not alone in Berlin, not merely in Paris and London, but also in Vienna, Sofia and Constantinople.

We have to guard against extreme optimism and keep clearly in mind the essential facts of the situation. Our problem this year was to prevent the Germans from winning the continental phase of the war by victorie sin France and over the French and British before the American troops arrived in effective numbers. We had accomplished this when we defeated Ludendorff at the Marne. Since then we have taken back substantially all the ground gained by the Germans since March 21 and won enormous local successes, measured by prisoners and guns taken.

JAP FARMERS GETTING RICH WAR PROFITS

Tokio, (by mail)—Japanese farmers have long purses, well filled, as a result of war prosperity which has come to them since last autumn, according to G. Shimura, president of the Hypothec Bank of Japan.

A year ago these farmers seeming inextricably burdened with debt, owing their banks an aggregate of $100,000,000, and being compelled to pay a yearly interest of $7,500,000, Shimura said. Today the farmers have taken up $125,000,000 of these loans, are making almost no further requests for loans, and are buying heavily of Hypothec Bank debentures of the smaller denominations. From being insistent borrowers, they have become transformed into investors.

For three years, the Japanese employed in industries reaped the chief gains from the war. Last fall, the tables turned. Prices of rice, raw silk and tea were lifted upward by the war demand and have stayed up. The result is the unparalleled prosperity of Japanese farmers. On the other hand these high prices have created a heavy demand for small loans in industrial communities, as factory workers have felt the pinch of the higher cost of living.

Since prosperity has attended the life of farmers, deposit rates of banks in the provinces have become much lower than those of town banks. Deposits with cooperative clubs in agricultural districts are also increasing with astounding rapidity, President Shimura said. With farmers so well provided with funds, and with prospects good disappointing to the newly arrived for even greater income from the coming harvests, it is expected that the greater part of any issue of government bonds, such as to meet expenses of the expedition to Siberia, will be purchased by the rice, silk and tea farmers of Japan.

Jefferson to the People.

From Jefferson's Second Inaugural.

I repair, then, fellow citizens, to the post you have assigned me. With experience enough in subordinate affairs to have seen the difficulties of this, the greatest of all, I have learned to expect that it will rarely fall to the lot of imperfect man to retire from this station with the reputation and the favor which bring him into it. Without pretensions to that high confidence you reposed in our first and greatest revolutionary character, whose preeminent services had entitled him to the first place in his country's love, and destined for him the fairest page in the volume of faithful history, I ask so much confidence only as may give firmness and effect to the legal administration of your affairs. I shall often go wrong through defeat of judgment. When right, I shall often be thought wrong by those whose positions will not command a view of the whole ground. I ask your indulgence for my own errors, which will never be intentional, and your support against the errors of others, who may condemn what they would not if seen in all its parts. The approbation implied by your suffrage is a great consolation to me for the past, and my future solicitude will be to retain the good opinion of those who have bestowed it in advance, to conciliate that of others by doing them all the good in my power, and to be instrumental to the happiness and freedom of all.

AMERICANS FROM ALL LANDS HELP LOAN

"The Star-Spangled Banner" sung in English by a chorus of more than thirty persons, none of whom are of the same nationality and most of whom are foreign-born; the "roll call of nations," directed by the only simon-pure American, an Indian; nationalistic demonstrations of the history, sports, art and industries of the peoples of every corner of the world; unique displays of the quaint customs and habits of many races differing widely in almost every way; these and many other striking features have been taken unto themselves by the woman's council of the fourth Liberty loan organization as part of their share in raising the billions for the fourth loan. To handle this work committees of foreign-speaking women have been formed in every state, county and other subdivision. The loan opens September 28 and continues until October 19.

According to Felix J. Streyckmans, federal reserve director of the foreign language division, and Mrs. Constantine Howard, executive secretary of the woman's council, some idea of the stupendous task which the women of the foreign division have set out for themselves can be gained from the fact that virtually all that the members of their choruses and other participants in the pageants which are to be given have in common is that they are all Americans now.

In placing before the public the "roll call of nations," every nationality in each district, state, county, city and town will be asked to designate one person to represent that nation in the dress of his or her native land. They will also be asked to sing their native airs or relate some of the folk lore of the country which they or their ancestors left. Native dances, sports and games will also be on the program.

The food question being one of the most important before the world today, the women of the foreign-language division believe that there is much to be learned from a conservation and economic standpoint from the foods used and methods of preparation employed in the kitchens of the foreign-speaking woman. To this end every nationality represented in a community is to prepare a food exhibit to show English-speaking Americans how they can save to help win the war.

That the all-American choruses, roll calls, pageants and exhibits shall have proper artistic setting, the woman's council has secured the services of Pierre Nuyttens, celebrated Chicago artist, as consulting director of the council. Nuyttens will also be chairman of the council's committee on production of spectacles.

"There is no greater force toward the final welding of the American soul than by bringing together for patriotic purposes the foreign-speaking persons of the country," says Mrs. Howard.

LIBERTY DAY OF THE FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN

Anniversary of Discovery of America Designated as Liberty Day of the Big Freedom Drive.

Saturday, October 12, the anniversary of the discovery of America, has been designated as the Liberty day of the fourth Liberty loan drive.

It has been the custom in previous Liberty loan campaigns to select the second Friday of the drive as Liberty day. For the fourth loan the plan suggested by the United States bureau of education to designate October 12 as Liberty day has been adopted.

The day will be celebrated throughout the country, and it is proposed to have a Harvest Home festival in every school district in the United States. The treasury department of the United States, in co-operation with the United States bureau of education, will request every school district from the Atlantic to the Pacific to arrange for the celebration of the discovery of America with an appropriate festival.

The plans made for the observance of the anniversary of the discovery of America by the Liberty loan organization as Liberty day are contained in a letter from L. B. Franklin, director of war loan organization.

In outlining the plans this letter states:

"There is a logical unity between both these ideas and the Liberty loan. When the people of a community recount the fruits of their summer's labor, they will naturally ask themselves what share of them they ought to invest in Liberty bonds. When they come to realize what the discovery of America has meant to them personally, what is has meant for the cause of freedom and democracy, what it will mean for the salvation of the world in the present world tragedy, when they begin to feel all this, they must of necessity say, this is worth investing in, worth fighting for, worth making any sacrifice for.

"To create this state of mind is the purpose of celebrating the discovery of America. It is our hope that the nation-wide celebration will stir such enthusiasm over America's mission in the world as to enable each community to reach its quota by that day. Let every local community make this its goal and on Liberty day announce the achievement and rejoice over it."

The 300,000 schools in the United States will receive suggestions for a Harvest Home festival from the bureau of education. This form of festival is the earliest form of American celebrations, and it is thought desirable to carry the idea over into city life as well as of the country. City and country communities will celebrate the day each after its own fashion, but the Harvest Home idea will dominate both.

"Whatever a community's particular type of product may be, on Liberty day its aim should be to reap a harvest of dollars for democracy," said Mr. Franklin. "On this day we meet, not as city people or country people, but as citizens, all united for the single purpose of serving the nation by devoting a part of our products to its needs.

"There is something vastly inspiring in the thought of all the local neighborhoods in the United States meeting the same day on the basis of citizenship with united devotion to the ideals for which America stands. 'Morale is to force as three to one,' said Napoleon. To mobilize the spirit of America is of paramount importance. October 12 furnishes the occasion for expressing the nation's spirit in definite terms of service to meet the nation's present need.

"The idea is big, the opportunity is great. The time is short. This should be made the most successful national celebration since the war started."

Help Buy More Tanks.

Tanks are a big factor now in rolling back the German lines. They are saving the lives of thousands of men by crushing the vicious machine-gun nests which are the worst obstacle to infantry advance. Invest in Liberty bonds and Uncle Sam will be able to protect our troops with a life saving supply of tanks.

FINDS SON AMONG WOUNDED

New York Woman in Paris Voluntarily Aiding Nurses Discovers Own Boy.

Paris.—A New York woman attached to the American Red Cross happened to be in Paris and volunteered to help in caring for the wounded coming in from the battle field. She was working busily when startled by a loud cry of "Mother!"

Turning she saw her own son, a young lieutenant in the American army. He had been wounded in the leg by shrapnel. The first news she had had that her son was engaged in the battle was when she heard his cry. She obtained permission to accompany her son to a hospital. After seeing that he was attended to, she went back to the station to cheer, as she said, the boys who had no hope of finding a mother to welcome them.

The mother is a prominent social worker in New York, and has been doing Red Cross relief work among the refugees in France. Her work usually keeps her in the south of France.

FAILS TO REMOVE HIS HAT

Manager Knocks Down Employee and Then Hands Him "Blue Envelope."

Miami, Okla.—Because an employee of the Riverside park here would not take off his hat when the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner," Manager A. H. De Vaux knocked the offending lid off the man's head, after he had asked him three times to remove it. As the man stooped over to pick up the hat, Mr. De Vaux gave him a right uppercut to the jaw and he took the count. He also received a "blue envelope."

Improving Influence.

"You have a new cook?" "Yes," replied Mrs. Crosslots. "Is she doing good work?" "Yes. She can't cook very much, but she served notice that she wouldn't stay if my daughter didn't quit playing ragtime on the piano."—Washington Star.

That Is What Every American Must Do in Order That War Shall Be Won.

DEMOCRACY BEING TESTED

Victory Over Teuton Despotism a Matter of Money and Each Patriot Will Deny Himself All but Necessities That It May Be Achieved.

By HERBERT QUICK.

It has become a common saying that democracy is inefficient. We have often read that it takes a despotism to do things.

The Germans believed that they could win this war and conquer the world for two reasons; first, because, in spite of some things which look democratic, the German empire is a despotism, and second, because it is the first despotism in the history of the world which has reached a very high point in general physical and mental development. They and many people in the democratic countries believed that they could win against the democracies of the world.

Democracy, they said, would be the anvil; despotism the hammer.

Democracy would be the target; despotism the gun.

Surprises for Despotism.

The splendid resistance of Belgium and France, the magnificent rallying of Great Britain to the trumpet call, and the intrepid decision of Italy to join in resistance to the German attack, were the greatest surprises which up to that time had ever been encountered by a despot. Before the war had been going on for six months some of the wisest of the cold and cruel minds of Germany began to wonder whether after all the democracies of the world were not too strong to be overcome.

And then came the biggest surprise of the war. The greatest democracy of the world—the United States—slowly began to realize that the whole cause of freedom for the common man, not only in Europe and in Asia, but here in America, was at stake in this war. Slowly the idea began to penetrate the American mind that the machinations of Germany constitute a greater peril to this country than did the issue fought out in the American revolution or the decisive strife of our own war between the states.

America saw at last that if Germany wins this war democracy will have failed not only the democracy of European countries, but the democracy of the world. There would be nothing left for us through all the future but a losing fight against the most cruel and efficient despotism of all time.

And finally, in spite of our own peaceful history, in spite of our own love of peace, in spite of German lies and German propaganda, and the damnable plots of German spies, the United States acted.

The nation reached slowly for the sword, drew it, and plunged with all her mighty power into this dreadful fray.

And so, on some of the bloodiest battlefields that ever desolated the soil of any country our splendid American soldiers are bearing the Stars and Stripes to victory.

DEMOCRACY IS PROVING ITSELF EFFICIENT.

They carry the Stars and Stripes to victory alongside the flags of Great Britain, France, Italy and a score of other nations, because they know that they are fighting the old battle of right against might, of democracy against despotism, and that if they lose, the whole history of the United States becomes at once as if it never had been.

Democracy Is Proving Efficient.

That is the thing which must strike terror to the hearts of the poisoners, violators and baby killers of Berlin.

We have met and vanquished the submarine. We are now placing in the field in Europe our second million of men, and back of that second million there is a third million, a fourth million, a fifth million and still other millions of men.

We have shown ourselves efficient in production. We have more than made good our promise to send food to our allies. We have organized our industries for war.

We have firmly resolved that having drawn the sword we will throw away the scabbard and never sheath that sword except in victory.

Victory a Matter of Money.

But this war is a progressive thing. It cannot be won through things we have done, but must be carried on to victory through things which we must do in the future. On one side we see that splendid host of young men carrying our banners in the battlefields of France and Flanders. On the other side we must remember that war, and this war more than any other war which was ever waged, is a matter of food, of shelter, of clothing, of munitions, of weapons, of roads, of engines, of cars, of ships, of hospitals, of medicines, and of everything which gives to our boys in the field that magnificent dash and vim, and power which has struck the German soldiers with dismay.

It is a matter of money not only for the treasury of the United States, but for all our allies.

When you buy a Liberty bond or a War Savings stamp it means money for the United States treasury.

When you pay your income taxes or any of your other contributions to the government it means money for the United States treasury.

But money is only a representative of value and a medium of exchange. Do not look upon your dollar as a mere piece of currency. Do not look upon the United States treasury as a mere repository of your funds.

Our Treasury Upholding World.

The United States treasury today is the god atlas who holds the world upon his shoulders.

It furnishes money to everyone of our allies which needs money. It breathes hope and confidence into any allied army which is losing heart. It puts in the field the great gun which answers the German gun with shot for shot. It keeps our armies going forward instead of backward. It holds the line against the German onslaught.

The treasury of the United States is the power behind our own army and all the armies of our allies.

During the coming year this nation must raise $24,000,000,000. We have called these loans in the past Liberty loans. It is about time to begin calling them Victory loans. Whatever we call them, however, $24,000,000,000 during the next year the United States government must have to carry out our great, magnificent and world-saving program. About $16,000,000,000 of this must be raised by loans, and $8,000,000,000 by taxation.

If we do not raise this money the United States treasury will have failed, and when the United States treasury fails the war is lost. If the war is lost, democracy is lost—the world is lost.

The raising of this $24,000,000,000 is a tremendous task. It is the supreme test of the greatness of America.

Must Give Half Our Earnings.

The whole earning power of this country is about $50,000,000,000 a year; so that out of every $50 produced in this country during the next year the government must have $24. The division of our wealth during the next year must be practically on a 50-50 basis with the government.

Now, anyone can see that this thing must be done.

IT MUST BE DONE!

Anyone can see that if we give 50 per cent of all we produce to the government we cannot live as we always have lived.

During the past year or so we have just been scraping up the loose change and handing it to the government to finance the war. We must now go to the very heart of our ability and give until this great piece of financial work is accomplished.

He who pays taxes in whatever form they may rest upon him, must pay, and pay cheerfully, to make up that $8,000,000,000 which we must raise by taxation.

He who has money must invest it in Liberty bonds and War Savings stamps, so as to furnish his share of that $16,000,000,000 which the government must borrow.

He who has no money to invest must save, and invest his savings.

Must Become Even Stingy.

We must become a saving, an economical, a thrifty, a stingy nation towards everything but war.

We must go ragged and shabby.

We must turn and dye and renovate our old clothes.

We must postpone repairs and betterments.

We must put off the building of the new house.

We must do those things only which are of productive value.

We must economize in motor cars, in gasoline and in all forms of fuel.

We must burn wood where possible. If we burn coal we must sift the ashes.

We must simplify and cheapen our diet.

We must cut out luxuries and things which are unnecessary.

We must have our shoes patched and wear them as long as they will hang together.

We must buy nothing which must be shipped over the railroads, except where necessary.

We must live like misers and work like horses.

We must regard the smallest economy as of the most tremendous importance, no matter whether we are rich or poor.

We must save electricity.

We must spend our vacations at home.

We must get along without hired help except in case of absolute necessity or for the promotion of production.

We must put nothing savable in the garbage barrel.

We must throw overboard all the dead weight of life so that the ship may not sink.

We must strip ourselves to the skin of everything which hampers our movements, so that we may win this fight.

This nation during the next year must become an athlete, abjuring every luxury, living on the plainest food, eating nothing, drinking nothing, wearing nothing except that which will make for victory.

HERE'S THE COST OF JUST A LITTLE BATTLE

Liberty Bonds Furnish Munitions and Supplies That Win Battles and Save Lives of Fighters.

French naval statisticians have carefully figured out the cost of a modest little naval battle. The sea fight at Jutland in 1916, when the Germans thought to prove the inferiority of the British war fleet, supplies plenty of material for such computations.

The battle in the Skagerak lasted 45 minutes.

It cost England and Germany combined $300,000,000.

Each minute of fighting cost $6,666,666.

We have some new war financing in the fourth Liberty loan. The United States wants to borrow enough money to carry on the fighting. All our preparations up to the present time have been cared for by the first, second and third loans. The fourth is the "Fighting loan."

The fourth loan may seem large when stated in terms of billions. The amount is not large when considered in terms of fighting. Just to illustrate: At the rate of expenditure shown during the naval battle of Jutland the United States wants to borrow on the fourth Liberty bonds enough to support only 16 hours and 40 minutes of fighting.

The question is, will you be one of 25,000,000 loyal Americans to "put up" your ratable share of fighting the Germans for 16 hours and 40 minutes? Will you lend the government your trivial pro rata?

It is a small thing to ask. Let's look into the arithmetic of it.

Your personal share of the national wealth $2,140.00
Your personal share in the national annual income 740.00

That is to say, you get a "dividend" of about 35 per cent on your "pro rata" of the national wealth.

You are asked to be one of 25,000,000 loyal Americans who will consent to lend about a third of that "dividend" to help fight the German for 16 hours and 40 minutes.

The United States isn't "passing the hat." The United States isn't asking anybody for a "hand-out." No more is the government asking you to "stand for a touch." Just the reverse of that.

The government asks to borrow one-third of the "velvet" that comes in to your bank account annually as your "dividend" from the business operations that are possible only because the United States protects your life and property on land and sea. And in evidence of its borrowing the government merely takes the kind of money you have in your pocket and gives you another kind of money as security for the loan.

To make it clearer: The United States issues "promises-to-pay-on-demand"—without interest—and that's the kind of money you have in your purse. When you lend that kind of money to the government you receive as security Liberty bonds, which are United States "promises-to-pay-at-maturity"—with interest. In other words, you only swap one kind of money for another kind that is better—$4.25 better on each $100.

However, the upshot of the matter is this:

We are fighting a war—and it is a real, bona fide war, without any "stage business" or imitation. It is known (on the authority of President Wilson) that the war is to a finish—no "draw," "stalemate" or "lie down." It may run into a cost as heavy as $6,666,000 a minute if it gets to the scale of the little battle of Jutland. The United States must be ready for anything and everything.

Therefore you and everybody else must lend the government every free dollar that has been saved or can be saved as we go along. We must take all the fourth Liberty bonds that we possibly can pay for.

CAPT. KIDD WAS A HOARDER

Hoarding Money and Hiding It Does Nobody Any Good—Buy Bonds.

It takes very little ingenuity to "cache" money where the government can't find it. Captain Kidd buried lot of his pirate "swag" somewhere along the Spanish main, where no one ever did find it—where it never did a living soul any good—never built a hospital—never alleviated human suffering—never helped along the cause of civilization and humanity—dead money: absolutely dead, like the soul of the pirate who hid it.

The brave thing now isn't hiding money.

Service with the colors, or service backing up the fighters who have offered their lives for the righteous cause.

Hiding and hoarding money is not service. It is the opposite; it is taking money out of service. It is a species of desertion.

Sometimes he is merely thoughtless.

Sometimes he is just selfish.

But anyway he is doing a great wrong to the United States and a deadly wrong to the world and civilization.

The world does not need Captain Kidds. Nor does America.

But America does need 20,000,000 more Liberty Bond buyers.

If you have any money stowed away out of sight bring it out and have it changed into the most benign of all forms, fourth Liberty bonds.

"I told you so, Deputy Chief! You should have taken your precautions. Mlle. Levasseur's attitude ought to have warned you. She evidently knows the criminal and wanted to go to him, ask him for explanations and, for all we can tell, save him, if he managed to convince her. And what will happen between them? When the villain sees that he is discovered, he will be capable of anything."

M. Desmalions again questioned the mother superior and soon learned that Florence, before taking refuge in the nursing home, had spent 48 hours in some furnished apartments on the Ile Saint-Louis.

The clue was not worth much, but they could not neglect it. The Prefect of Police, who retained all his doubts with regard to Florence and attached extreme importance to the girl's capture, ordered Weber and his men to follow up this trail without delay. Don Luis accompanied the deputy chief.

Events at once showed that the Prefect of Police was right. Florence had taken refuge in the lodging-house on the Ile Saint-Louis, where she had engaged a room under an assumed name. But she had no sooner arrived than a stout boy called at the house asked for her, and went away with her.

They went up to her room and found a parcel done up in a newspaper, containing a nun's habit. The thing was obvious.

Later, in the course of the evening, Weber succeeded in discovering the small boy. He was the son of the porter of one of the houses in the neighborhood. Where could he have taken Florence? When questioned, he definitely refused to betray the lady who had trusted him and who had cried when she kissed him. His mother entreated him. His father boxed his ears. He was inflexible.

In any case, it was not unreasonable to conclude that Florence had not left the Ile Saint-Louis or its immediate vicinity. The detectives persisted in their search all the evening. Weber established his headquarters in a tap room where every scrap of information was brought to him and where his men returned from time to time to receive his orders. He also remained in constant communication with the Prefect's office.

At half-past ten a squad of detectives, sent by the Prefect, placed themselves at the deputy chief's disposal. Mazeroux, newly arrived from Rouen and furious with Florence, joined them.

The search continued. Don Luis had gradually assumed its management; and it was he who, so to speak, inspired Weber to ring at this or that door and to question this or that person.

At 11 o'clock the hunt still remained fruitless; and Don Luis was the victim of an increasing and irritating restlessness. But, shortly after midnight, a shrill whistle drew all the men to the eastern extremity of the island, at the end of the Quai d'Anjou.

Two detectives stood waiting for them, surrounded by a small crowd of onlookers. They had just learned that, some distance farther away, on the Quai Henri IV, which does not form part of the [illegible] up outside a house, that there was the noise of a dispute, and that the cab had subsequently driven off in the direction of Vincennes.

They hastened to the Quai Henri IV and at once found the house. There was a door one the ground floor opening straight on the pavement. The taxi had stopped for a few minutes in front of this door. Two persons, a woman and a man leading her along, had left the ground floor flat. When the door of the taxi was shut, a man's voice had shouted from the inside:

"Drive down the Boulevard Saint-Germain and along the quays. Then take the Versailles Road."

But the porter's wife was able to furnish more precise particulars. Puzzled by the tenant of the ground floor, whom she had only seen once, in the evening, who paid his rent by checks signed in the name of Charles and who but very seldom came to his apartment, she had taken advantage of the fact that her lodge was next to the flat to listen to the sound of voices. The man and the woman were arguing. At one moment the man cried, in a louder tone:

"Come with me, Florence. I insist upon it, and I will give you every proof of my innocence tomorrow morning. And, if you nevertheless refuse to become my wife, I shall leave the country. All my preparations are made."

A little later he began to laugh and, again raising his voice, said:

"Afraid of what, Florence? That I shall kill you perhaps? No, no, have no fear——"

The portress had heard nothing more. But was this not enough to justify every alarm?

"Come along! I knew it: the man is capable of anything. It's the tiger! He means to kill her!"

He rushed outside, dragging the deputy toward the two police motors waiting five hundred yards down. Meanwhile, Mazeroux was trying to protest.

"It would be better to search the house, to pick up some clues——"

"Oh," shouted Don Luis, increasing his pace, "the house and the clues will keep! . . . But he's gaining ground, the ruffian—and he has Florence with him—and he's going to kill her! It's a trap! . . . I'm sure of it——"

He was shouting in the dark, dragging the two men along with irresistible force.

They neared the motors.

"Get ready!" he ordered as soon as he was in sight. "I'll drive myself."

He tried to get into the driver's seat. But Weber objected and pushed him inside, saying:

"Don't trouble—the chauffeur knows his business. He'll drive faster than you would."

Don Luis, the deputy chief, and two detectives crowded into the cab. Mazeroux took his seat beside the chauffeur.

"Versailles Road!" roared Don Luis.

The car started; and he continued:

"We've got him! You see, it's a magnificent opportunity. He must be going pretty fast, but without forcing the pace, because he doesn't think we're after him. Oh, the villain, we'll make him sit up! Quicker, driver! But what the devil are we loaded up like this for? You and I, Deputy Chief, would have been enough. Hi, Mazeroux, get down and jump into the other car! That'll be better, won't it, Deputy? It's absurd——"

He interrupted himself; and, as he was sitting on the back seat, between the deputy chief and a detective, he rose toward the window and muttered:

"Why, look here, what's the idot doing? That's not the road! I say, what does this mean?"

A roar of laughter was the only answer. It came from Weber, who was shaking with delight. Don Luis stifled an oath and, making a tremendous effort, tried to leap from the car. Six hands fell upon him and held him motionless. The deputy chief had him by the throat. The detectives clutched his arms. There was no room for him to struggle within the restricted space of the small car; and he felt the cold iron of a revolver on his temple.

"None of your nonsense," growled Weber, "or I'll blow out your brains my boy! Aha! you didn't expect this! It's Weber's revenge, eh?"

And, when Perenna continued to wiggle, he went on, in a threatening tone:

"You'll have only yourself to blame, mind! . . . I'm going to count three: one, two——"

"But what's it all about?" bellowed Don Luis.

"Prefect's orders, received just now."

"What orders?"

"To take you to the lockup if the Florence girl escaped us again."

"Have you a warrant?"

"I have."

"And what next?"

"What next? Nothing: the Sante—the examining magistrate——"

"But, hang it all, the tiger's making tracks meanwhile! Oh, rot! Is it possible to be so dense? What mugs those fellows are! Oh, dash it!"

He was fuming with rage, and when he saw that they were driving into the prison yard, he gathered all his strength, knocked the revolver out of the deputy's hand, and stunned one of the detectives with a blow of his fist.

But ten men came crowding round the doors. Resistance was useless. He understood this, and his rage increased.

"The idots!" he shouted, while they surrounded him and searched him at the door of the office. "The rotters! The bunglers! To go mucking up a job like that! They can lay hands on the villain if they want to, and they lock up the honest man—while the villain makes himself scarce! An he'll do more murder yet! Florence! Florence . . ."

Under the lamp light, in the midst of the detectives holding him, he was magnificent in his helpless violence.

They dragged him away. With an unparalleled display of strength, he drew himself up, shook off the men who were hanging on to him like a pack of hounds worrying some animal at bay, got rid of Weber, and accosted Mazeroux in familiar tones. He was gloriously masterful, almost calm, so wholly did he appear to control his seething rage. He gave his orders in breathless little sentences, curt as words of command.

"Mazeroux, run around to the Prefect's. Ask him to ring up Valengly: yes, the Prime Minister. I want to see him. Have him informed. Ask the Prefect to say it's I: the man who made the German Emperor play his game. My name? He knows. Or if he forgets, the Prefect can tell him my name."

He paused for a second or two, and then, calmer to him and just and then, calmer still, he declared:

"Arsene Lupin! Telephone those two words to him and just say this: 'Arsene Lupin wishes to speak to Prime Minister on very important business.' Get that through to him at once. The Prime Minister would be very angry if he heard afterward that they had neglected to communicate my request. Go, Mazeroux, and then find the villain's tracks again."

The governor of the prison had opened the jail book.

"You can enter my name, Monsieur le Directeur," said Don Luis. "Put down 'Arsene Lupin.'"

The governor smiled and said:

"I should find a difficulty in putting down any other. It's on the warrant: 'Arsene Lupin, alias Don Luis Perenna.'"

Don Luis felt a little shudder pass through him at the sound of those words. The fact was that he was arrested under the name of Arsene Lupin made his position doubly dangerous.

"Ah," he said, "so they've resolved——"

"I should think so!" said Weber, in a tone of triumph. "We've resolved to take the bull by the horns and to go straight for Lupin. Plucky of us, eh? Never fear, we'll show you something better than that!"

Don Luis did not flinch. Turning to Mazeroux again he said:

"Don't forget my instructions, Mazeroux."

But there was a fresh blow in store for him. The sergeant did not answer his remark. Don Luis watched him closely and once more gave a start. He had just perceived that Mazeroux also was surrounded by men who were holding him tight. And the poor sergeant stood silently shedding tears.

Weber's liveliness increased.

"You'll have to excuse him, Lupin. Sergeant Mazeroux accompanies you to prison, though not in the same cell."

"Ah!" said Don Luis, drawing himself up. "Is Mazeroux put into jail?"

"Prefect's orders, warrant duly executed."

"And on what charge?"

"Accomplice of Arsene Lupin."

"Mazeroux my accomplice? Get out! Mazeroux? The most honest man that ever lived!"

"The most honest man that ever lived, as you say. That didn't prevent people from going to him when they wanted to write to you or prevent him from bringing you the letters. Which proves that he knew where you were hanging out. And there's a good deal more which we'll explain to you, Lupin, in good time. You'll have plenty of fun, I assure you."

Don Luis murmered:

"My poor Mazeroux!"

Then, raising his voice, he said:

"Don't cry, old chap. It's just a matter of the remainder of the night. Yes, I'll share my cards with you; and we'll turn the king and mark game in a very few hours. Don't cry. I've got a much finer berth waiting for you, a more honorable and above all a more lucrative position. I have just what you want.

"You don't imagine, surely, that I wasn't prepared for this! Why, you know me! Take it from me: I shall be at liberty tomorrow and the government, after setting you free, will pitch you into a colonelcy of something, with a marshal's pay attached to it. So don't cry, Mazeroux."

Then, addressing Weber, he said to him in the voice of a principal giving an order, and knowing that the order will be executed without discussion:

"Monsieur, I will ask you to fulfill the confidential mission which I was entrusting to Mazeroux. First, inform the Prefect of Police that I have a communication of the very highest importance to make to the Prime Minister. Next, discover the tiger's tracks at Versailles before the night is over. I know your merit, Monsieur, and I rely entirely upon your diligence and your zeal. Meet me at 12 o'clock tomorrow."

And, still maintaining his attitude of a principal who has given his instructions, he allowed himself to be taken to his cell.

It was ten to one. For the last 50 minutes the enemy had been bowling along the highroad, carrying off Florence like a prey which it now seemed impossible to snatch from him.

The door was locked and bolted.

Don Luis reflected:

Even presuming that Monsieur le Prefect consents to ring up Valenglay, he won't do so before the morning. So they've given the villain eight hours start before I'm free. Eight hours! Curse it!"

He thought a little longer, then shrugged his shoulders with the air of one who, for the moment, has nothing better to do than wait and flung himself on his fattress, murmuring:

"Hushaby, Lupin!"

CHAPTER XVII.

Open Sesame!

In spite of his usual facility for sleep, Don Luis slept for three hours at most. He was racked with too much anxiety; and, though his plan of conduct was worked out mathematically, he could not help foreseeing all the obstacles which were likely to frustrate that plan. Of course, Weber would speak to M. Desmalions. But would M. Desmalions telephone to Valenglay?

"He is sure to telephone," Don Luis declared, stamping his foot. "It doesn't let him in for anything. And, at the same time, he would be running a big risk if he refused, especially as Valenglay must have been consulted about my arrest and is obviously kept informed of all that happens."

He next asked himself what exactly Valenglay could do, once he was told. For, after all, was it not too much to expect that the head of the government, that the Prime Minster, should put himself out to obey the injunctions and assist the schemes of M. Arsene Lupin?

"He will come!" he cried, with the same persistent confidence. "Valenglay doesn't care a hang for form and ceremony and all that nonsense. He will come, even if it is only out of curiosity, to learn what the Kaiser's friend has to say to him. Besides, he knows me! I am not one of those beggars who inconvenience people for nothing. There's always something to be gained by meeting me. He'll come!"

But another question at once presented itself to his mind. Valenglay's coming in no way implied his consent to the bargain which Perenna meant to propose to him. And even if Don Luis succeeded in convincing him, what risks remained! How many doubtful points to overcome! And then the possibilities of failure!

Would Weber pursue the fugitive's motor car with the necessary decision and boldness? Would he get on the track again? And, having got on the track, would he be certain not to lose it?

EXPLAINS INCREASED AIRPLANE LOSSES

New York—Steady increase of German airplane losses is admitted by Capt. Otto Lehman in an article published in the Berlin Tageblatt, reviewing the progress of aerial warfare during the year 1917-1918. Captain Lehman attributes the growing losses to two causes: Development of the fighting airplane as a weapon against enemy infantry and the enhancement of the number of fighting machines due to the transfer of those on the eastern, or Russian, front, to the west front.

"It will be noticed that since January and February, 1918, our figures for losses show a steady increase," Captain Lehman writes. "The reason for that, however, is the increased participation of airplanes resulting from the fact that the German flyers who had been operating on the eastern front migrated to the western front when fighting ceased in the Russian theater. The increased participation, of course, resulted logically in larger total loss.

"The eastern flyer, who had been accustomed to quite different fighting conditions, in the beginning, undoubtedly had to pay a bloody apprenticeship in fighting with French and British. The Russian as an aerial opponent is nowise to be compared with the Frenchman and Englishman.

"It would be fundamentally wrong to draw the conclusion from the rise in German losses at the beginning of 1918, that our superiority had waned. Still another factor explains our higher losses. As an infantry plane the aerial weapon is taking part in a considerably increased measure in fighting the attackers on land. Entire squadrons of battle planes, so called infantry flyers, accompany the storming of the never failing infantry and by taking full advantage of their speed, attack the enemy reserves at low altitudes with bombs and machine guns.

"These attacks are made often at the ridiculously low altitudes of 100 meters and even 10 meters. It is therefore at first glance clear that these new tasks expose the airplanes to every shot fired from the earth and must increase our loss account."

How Germany Treats Negroes.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

It is true that the negroes have good cause to fight against world domination by Germany. History has shown that in Africa Germany has treated the natives worse than any other government which has invaded that continent.

Belgian individual cruelties in the Congo caused indignation in Belgium and compelled the British government to investigate and put a stop to them. But in Germany's treatment of the natives, extermination of whole tribes was the policy and this policy was not only excused but exalted as right by German publicists.

> The Hereros must now quit the soil. If they refuse, I shall force them with the gun. Every Herero, with or without a weapon, with or without cattle, found in German territory I will have shot. I shall not look after the women and children, but will drive them back to their own people or shoot them.

The German pastor, Schowalter, wrote in 1907 that as a result of this policy about 15,000 Hereros died of hunger on the desert. Almost the entire Herero tribe was destroyed. And Dr. Rohrback, imperial commissioner for Southwest Africa, reported that "the question is solved. The Hereros have lost their land, but that cannot be regarded as tragic, owing to the splendid fertility of the land, which is now fiscal."

That is to say, it paid. This is the German test.

Open the Gates.

Ye who so grandly went the way of death,
Singing Hosannas with your failing breath,
And now look back upon the life you spurned
As on a childish trinket overturned,
Seeing our globe as but a spinning toy,
Too frail and far to longer yield you joy—
Open the gates for us, that we may hear
Those vaster harmonies that thrill your ear
We, too, would gaze upon that nobler view,
Would breathe the shining air that girdles you
God's remedy for man we, too, would know,
To heal the ailing earth of all her woe.
Open the gates for us, that we may find,
As you, the riddle solved for all mankind
Ye who so brightly bridged the great abyss,
One of you waits and yearns to answer this,
I see the glimmer of your beckoning!
Open the gates for me and I will swing
Lightly as you across the enchanted gloom
Sprinkled so thickly now with souls abloom—
Seeing the starry path your going made,
I shall be unafraid!

No More Hun Toys.

From the New York Tribune.

The Hun baby killer of today is not to be toy maker to the babies of tomorrow. "Made in Germany" was all very well on children's playthings until four years ago. Germany commanded the toy trade of the world. But now the world knows what the toy makers were.

How extensively Teutonic toys were the world's playthings may be judged from the German trade reports for 1912. Twenty million dollars' worth of toys were exported that year. The United States bought $7,000,000 worth of German toys, and the British empire an equal amount. With the outbreak of the war these exports, except in infinitesimal quantities to neutral countries, ceased.

Statistics show that the war garden crop is valued at $525,000,000.

TARIFF WALLS AND PEACE.

From the Manchester Guardian.

What kind of a world do we seek to set up as a memorial to the blood of our best? If it is a world of states each seeking to grab as much territory as it can and to close it against the rest of the world by Chinese walls, then let us have protection preference—and a peace which is like war and will generate war. For such a world the life of no man should have been taken, and it will be haunted by the ghosts of a wasted generation lured to its death by the false assurance of noble purpose. If we want a league of nations, if we want peace, if we want right feeling among men, then we must have also the commercial policy which is necessary to them, not the commercial policy which is fatal to them. There are grasping groups in all countries who, if allowed, would sacrifice the future of humanity to their own folly or self seeking. The democracies of the world must conquer in the economic, as in the military and political fields or the democracies must die.

Why Dread Old Age?

It doesn't matter how old you are if you keep well and active. Lots of folks are younger at 70 than others are at 50. Lame, bent backs, stiff, aching muscles or rheumatic joints, bad eyesight and hearing are too often due to neglected kidney trouble and not to advancing years. Don't let weak kidneys age you. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. They have made life more comfortable for thousands of elderly folks.

When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. TRAGEDY OF RUMANIA IS GRAPHICALLY TOLD

Curtain Drawn Aside By Director of Italian Hospital Who Just Came Out of Country

BY HENRY WOOD.
United Press Staff Correspondent

Rome (by mail).—What happened in Rumania, when the little Balkan country was forced to accept a German peace because of the Russian debacle is still an untold tale. When its story is written it will rank along with the tragedies of Belgium of Serbia and of Montenegro, as one of the three chapters of the war.

From the moment the central empires forced upon their diminutive prey the terms of a German peace Rumania has been as though shrouded in a veil. Every effort has been made by Germany and Austria to keep Rumania from entering into communication with her former allies. The tragedy that is still being enacted in the little country is hidden in mystery and silence.

"By Dr. Bennedetto Cimino who directed an Italian hospital at Bucharest from the beginning of the war to Italy, however, the curtain is drawn aside for the first time, and there is told the beginning of the R... ...ion and its present status.

Blocked up in Rumania by the German peace, it was only a few days ... that Dr. Cimino succeeded in ... permission to leave. He ... what took place in the little Balkan ally during the time when Germany and Austria were inflicting their terms of peace, and since then is not only graphic but of the utmost historical interest.

Dr. Cimino's story is as follows:

"I arrived at Bucharest October 30 1916, and left on July ... 1918.

"No one can conceive what Rumania is at the present time. The ignorance in which the Germans keep the native population of all that is happening in the rest of the world exceeds the imagination. The defeats, the disasters, the facts that are contrary to the German interests and completely unknown in Rumania while the Germans publish, every day a series of manufactured news and falsehoods that a portion of the public invariably believes in the end.

"The royal family is at Jassy and will remain there throughout the entire period of the German A... occupation. Bucharest ... peopled largely by enemy officers.

"After being obliged to abandon Transylvania, the Rumanian army retreated rapidly and it was not long before the evacuation of the capital became a necessity. Enemy ... bombarded Bucharest without ceasing, destroying many of the most beautiful edifices and killing and wounding hundreds of people.

"The morning of November ... the beautiful Princess Cantacuzene, who directed the hospital of which I was the head, entered the operating room and asked whether I wished to leave, adding that there were still two trains to leave Bucharest for Moldavia.

"I replied that I had come to Bucharest to direct the hospital and that I declined to leave. While this dialog was going on, the church bells, which were later carried away by the conquerers and melted into projectiles, rang out to announce the resumption of the bombardment.

"I shall never forget the impressions of the hours that followed.

"A few hours before the Germans entered Bucharest the city was evacuated by every one who was able to leave.

"The next day the expulsions and arrests began. The first to be seized were the government officials, deputies, ministers, former ministers and influential persons generally.

"The enemy took possession of the city so quickly that few had even time to hide their most precious objects.

More Prussian "System"

"Each person was given a card of identity indicating the number of children and the number of relatives occupying the same house.

"The order was given that no one should leave his place of residence after 7 p. m.

"Destruction of the furniture and furnishings of the houses to provide firewood was begun immediately as well as the theft of all precious objects, pillage of mattresses and linen, carrying away of paintings and statues.

"Fortunately the Bulgarians whose infamies are even worse were prevented from entering the city.

"To give final proof of the barbarity of this people that is unworthy the right to live in Europe it is sufficient to state that out of 36,000 Rumanian prisoners that were interned in Bulgaria, only 10,000 ever returned to Rumania alive, the other 26,000 having succumbed to privations, fatigues, diseases and bad treatment when they were not murdered in cold blood.

"While awaiting other orders, patrols commanded by officers marched through the streets with fixed bayonets visiting every house one at a time and carrying away everything they considered unnecessary for the families to have.

"On the other hand Mackensen, commander of the armies, and in whose name thousands of atrocities have been committed, but of which I am certain he knows nothing, is very well liked in spite of everything. Why this is so, I will tell you. It is a matter of little consequence and can be told in a few words.

"In the Metropolitan church of Bucharest there exists the miraculous relic of a saint. One day, while the church was closed and the guard was promenading outside, three Bulgarian soldiers arrived in an automobile, and forcing the door of the cathedral carried away the venerated relic.

"Upon the return later of the bishop the latter at once discovered the crime and telephoned immediately to Field Marshal Mackensen, who at once notified the frontier authorities to arrest the Bulgarian soldiers. This sufficed to attract to Mackensen the sympathies of many.

"But entirely aside from that, Mackensen in all circumstances has always shown himself a man worthy of respect and consideration.

"With the establishment of the German soldiers in Rumania, the German authorities undertook the organization of the press. At first there was only a single newspaper allowed to be published, and that in German, but later arrangements were made for papers in Rumanian. There was first the Gazeta Bucurestilor and later the Lumina. These papers had to praise the invaders and their acts, and to keep systematically silent on what was taking place in France, Albania and Italy, likewise to play up to the fullest extent any news unfavorable to the allied powers.

"At the moment of the Italian disaster on the Isonzo last year these papers launched a special edition after special edition announced that the ... had fallen ... Austrians and ... last government ... dom. Millions ... so-called ...

GOVERNMENT CONTROL GENERAL IN HOLLAND

The Hague (by mail).—Standardized food is becoming the rule in Holland and standardized clothing may be next.

The scarcity of meat has called into being the standard sausage a mixture of beef and veal produced under government control and sold at the fixed price of 0.22 per pound.

The shortage of leather is responsible for the introduction of standard shoes in three grades and prices and standard suits in six varieties of sober cuts are promised for the near future.

Standardization in women's clothes is urged in some quarters but few venturesome spirits hazard any concrete suggestions on this thorny problem.

The latest is the standard cigar. Tobacco prices are soaring and cigars now cost twice or three times as much as they did a year ago. The government article will be made of the remaining stocks of Java tobacco in the country and provided with a wooden mouthpiece enabling the smoker to finish the weed to the butter end which is expected to result in a saving of 15 per cent. This cigar will retail at ... Dutch cents and packets up of cigarettes will have to look out for another trade.

... march on the Eternal City.

... month all of the inhabitants of Bucharest must go to the central ... and ... to demonstrate that they have not left the city and to have their identity cards stamped which they must always have in their pockets at all times. The stamping of the cards is done according to nationality with the result that throughout the month there is constantly in waiting a line of people that extends the full length of Cantacuzene street.

Among the marvels of prowess performed by the Germans it is necessary to cite the emission of several billion francs of paper money in the name of the Banque Generale Roumaine which when it is allowed to return to Bucharest will have to pay all of the bills thus put in circulation in its name.

Speculators in merchandise are not very far behind. A pair of women's stockings costs from $30 to $35, a shirt from $30 to $40 and everything else in proportion.

This is for the very simple reason that in all Rumania there does not remain today a single factory or a single industry.

At Bucharest you might be willing to pay millions of francs to have a little sterilized cotton for dressing your wounds, a little glycerin or a piece of velvet, but your willingness to pay would be in vain for those things do not exist there any more. Practically all of the stores are closed because there is nothing to sell.

During my last month there sugar was sold for $4 a pound. A sweetened drink costs $1 a glass.

The German administration that should have ended as soon as the treaty of peace was ratified by the senate continues without opposition. In Germany and Austria the misery and famine exceeds everything that has been or can be recounted.

On the railway coming from Bucharest the trains for civilians have been interrupted and suspended for such a long number of months that when our train arrived at Budapest an immense crowd of railway workers rushed up ... and ... by curiosity at seeing a train arrive from Bucharest.

Sentinels commanded by officers who accompanied us sought in vain to establish order. A young Rumanian woman of unusual spirit had the happy idea of throwing a piece of bread at the sentinel. The latter forgetting entirely his military duty dropped his rifle and leaped to seize the bite of bread. This was the signal for a grand rush. All of the travelers provided with provisions for a long voyage knowing that the latter would not last more than four or five days and that later there would be a dining car threw out eggs, pieces of chicken, meat and bread.

"Women, children and men all starving stretched out their hands and sought to obtain a morsel.

"I saw high administrative officials ask to be given a bite of something. The cries and commands of the officers were absolutely unavailing.

"The same scene was repeated at the railway station at Vienna where the officers who had accompanied us were changed.

The travelers resumed the distribution of their food supplies and interrogated the miserable people who only begged and prayed that they be not asked to say what they thought about the situation.

No one in Rumania believes that the present peace is final, and the entire nation is convinced that Rumania will be allowed to participate at the final peace conference.

Sugar and Character

From American Sugar Bulletin.

"Yes, I have gone without meat very extensively," said a man when asked if he had denied himself any special kind of food for the sake of keeping the allies well supplied. But five minutes later he happened to remark: "I always live mostly on vegetables—don't care much for meat."

Although separated in the conversation, these two remarks seem really to go together. Here was a man whose nonconsumption of meat had released a certain amount for shipment overseas. Thus he had contributed something to the war. But by his own statement there had been no personal sacrifice involved. The food needed for shipment had also happened to be something he did not crave.

Doubtless similar instance might be found in the case of persons who eat corn bread—and prefer it to white bread. They have been useful, exceedingly useful, as food conservators; no one should minimize that fact. But they cannot claim any medals for self denial.

There is one food which practically everyone likes. Whether people have strength to deny themselves it is a real test of will power and character. That food is sugar.

SNAPSHOTS FROM HOME PLEASE BOYS OVER THERE

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Troops in France (by mail).—This is the story of a single doughboy, but it is a yard with more than a million morals.

He was not an unusual doughboy in any way, except that he was happy, as happy as a bird with its first touch of spring fever. You can tell it by looking at him and he would tell you without your looking at him.

"Say, I feel so happy I could almost reach up and touch the sky," he exclaimed. "Look at that, wouldn't you?"

He displayed an envelope.

"Good letter from home is it? Somebody must have sent you some money?"

"Money! There's something that's got money beat a mile," he replied, "that is, from the doughboy's point of view. Want to see what it is?"

"Sure. Anything that makes people as happy as you are ought to be passed around."

He brought out five small photos, snapshots made by a small camera.

"Pretty nice aren't they? See this one? It's my girl. She's the best girl going and she knows how to make a hit with this doughboy over here. She sends snapshots every couple of weeks of the folks at home. Some girl, isn't she?"

You had to admit she was.

"This is another picture of hers, taken in her front yard under the trees. I know the spot. See, when I looked at that picture I almost felt as though I was back there with her, and it was Sunday afternoon. That's where I proposed to her on that spot. She couldn't see it at first, but I won out after a bit. It sure is wonderful what snapshots bring back to you, isn't it?"

Again you had to admit the doughboy was right.

"Here's another one of her, showing her new duds and hat. Looks kind of military doesn't it? I kind of like it, don't you? She's got good taste, that girl of mine hasn't she?"

Evidently she had, and so had he. You give her his choice.

"This picture's of my mother," he continued, "and it's a good one. I wanted a snapshot of mother. She looks pretty well. I was afraid she was worrying too much. I feel a lot better now. I know she's telling the truth when she said she was well. Photos are great aren't they?"

"This last one's my sister, and her baby. She got married just before I left. I've been over here for two service stripes now. I'm tickled to get this photo. It's the only way I have of telling what kind of a brat I'm being uncle to, you see. Say, what paper are you correspondent for?"

"The United Press."

"That's a whole lot of papers isn't it." Say you know what you ought to do? Write a story and tell everybody how much us boys over here want snapshots of the folks back home. Tell 'em pictures are the best thing they can send us. We don't care if they cut off our packages, so long as we can get pictures.

"Of course we can't send pictures of ourselves home, because it's against the rules. But we always look the same in uniforms, anyway. But snapshots sure make you feel close to the folks back home."

The more than a million morals to this story are the more than a million doughboys who are longing for snapshots of the "folks back home."

Fear Is No Disgrace.

From the New Orleans Times-Picayune.

An English observer calls attention to the fact that our world war has destroyed the fear of being afraid. Heretofore, even to most distant antiquity, the one quality insisted on in the soldier was that he should be fearless and the more callously so the better. The faintest tremor of timidity was a black mark against the most resplendent knight as well as the lowliest bowman or halbardier and the schooling for war was an utter defiance of the personal risk.

This theory held, as many will remember even till the period of the Boer war when the British suffered so severely in officers because it was held cowardly for a commander to seek cover. Men, then as now, felt fear, for that is one of flesh's attributes and indeed is one of the most valuable of human possessions, since fear is our protection from dangers and harms innumerable. We fear wild beasts to avoid them, snakes and spiders to increase our attention, storms and tempests that we may prepare means of escape from them.

So it was only in battle that chivalry insisted that man should be without fear, or pretend to be.

With the coming of new warfare, however all lands at once came to a more sane understanding and the old physical bravery has given place to moral resolution. The man who now enters the hell of shell fire, of hurled flames and deadly gases, no longer attempts to fool himself into the belief that he is not afraid. He knows full well and only a stupid nature could avoid the knowledge, that the human is at the mercy of forces a million times beyond his own ability to counter. The old knight might really believe he was able to unhorse all the enemies that rode against him and therefore might conceivably be without fear, but how can a soldier feel that way when facing modern weapons of destruction?

Therefore, it is no longer a disgrace to feel fear or to admit it, the only disgrace is to allow fear to prevent one doing his duty. How much finer fiber is needed for the new defiance!

The Vastness of Mexico.

From "Mexico," by Mrs. Alec Tweedie (George H. Doran Company).

It cannot be reiterated too often that Mexico is a vast country.

Mexico extends in length over 2,000 miles, or is as long as from Iceland to Africa. It measures 1,000 miles across the widest area. It is vast, it contains every climate from tropical to northern, it has huge mountains, some of the greatest volcanoes in the world, and some of the largest rivers are to be found in the south, although water is lacking in the north. The north is flat and hideous, the south beautiful and mountainous. Mexico produces every class of ore and every form of agriculture and some of the most picturesque and beautiful old Spanish towns in the world remain from the days when they were built by Cortez in 1519.

One cannot help being struck with the contrast between the two coasts. On the Pacific shore everything is dry; on the Gulf (Atlantic) everything is wet. A depth of eight or 10 feet of soil is common.

Bagpipes English.

From the London Chronicle.

It was actually a Scotsman, and no less a man than the lord advocate of the time, who publicly declared 50 years ago that "the bagpipe is an English instrument, essentially English, the English were the original bagpipers." He pointed out that, while Shakespeare often speaks of bagpipes, he never does so in "Macbeth," and that it is in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire that he localizes the pipes.

To Chaucer and Spenser also they are English. James IV and other Scottish kings paid for "Inglis pyparis" at their court, while Edward I, Edward III, Henry VI and Henry VIII seem to have had native pipers. The Highlanders never used the pipes in war before the 15th century, the harp was Scotland's instrument.

WEAK KIDNEYS MEAN A WEAK BODY

When you're fifty, your body begins to creak a little at the hinges. Motion is more slow and deliberate. "Not so young as I used to be" is a frequent and unwelcome thought. Certain bodily functions upon which good health and good spirits so much depend, are impaired. The weak spot is generally the bladder. Unpleasant symptoms show themselves. Painful and annoying complications in other organs arise. This is particularly true with elderly people. If you only know how, this trouble can be obviated.

For over 200 years GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been relieving the inconvenience and pain due to advancing years. It is a standard, old-time home remedy, and needs no introduction. It is now put up in odorless, tasteless capsules. These are easier and more pleasant to take than the oil in bottles.

Each capsule contains about one dose of five drops. Take them just like you would any pill, with a small swallow of water. They soak into the system and throw off the poisons which are making you old before your time. They will quickly relieve those stiffened joints, that backache, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gall stones, gravel, "brick dust," etc. They are an effective remedy for all diseases of the bladder, kidney, liver, stomach and allied organs.

GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules cleanse the kidneys and purify the blood. They frequently ward off attacks of the dangerous and fatal diseases of the kidneys. They have a beneficial effect, and often completely cure the diseases of the bodily organs, allied with the bladder and kidneys.

If you are troubled with soreness across the loins or with "simple" aches and pains in the back take warning, it may be the preliminary indications of some dreadful malady which can be warded off or cured if taken in time.

Go to your druggist today and get a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. Money refunded if they do not help you. Three sizes. GOLD MEDAL are the pure, original imported Haarlem Oil Capsules. Accept No Substitutes.—Adv.

A Man Is No Stronger Than His Stomach

How Strong Are You?

It's Just Acidity That Makes Millions Sick and Suffer

It's true. There are millions of people all over the land who are weak, nervous, all tired and dragged out, who are trying to build up their jaded nerves and weakened bodies with drugs and stimulants; and many of them also EAT and EAT—but fail to get anywhere near the full amount of strength and nourishment out of their food. Why? Simply because of too much acid in the stomach—superacidity.

Scenes of Prosperity

Are Common in Western Canada

The thousands of U. S. farmers who have accepted Canada's generous offer to settle on homesteads or buy farm land in her provinces have been well repaid by bountiful crops of wheat and other grains.

Where you can buy good farm land at $15 to $30 per acre—get $2 a bushel for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre you are bound to make money—that's what you can do in Western Canada.

In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta you can get a

and other land at very low prices.

During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley, and Flax. Mixed Farming is as profitable an industry as grain raising. Good schools, churches; markets convenient, climate excellent. SPANISH INFLUENZA

A new disease has broken out in the United States and is causing the death of hundreds of our soldiers and sailors. The disease is known as Spanish Influenza The disease germs were carried to the United States by soldiers returning from the front and spread from camp to camp. The new disease may be described as a severe case of La Grippe, acting in much the same way and is first noticed when the victim is siezed by chills and sudden fever. The disease works so fast and takes so many soldiers that the medical department of the camps can not give the medical attention necessary and it later develops into more serious cases as pneumonia. The best skilled physicians are hard at work to devise a means for checking the spread of the disease and establish a cure also. On account of the Spanish Influenza in camps the October draft will not be called for some time.

But what gets me is the language I ought to be a better Frenchman than I am, but I'm too lazy to try to learn any of it So many dialect that no two can understand each other especially if they are from different districts These peasants with whom we are billited huddle themselves in a village along some trail or road and make one big farmyard out of it The road is both street and alley manure shed, cow yard, chicken yard and all Most of the buildings are of stone with red tiled roofs under which man and beast lives Usually a few rooms is the home, then going through a door reveals a hog pen, cow stable or even the chicken roost All the noise the animals make is very distinct in the living rooms and occasionally I have seen the whole works in the same room. In the larger towns of course the houses seem to be continuous but the presence of the domestic beasts are not there

I am going to a fair town tomorrow as walking is never crowded and our usual way of getting around Any time write and when we come home I can say more than I could write in a week.

A FAREWELL.

Last Tuesday evening after the shades of evening had well fallen, a Ford stopped in front of the English M. E. parsonage. The pastor and wife were invited to take a ride up town to attend a board meeting, but instead of such a meeting they were unconditionally escorted to the old town hall where they were met by a large host loose for a good time, and for some time both young and old participated in lively games that brought laughter and perspiration until all were tired out. This was followed by the singing of a number of hymns led by Prof Tompkins. J. M. Howdeshell then gave a short talk in which he congratulated their many friends in behalf of their co-operation with them during their four years of labor in the church here, their hospitality, and the farewell which was an evidence of their appreciation of him and his faithful service rendered the community. Mr. A D Gimer then took the floora nd with brief remarks presented the outgoing pastor with a present of $50, which was further evidence of the church's appreciation of his labors. The pastor not only received his salary in full with all benevolent causes met, and all other debts of the church paid to date, but all together received about $100 over and above the allotted salary. Prof. Thompkins made some very fitting remarks and closed with a song A bounteous supper had been prepared by the ladies, and at this time was spread. This was an interesting feature of the evening as the Hoover has been somewhat taken off of the eats, and they were plentiful and delicious. All enjoyed the supper.

Rev. Howdeshell and family have made many very warm friends in these parts who regret their departure, but wish them success and happiness in their new field of labor. One hundred and fifty were present, besides many families who wanted to attend, but were hindered by various reasons

Famous French Statesman Says Thrift Is Virtue of the People

Deputy Justin Godart, in a recent speech on "The American Crusade" said "Thrift that virtue so characteristic of the French so domestic, so modest so sterling -thrift is the virtue which during the terrible trials of the war has not failed to yield us according to our ever-increasing necessities unsuspected means and resources

We must place it in the first rank of our elements of resistance It has been the part of the lowly in the economic outlay Thrift! It is the virtue of the people, just as the Poilu is the people's soldier, and like the Poilu it enabled France to withstand the assaults of the barbarians

Out of the hardships of the war America is recovering the ancestral virtue of thrift That alone will abundantly repay us as a people for all the sacrifices we are compelled to undergo

At the actual minute there is no duty for Americans that can compare with the buying of Fourth Liberty bonds Thrift is good for the country; but first we must make sure that we have a country We must beat the German feudalism Never mind what you did on the early loans That money is spent—for war preparation The Fourth Loan Is for Fighting

A recent article in The Outlook takes the position that "recoverable or productive assets amounting to $16,000,000,000 for the benefit of the American people stand against war loans at present authorized amounting to $24,000,000,000. It is estimated that the total outlay for the two years ending June 30, 1919, will be $36,696,702,470.

The "recoverable assets" include $10,000,000,000 authorized for loans to the allies, $2,750,000,000 for ships and shipyards; $1,000,000,000 for railways in France; army warehouses, $228,000,000; domestic railways, financial and grain purposes, $1,050,000,000, and various permanent investments, $972,000,000.

These conclusions, reached by Mr. T. H Price, are sustained by the reasoning of Sir George Paish and many other European economists. It is commonly assumed that the "gross cost of war," including all economic losses, loss of trade, destruction of property, dissipation of materials, excess consumption of commodities and the incidental waste of "utility," may be discounted about half to arrive at the "true net cost." On this basis the London Statist estimates that the real economic loss to all the belligerent nations will not exceed $167,000,000,000 to the end of 1917. Since then, of course, there has been a tremendous destruction which it is impossible at the moment to approximate.

Godmother to a Liberty Bond.

"My Renault tank, No. 66,644 has gone through the enemy lines three times, has dug deep holes in the German infantry waves and destroyed many machine guns. My tank is still going and we hope for more victories. But our machine is not yet baptized. It needs a name Who wants to be godmother?"

This letter was written by the commander of artillery section 516 on the Marne front during the recent victory.

SACRIFICE TO BUY BONDS

Financing Fighters by Stinting Yourself Makes Heroes of the Home Folks.

Heroes are a comparative rarity at the front. There are so many of them that they escape the notice properly given to the prodigy. Conversely, there are few cowards. The soldiers are charitable. They understand well enough that any man may be so far below par for a second that his legs will not obey his will. Weakness due to the strain of brave resistance is one of the terrible chances of fighting. Hence the bravest man generally says the very least about those who are accused of cowardice.

The financing and support of a great war produces just as many heroes as the charge on the fighting line, and they are more often overlooked. Unfortunately, too, the civilian part of the war produces cowardice—cowardice of such a mean kind that it cannot be forgiven. Such cowardice, for example, as refusing to cut down sugar-eating, gasoline consumption, etc., for the good of the service. It is a form of cowardice because it implies fear of self-denial—dread of sacrifice.

"I will not make an easy sacrifice," said Captain Cochin. "God, country, family—that is the order of my sacrifice!" And he died at Verdun, with a plastron of decorations.

A little of that spirit will readily overcome the cowardice of those who run away from their plain duty of buying Liberty Bonds. Imagine Captain Cochin in your place. Would he not say "Buying one bond is too easy a sacrifice. I will undergo privation—yes, physical privation! Set me down for five or ten bonds!"

"PUSHING ON"

Lieut. John Philip Sousa has composed a fourth Liberty loan song. The words were written by Guy F. Lee, a Chicago newspaper man. The title is "Pushing On." The words of the last verse and the chorus are:

They scrap with pep and ginger, our men and their allies.
On land, in air,
And everywhere,
They've got the Boche's size.
It's up to us to back 'em, until the war is won,
So lend as they fight every day, while Pershing's pushing on.

Chorus—
For Pershing's pushing, Pershing's pushing on.
For Pershing's pushing, Pershing's pushing on.
The Hun is on the run.
Dig up, we need the "mon."
Shell out, shell out, the Yanks are pushing on.

Every Bond you tuck away
Boosts a bit your yearly pay.

YAHNKE DRAY LINE CHANGES HANDS

Saturday Henry Yahnke sold out his dray business to his cousin, Henry J. Yahnke. Henry P. is going into the farming business next spring up in Minnesota and will move up there in the spring. He has been in the dray business in Klemme for some time and has a host of patrons who do not like to see him go, but they wish him all kinds of good luck as a farmer. The patrons of Henry P. however, welcome the new proprietor of the Yahnke Dray Line and welcome him to our business circle.

AN INTERESTING FACT

Some one has advanced the opinion that the letter "E" is the most unfortunate character in the English alphabet, because it is always out of cash, forever in debt, never out of danger and in hell all the time. But we call your attention to the fact that "E" is never in war and always in peace. It is the beginning of existance the commencement of ease and the ending of trouble, the beginning of Edison and the ending of submarine. Without it there would be no meat, no bread, no life, no heaven. It is the center of honesty, makes love perfect and there will be no regrets if you send us an order for printing of any kind The Times Print Shop.

The portable kitchens being used in Berlin and other German cities for distributing hot cooked food in the poorer districts at a low price are the maximum of economy and efficiency. Their shape has given them the name of "goulash cannon," but underneath the cannon is a small charcoal fire which keeps the hot stew at a boiling point. A boxlike contrivance below gives space for the storage of the pieces of bread served with each order. The kitchen is mounted on wheels similar to those of a small express wagon and in many instances is drawn by a dog. Occasionally a boy or an old man or woman will supply the motor power.

Up California's Tamalpais runs the crookedest railroad in the world. Of the eight miles of track the longest tangent is only 418 feet. In one instance the road makes five complete loops and ties two complete bow knots to attain an elevation of 90 feet. The end of the line is about half a mile higher than the starting point, and there is not one particularly steep grade in the entire system.

There now rests in the Paris museum the grapeshot ball which struck Napoleon before Ratisbon, April 28, 1809. The bullet, which caused but a trifling flesh wound, was picked up by an officer and treasured by him and his descendants, until one finally gave it to the institution, where it is now on view. That was Bonaparte's only wound.

IOWANS URGED NOT TO SELL SAVINGS STAMPS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 1.—Don't cash your War Savings Stamps to buy Liberty bonds. This is the substance of a communication sent out today by Homer A. Miller, state director of the Iowa War Savings Stamp campaign. Mr. Miller's advice to the owner of War Savings Stamps is backed up by advice to the same effect given by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo.

"When you cash your War Savings Stamps to buy Liberty bonds you are doing your government more harm than good," says Mr. Miller. "It is bad enough to sell Liberty bonds; it is twice as bad to sell your War Savings Stamps. When you sell your Liberty bond to a bank the bank holds the bond until maturity or disposes of it to an individual who will do so. The government is not required to pay out any money until the date the bonds mature. When you cash your War Savings Stamps you take money directly out of the United States treasury—money that the government already has planned to spend for ammunition and food and equipment for the men who are fighting your fight in France.

After all the runners had been exhausted and many men had been killed or wounded Private Burks volunteered to take a message to a neighboring unit through violent bombardment and machine gun fire. He was killed by a machine gun bullet while on his way with the message."

DEVELOPS PREACHERS FOR BIG CHURCHES

Cedar Falls, Ia., Oct. 2.—The pastorate of the First Methodist church of this city is a way station to a metropolitan church, as has been proved in the instance of six pastors who have held this pulpit in the last 25 years. These pastors, coming here from smaller places, developed into big men and went to city churches with wider fields of influence.

Here is the list, beginning with Dr. J. W. Holland, who leaves in a few days to take up his new pastorate at the First Methodist church of St. Paul, Minn., Dr. Holland came here from Aurora, Ill., and has been here for five years. The others were here for four years each, and came in the following order:

Rev. R. F. Hurlburt came here from Vinton, Ia., and went from here to the First Methodist church at Burlington and thence to Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Frank W. Luce came here from Marion, Ia., and went to the First church at St. Louis and then to the Euclid Avenue church in Cleveland, Ohio.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 2.—Under the direction of State Fish and Game Warden E. C. Hinshaw work is being completed on retaining walls at Silver lake, Palo Alto county, Rush lake Palo Alto county, Trumbull lake in Clay county, and Elm and Cornelia lakes in Wright county. On some of the lakes considerable work will be necessary next season.

The legislature has directed that these lakes, as well as others in the state, be restored by putting in the necessary retaining walls at points where they have been drained. Silver lake, when its walls are properly restored, will be about 900 acres in extent, and Rush lake will contain 1,200 or 1,300 acres. It is recognized they will form fine bodies of water.

There are other lakes in the state which were surveyed by the state highway commission a few years ago, under the direction of the legislature, which in the course of time, will be restored to their original beauty, before civilization encroaches so seriously on their domains as to destroy them entirely.

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 30. — With a total of $2,258,000 completed by midnight last night Webster county went over her allotment for the fourth Liberty loan by $8,000. All the whistles in the city were turned on in full blast when it was realized that this county had realized the goal. More subscriptions are pouring in every hour. DES MOINES MAN FINALLY GIVES BOND

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 30.—Louis B. Schermerhorn, held at the county jail on a charge of assault with intent to kill Miss Ruth Shoemaker, of Rockwell City, Ia., in a row at the Hotel Baltimore, Saturday September 7, has been released after Denny Costelle, professional bondsman, appeared in the court of Justice Casimir J. Private Ralph made several statements derogatory to the American conduct of the war, especially as to the treatment of prisoners by the Americans. Later the men were summoned before the loyalty committee of the council of defense and under oath declared the statements they made were false and that they only made them because they thought they would please the audience.

SOLDIERS BECOME AMERICAN CITIZENS

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 30.—More than 900 Camp Dodge soldiers, foreign born or for other reasons not citizens of the United States, were admitted to citizenship at a special ceremony held at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium at the cantonment yesterday afternoon.

Col. Armand E. Lasseigne, camp commander and regimental commander of the Fourteenth infantry, presided at the ceremony. Judge Thomas Guthrie, of the district court, admitted the new citizens.

These men were admitted under the presidential ruling which provides that men in the military or naval service of the United States may be admitted to citizenship without complying with the residence requirements.

CANNING FACTORIES HAD A BIG RUN

Sac City, Ia., Sept. 30. — The Sac City Canning Company has now completed its pack in both factories. The canning at Sac City was completed eight days sooner than that at Storm Lake. This difference in the length of operation was due to the fact that a timely rain at Storm Lake kept the corn green longer than at Sac City; for the acreage at the two places was about the same. At Sac City a total pack of 1,968,000 cans was made up to September 13, when operation closed. At Storm Lake, where the last canning was done last Saturday, the pack amounted to about 2,600,000 cans.

MUST GIVE FULL WEIGHT IN FLOUR

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 30.—State Food and Dairy Department Commissioner W. B. Barney, has issued an order to the effect that after October 1, the department will not tolerate the selling of flour in sacks other than 12¼ pounds, 24½ pounds, 49 pounds and 98 pounds of the larger packages, except that a grocer may sell in less than 12¼ pound lots weighed out by him.

FORT DES MOINES IS GENERAL HOSPITAL

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 28.—The hospital at Fort Des Moines, where practically 200 soldiers from overseas are now convalescing, has been designated along with many of the other big hospitals of the country as "United States general hospital." It means that these hospitals will be taken from the jurisdiction of territorial departments and will be directly under the supervision of the surgeon general and adjutant general of the army.

CRIMINAL LIBEL IS CHARGED IN INDICTMENT

LeMars, Ia., Sept. 28.—The grand jury found a true bill against W. E. Morehead, who was indicted on a charge of criminal libel.

Morehead, who is a wealthy farmer residing near Adamville, wrote a letter to the adjutant general at Des Moines in which he charged the local draft board with being crooked and influenced by money. He subsequently apologized to the members of the board. At a preliminary hearing before Justice G. M. Smith he was bound over to await the action of the grand jury. He is out on bonds.

IOWA CITY—G. W. Adams of Iowa City, who has often expressed a superstition that he would be the victim of an automobile accident, was killed Wednesday when his car turned turtle near Blue Rapids, Kan. Adams was a land agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. For years he refused to drive a car on account of his superstition.

ALBIA—Dr. J. B. Cross and Pete Ennig, both of Hamilton, were instantly killed yesterday morning when a Burlington train struck an automobile in which they were riding near Hamilton. They apparently did not hear the train approaching.

LONDON HINTS TURKS TO FOLLOW BULGARS

London, Oct. 1.—The British government does not intend to respond to Turkish armistice proposal feelers until they are officially received, it was learned authoritatively this afternoon.

London, Oct. 1.—Feelers have been put out by Turkey for an armistice, the Evening News today says it understands.

London, Oct. 1.—(via Montreal)—Bulgaria, during the discussion over the armistice at Saloniki, indicated she was not averse to attacking Turkey, according to reliable news received in London, Reuters Limited, states today.

Bulgaria explained, however, that she could only act militarily in this connection in cooperation with the allies.

Amsterdam, Oct. 1.—Constantinople newspapers express the hope that Germany will keep the Berlin-Vienna-Constantinople road open. Upon this question, they declare, will depend Turkey's attitude.

Copenhagen, Oct. 1.—Riots are reported in Constantinople.

Copenhagen, Oct. 1.—King Ferdinand, of Bulgaria, has arrived at Essenthal castle, outside Vienna, according to the Frankfurter Zeitung.

London, Oct. 1.—There is the greatest excitement in Germany over the defection of Bulgaria, judging from special dispatches received here from Holland. On Saturday the excitement amounted to a panic. The alarm brought forth the instant demand that "something be done."

A dispatch to the Daily Mail from The Hague says the demand is for somebody possessing the confidence of the Germans and their allies to replace the present military oligarchy.

London, Oct. 1.—In his announcement regarding Bulgaria yesterday, Bonar Law said cryptically, touching on the control of Bulgaria, which the control of her railways will give:

"In that there was something in connection with Turkey which I cannot say, but which we can all think."

Bonar Law's words were almost drowned by cheering, but the impression created was that Turkey would follow Bulgaria's lead.

There was deep satisfaction in London over the developments, but no excitement and no demonstrations. The keynote of the newspaper comment is a warning to the people not to think that the war is ended. The German army, it is pointed out, is yet a great army and as yet undefeated. There is stern work ahead, the commentators generally agree, and any relaxation of effort should not take place.

According to Vienna messages, Emperor Charles is to issue a manifesto to the people and it is felt that this must be an utterance of historic importance.

All reports indicate a decided cleavage between the junker and conservative classes and the class represented by the socialist and radicals who have the support of some centrists and even national liberals.

Emperor William's belated anxiety for the people to cooperate in the government evidently will be distasteful to the junkers. One of the junker newspapers, the Kreuz Zeitung, declares that a dictatorship is the only possible alternative. On the other hand the demand of the popular parties is for a popularly elective cabinet.

The effect of the resignations of Chancellor Von Hertling and Foreign Secretary Von Hintze on the public agitation is not yet reported and nothing is known as to how the terms of the Bulgarian surrender have affected the German people, if they have been permitted to know the terms.

A peace demonstration took place in Berlin on Saturday, according to news received here today. The cheering crowds assembled in front of the Bulgarian legation at the German capital, necessitating police intervention.

The rioters, according to the information, got the upper hand of the authorities and committed excesses. A number of statues in the Berlin squares were destroyed.

Paris, Oct. 1.—Effects of the Bulgarian armistice upon Austria and Turkey will probably soon be noticeable. The widest possibilities are opened by the elimination of Bulgaria. The most immediate result is expected by many to be a separate peace with Turkey, due to the severance of its communications with Germany.

The haste with which Bulgaria signed the convention dictated by the nation's readiness to concede every allied demand. Considering Bulgaria's past record, the allies were in no mood to let her off on easy terms. They demanded every concession consistent with justice.

The United Press learned authoritatively that at present there will be no separate peace with Bulgaria and no political decisions affecting the country's future will be taken. Only military measures follow the signing of the armistice.

"The Bulgarians are beaten. That explains and clarifies the situation at present," one authority stated.

"The victorious advance of the allies toward Ushub [illegible] the Bulgarians to throw down their arms with such sudden fervor. Before hostilities ceased yesterday noon even German reinforcements were on the way to prevent capture of many hundred prisoners and immense booty."

Washington, D. C., Oct. 1.—Russian and Rumanian dispatches here today foresaw the complete collapse of Germany's policy in the Balkans and in the east.

The signing of the armistice by Bulgaria on the terms laid down by the allies was interpreted by officials in the Russian embassy as the resumption of power in Bulgaria by the Russophile group of Premier Malinoff men represented by Premier Malinoff. This, it was declared, would prove in the near future a most powerful stimulant to the efforts of the revolutionary democracy of Russia to restore Russia's unity and independence.

The stimulant, Russian officials pointed out, would be both military and political. The virtual exit of Bulgaria from the war opens the road for the entrance of allied troops into Rumania and thence to southern Russia and the Ukraine, where the population is fighting the German invaders, eagerly awaiting outside help for a concerted assault on the enemy. The Russian embassy has received a cable confirming the report that Prince George Lvoff, formerly premier of the first provisional Russian government, is on his way to America to inform Ambassador Bakhmetieff and the American government of the latest events.

Another cable received by the embassy indicated that General Horvath, who some time ago attempted a coup d'etat in eastern Siberia which was frustrated by the action of the allies, will agree to submit to the authority of the Siberian government and accept a purely administrative post probably director of Siberian railways.

A cable from the central Russian government to the embassy also declared that General Dieghereff, who was named military chief of the new government, will hold this office temporarily and will be succeeded by General Alexieff is now engaged in completing the organization of a new army in Siberia. He is assisted by the Czecho-Slovak commander General Gaida. Should events in the Balkans and the Ukrainian justify it, it was pointed out, this new army will be rushed into the Ukraine, preparatory to cooperating with allied armies.

Paris, Oct. 1.—It was the fear of revolution at home and the failure of Germany and Austria to send help to the military force he required that induced King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, to turn to the entente for help, according to the American consul general at Sofia, (Dominick Murphy) quoted in a dispatch to The Matin from Saloniki.

That, the account continues, was the determination of King Ferdinand to forsake the powers which had brought only desolation to Bulgaria and entrust her destinies to the entente.

The counsul general in the dispatch states, gave interesting details on his arrival at Saloniki from Sofia in company with the Bulgarian plenipotentiaries, of the conditions in the Bulgarian capital leading up to the demand for an armistice. King Ferdinand, the account declares, assembled the crown council September 25 with the result that a formal demand was made on Berlin and Vienna for immediate assistance. Notwithstanding the urgent tone of the demand, Germany and Austria responded with evasive promises for the future.

London, Monday, Sept. 30.—The [illegible] has been much discussion in the British press of the status of King Ferdinand and suggestions have been made that he be deposed. The government of the allies take the view that according to their principles of self determination, the question of whether Bulgarias' ruler is a question for the Bulgarian people to decide. Thus it is pointed out the allies have given a practical application of the self-determination principle at the first opportunity offered.

The armistice remains in force until the final and general peace settlement. It constitutes a complete military surrender by Bulgaria. She only ceases to be an enemy [illegible] to be a belligerent.

WILSON GREETS STUDENT CORPS

Message Read to 150,000 College Youths Mustered Into the Army Reserve Forces Today.

Washington, Oct. 2.—One hundred and fifty thousand college students were mustered today into the students' army reserve corps at more than 500 colleges and universities, becoming a part of the military forces. Special programs were arranged at the schools to inaugurate the corps with formal ceremony.

Standing at attention the students heard messages read from President Wilson, acting Secretary Crowell and General March, chief of staff.

President Wilson's message said:

"The step you have taken is a most significant one. By it you have ceased to be merely individuals, each seeking himself to win his own place in the world, and have become comrades in the common cause of making the world a better place to live in. You have joined yourselves to the entire manhood of the country and pledged, as did your forefathers, 'your lives, your fortunes and your sacred honor' to the freedom of humanity.

"The enterprise upon which you have embarked is a hazardous and difficult one. This is not a war of words; this is not a scholastic struggle; it is a war of ideals, yet fought with all the devices of science and with the power of machine. To succeed, you must not only be inspired by the ideals for which this country stands, but you must also be masters of the technique with which the battle is fought. You must not only be thrilled with zeal for the common welfare, but you must also be master of the weapons of today.

"The students are young men of draft age, most of whom will go into active service as soon as their course is completed.

ALLIED SOLDIERS IN FIELD DAY EVENTS

Somewhere in England—(by mail)—British, Canadian and Australian soldiers contested in the athletic sports held by an army brigade here the other day. British contingents won the majority of the events owing, partly, to the fact that more Britishers than any others participated."

A challenge shield, presented by the brigadier general, and a challenge cup, presented by an American colonel, were to be fought for. A cabinet minister was among the judges, and his wife was in charge of the distribution of prizes.

The soldiers, company after company, American, British, Canadian and Australian, marched in four to the athletic ground singing gay marching tunes. At the field they formed little groups of truly international character around the ropes, cheering and shouting.

Before the sports program began there was the customary parade of competitors. They marched around the running track, group by group amid cheering from the rival camps and headed by the pipers of the Scotch guards, whose reels and strathspreys put new life into the tiers of spectators. Twice the Reds and Greens and Pinks made the quarter-mile circuit.

Then the starter's pistol told that the first heat was on. It was the open quarter-mile with contestants from the American, British and Australian contingents. The final was won in 53 4-5 seconds—not bad time on wet grass.

There was a long program, all gone through with the keenest enthusiasm and an international flavor to almost every event. As the number of each successive winner was posted up the stands cheered themselves hoarse. Meanwhile there was pipe music galore, while overhead a half dozen British and American airmen provided entertainment by looping the loop nose diving and performing various other evolutions and aerobatics which a few years ago would have been deemed impossible.

The British contingents being numerically superior to the other nationalities engaged, won a majority of the events, but the results mattered little, for in these things the mere result is nothing in comparison with the spirit in which the events are contested and the cordial entente which results.

"It all looks bad for the boche," remarked the American colonel to the British brigadier as the men, allies all marched off the field.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS HONORED EVERYWEHRE

Behind the British Lines in France, (by mail)—To an American visiting the western front in these stirring times it is a surprise and a pleasure to note the interest and anticipation with which which the more active participation of the Americans is greeted on every hand.

The Canadian soldiers invariably adopt the attitude of "I told you so," when the official reports chronicle American successes. The Australians also pride themselves on their intimacy with the Americans, and take a personal pride in every good deed which the Americans do, as if in some way them, themselves, had some share in it.

The English Tommies are content to express delight and satisfaction but always as if eager to believe the best and give credit for every excuse. The Americans, by their unassuming ways and insistent aggressiveness in the line have won the good will of the whole imperial British army.

When a German report came in the other day of five airplanes brought down from a patrol of six American raiders, frank incredulity was expressed everywhere. When the American report verified it, there was nothing in it but hard luck and a basis for further avenging exploits.

The American flying men have a hard time before them to sustain the hopes held out for them by their admirers in the British and Canadian ba[illegible]. The lavish applause showered on American methods by the English newspapers—which have from the first ignored the mistakes certain to creep into any war administration—is either accepted in France as the complete story or is a reflection of the feeling here.

Nowhere was the amity of feeling between the Americans and the various British units better demonstrated than at the recent Dominion Day sports behind the British lines. The events of that day are acknowledged to have been the greatest gala day celebration ever held in the war area.

GERMAN WRITINGS PROVE HUN CRUELTY IN AFRICA

A report on German methods in her African colonies has been made public by the British acting secretary of the interior, Union of South Africa. London (by mail)—"Good luck to you all and may you all evade the tin fishes" is the [illegible] in which Secretary W. Mc[illegible] of the Hull Seamans [illegible] his annual report. She may [illegible] port he says, over [illegible] paid the price [illegible] of passengers and service men.

The seamen have won distinction during the war and we don't want them linked with the 'won't work and lown toilers and the strikers.'

In urging special benefits for the seamen for sailors that have to risk submarine perils the report says:

Does anyone really believe that 10 pounds from the government will compensate a man being torpedoed? If he does, let him pack up his comfortable job ashore and go to sea and face the torpedoes. I warrant he will soon change the tune of his story.

TRACTOR PLANTS IN MEXICO

From the New York Sun.

Detroit plans for the erection of several large tractor plants in Mexico were made known by Henry Ford. Mr. Ford has notified the Mexican government that he is prepared to spend $1,000,000 on the first of several such plants and is awaiting only the selection of an official site.

We will build tractors in Mexico cooperation with the Mexican government as possible," said Mr. Ford. We will sell virtually at cost and if profits accumulate we will put them right back into the business. Not a cent is to be taken out of Mexico.

Should the business grow to such proportions that it would be impossible to absorb the profits the Mexican government will be given control of the plants, it was stated.

The tractors will give the people an opportunity to realize some of the wealth of their country, Mr. Ford added.

Cross Continent Flight.

Both for distance and time the flight of Aviator E. V. Gardner from Chicago to New York has been many times exceeded. Air journeys of 2,000 miles have been made this year, and in endurance contests fliers have held the air continuously for nine hours or more. But the trip from Chicago in a single day has hitherto baffled some of the nerviest of our birdmen. To say nothing of Miss Ruth Law [illegible] the first to achieve it.

Time will tell whether a real service can be maintained. The difficulties are great and the cost is high. Even after he had reached New York the aviator was two hours in trying to find Belmont park. He finally landed in desperation in a field. His narrowly escaping a serious accident in the prevailing mist the signal fires could not be seen. That illustrates one of the problems involved. It is not at easy [illegible] feet in the [illegible] He probably [illegible] landings.

Hardly less spectacular was the flight of a companion aviator, Max Miller, covering the same route from Chicago in an actual flying time of 7 hours 32 minutes. That is wonderful speed and suggests that a cross-continent flight may not now be far distant.

The Rich Suitor.

Franklyn Ruthven said at a luncheon at Hot Springs:

"An old banker here last week confided to me that he was going to propose to Gaby Deliclesse the [illegible] dancer of Broadway. He seemed very much in love. His hand shook as his voice trembled as he told me of [illegible] like hopes and fears.

"'Mr. Ruthven,' he said, 'do you think it would be morally very wrong if I received her about my age?'

"'Why, no,' said I.

"'I'm 64,' he said. 'Don't you think my chances would be better if I told her I was—say—50?'

"The banker's brother happened along just then. He heard the last words and snarled:

"'Tell her you're 75 or 80, George. The she'll accept you sure.'

SILENCE IS DEMANDED IF TAKEN PRISONER

German Command Tells Men How Americans Drain Prisoners of Valuable Secrets.

With the American Forces in France (by mail). Since the Americans took part in the offensive of July 18 new instructions have been issued to the [illegible] fresh and painful evidence showing how [illegible] the German soldier the moment he drops his arms succumbs to the false impression given by the words for the day the war is over. He has done his duty on the battle field with rifle and grenade until fate grew [illegible] longer [illegible] and he becomes a prisoner with the idea I have done my duty now I am defenseless and [illegible] no longer a warrior [illegible] no longer depends upon me."

We have examples in which the opponent while talking with unsuspecting German prisoners successfully drew from them a German order of battle and attack down to the smallest detail. One stone upon another what one could not know the other would tell. It is quite possible that they did not know with [illegible] information they were [illegible] they would say.

Last evening several artillery men [illegible] and the battery went into position about 200 meters behind the trench. This afternoon we were to draw three days' iron ration.

I had forgotten that the war was not over for them but only beginning. Following the war of rifle and grenade follows the war of words, questions and conversations. Each word that seems harmless enough in itself becomes an enemy's weapon bringing death to hundreds of comrades.

No! Becoming a prisoner does not end the war. It continues with more German soldiers reminding them that silence is the best policy when taken prisoner.

A copy of the German communication recently came into the hands of American officers. It says in part:

"The new prisoner is a valuable possession in the hands of the enemy. In him lie hidden possibilities that may mean much more than bare facts concerning battalions and regiments. From the highest commander to the lowest wagon driver every one of us carries with him remembrances, observations, overheard discussions or the greetings of neighboring troops.

Combining all these things they become a valuable asset of military information. One very seldom realizes how much one really does know. One thinks little of it. But the enemy knows better. He spares no pains to get possession of such treasure. It may begin with friendly and pleasant greetings, with coffee or cigarets; it ends with a sarcastic smile, with short rations and solitary confinement.

"The last few weeks have brought dangerous and subtle weapons. Against these we have only one protective measure: Silence. Assumed will, pride and common sense no one can take this from you, least of all should you be unfortunate enough to be taken prisoner. Keep silent, know nothing and shrug your shoulders."

National Action Needed

From Municipal and County Engineering.

The need for a supreme federal highway commission with a personnel fully informed on the economics of highway transportation is imperative. The men appointed to membership on this commission must first of all believe in the military and commercial value of hard surfaced roads; they must think roads, they must advocate roads they must realize that roads are essential. With such a body to lead and correlate all road planning agencies, of whatever nature, we shall secure quickly a rational plan for a complete [illegible] system of improved highways throughout the entire country. Under the leadership of this supreme [illegible] highway commission an informed public opinion will develop pressure which will insure the prompt construction of the roads of primary importance, and the early construction of roads of secondary and tertiary commercial value.

Every close student of the American highway problem now realizes that without well defined leadership of this character the good roads movement will continue to bog down, and motor truck [illegible] efficient service will materially [illegible]

How Far It Went

From the San Antonio Light.

Young Tom Toots was in the country and had been invited to the beautiful home of a sweet young thing named Agnes.

"What a charming place," he said enthusiastically, to Agnes' proud paternal parent. "Does it go as far as those woods over there?"

"It does," remarked the somewhat unsympathetic father.

"Ah," said Tom, still cheerily, "and to that old stone wall over there, sir?"

"It does," came the gruff answer, "and it goes as far as the river on the south and to the main road on the north."

"Yes," went on the old man, "but it doesn't go with Aggie!"

"Beautiful!" put in Tom.

A building 300 feet long was chopped in two and the two halves were moved about 500 yards by a detachment of colored selectives at Camp Meade, Md., without the use of any special devices and with no delay worth mentioning. A group of 300 men caught hold of the supports and at the proper order they had the whole structure off the ground. Then at signals the slow pull began. Within seven hours the building was in place on its new site.

LOCOMOTIVE NOT TOTAL LOSS

Had to Be Abandoned in Face of Hun Advance, but Served a Useful Purpose.

Yankee ingenuity has developed a new weapon for use against the Hun. No: It will not be used very often, but there are times—

At the height of things when the Hun was coming over in force and advancing in a way which meant the loss of anything that could not be moved promptly a $15,000 locomotive jumped the track.

Sergt. George Robertson, in charge, watched the battle for a moment, looked at his steam gauge, screwed the safety valve down tight, turned the oil fuel reserve supply into the firebox and then effected a solitary and successful retreat.

Half an hour later some sixty Germans were standing about the stranded locomotive when the boiler did the one thing which Sergeant Robertson hoped for—blew up.

It had all the effects of a 14 inch shell.

Their four-year-old daughter shares their taste, and likes to have her father bring some oriental mess home with him when he comes to dinner in the evening.

The other night he called up from the office and the little girl answered the phone.

"Oh, papa," she said, "please bring home some ptomaine."

She meant chow mein, but maybe she wasn't far off.

REGISTRATION OF WAR BONDS IS URGED BY LOAN OFFICIALS

Important Information on Liberty Bonds Given Out by Government Officials.

Important information concerning the registration of Liberty Loan bonds, as given out by the bond department of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago contains the following quotation from a letter from the treasury department:

"With reference to accepting subscriptions for bonds to be registered in the names of persons giving only initials rather than the full name, I have to say that it is the intent of the department, not for its own sake, but for the sake of the holders of registered bonds, to have them registered in such manner as to enable the said holders, or their legal representatives, to dispose of them in the simplest and readiest manner. Bonds issued to women under their initials, or under the initials of their husbands, are not readily transferable in case of the death of the holder.

"Though letters of administration would be issued in the legal name of the deceased, and the bonds would be inscribed in her name, under her initials, or those of her husband, as the case might be, the letters of administration and the bonds would not agree as to the name, and therefore the administrator of Mrs. Sarah A. Smith, say, would have to prove that she and Mrs. Thomas W. Smith (or Mrs. S. Smith) were one and the same person. It is to avoid troubles of this character that the department has insisted on receiving the legal name of persons subscribing for registered bonds.

"Of course, the department cannot refuse to issue bonds under initials if the parties interested insist upon it, but it is requested that you, in all cases where it is possible, insist on receiving the full names of persons subscribing for registered bonds."

"We'll All Go Broke If We Have To—But There's No One Busted Yet."

By WILLIAM HERSCHELL.

When I hear some folks complainin'
'Bout the burdens they must bear
Just to keep our soldiers fightin'
In the trenches "over there,"
Then I want to show a picture,
One I saw th' other day,
Of a little Belgian youn'un
An' her granny, old an' gray.
In each face was tears and terror,
Born of Teuton greed and lust,
An' I pledged my all-to Freedom,
If to give my all I must.
Then a new song woke within me,
A refrain I can't forget;
"We'll all go broke if we haf t'—
But there's no one busted yet!"

None of us is facin' hunger,
None need fear to seek his bed
Lest a demon in a Gotha
Hurl a bomb from overhead.
Here we go along a-singin'
Only now and then we sigh,
An' we never see a soldier
'Cept our own a-marching by.
Folks, we'd ought to be so grateful
To each fightin' Yankee boy
That th' sacrifice of givin'
Should be measured as a joy.
So let's do our part—full-hearted—
Smile and say without regret:
"We'll all go broke if we haf t'—
But there's no one busted yet!"

F. W. Kluckhohn and family left Tuesday for Garner where they will make their future home. They moved their household goods up there the same day. Frank has a good position at Garner with the Farmers Co-Operative Company and will act as assistant at one of their elevators. We are sorry to see this splendid family leave Klemme but wish them good luck in their new location. Mr. Kluckhohn has been with the Waterman store for several years and his loss will be felt at that concern and it will be hard to find a man who can take his place.

And then—and then, even supposing that all the chances were favorable, was it not too late? Taking for granted that they hunted down the wild beast, that they drove him to bay, would he not meanwhile have killed his prey? Knowing himself beaten would a monster of that kind hesitate to add one more murder to the long list of his crimes?

And this, to Don Luis, was the crowning terror. After all the difficulties which in his stubbornly confident imagination, he had managed to surmount, he was brought face to face with the horrible vision of Florence being secretly freed of Florence dead!

Oh the torture of it!' he stammered. I alone could have succeeded, and they shut me up!"

He hardly put himself out to inquire into the reasons for which M. Desmalions, suddenly changing his mind, had consented to his arrest, thus bringing back to life that troublesome Arsene Lupin with whom the police had not hitherto cared to hamper themselves. No, that did not interest him. Florence alone mattered. And the minutes passed and each minute wasted brought Florence nearer to her doom.

He remembered a similar occasion when, some years before, he waited in the same way for the door of his cell to open and the German Emperor to appear. But how much greater was the solemnity of the present moment! Before, it was at the very most his liberty that was at stake. This time it was Florence's life which fate was about to offer or refuse him.

He no longer had a doubt of her innocence. Nor did he doubt that the other loved her and had carried her off, not so much for the hostage of a coveted fortune as for a love spoil, which a man dest oys if he cannot keep it.

Florence! Florence!"

He was suffering from an extraordinary fit of depression. His defeat seemed irretrievable. There was no question of hastening after Florence, of catching the murderer. Don Luis was in prison under his own name of Arsene Lupin; and the whole problem lay in knowing how long he would remain there for months or for years!

It was then that he fully realized what his love for Florence meant. He perceived that it took the place in his life of his former passions, his craving for luxury, his desire for mastery, his pleasure in fighting, his ambition, his revenge. For two months he had been struggling to win her and for nothing else. The search after the truth and the punishment of the criminal were to him no more than means of saving Florence from the dangers that threatened her.

If Florence had to die, if it was too late to snatch her from the enemy, in that case he might as well remain in prison. Arsene Lupin spending the rest of his days in a convict settlement was a fitting end to the sport life of a man who had not even been able to win the love of the only woman he had really loved.

It was a passing mood and he was totally opposed to Don Luis's nature, but in a state of utter confidence which no longer admitted the least particle of anxiety or doubt. The sun had risen. The cell gradually became filled with daylight. And Don Luis remembered that Valenglay reached his office on the Place Beauveau at 7 o'clock in the morning.

From this moment he felt absolutely calm. Coming events presented an entirely different aspect to him, as though they had, so to speak, turned right round. The contest seemed to him easy, the facts free from complications. He understood as clearly as if the actions had been performed that his will could not but be obeyed. The deputy chief must inevitably have made a faithful report to the Prefect of Police. The Prefect of Police must inevitably that morning have transmitted Arsene Lupin's request to Valenglay.

Valenglay would inevitably give himself the pleasure of an interview with Arsene Lupin. Arsene Lupin would inevitably, in the course of that interview, obtain Valenglay's consent. These were not suppositions, but certainties, not problems awaiting solution but problems already solved. Starting from A and continuing along B and C, you arrive, whether you wish it or not, at D.

Don Luis began to laugh:

Come, come, Arsene, old chap, remember that you brought Mr. Hohenzollern all the way from his Brandenburg Marches. Valenglay does not live as far as that, by Jove! And, if necessary, you can put yourself out a little. . . . That's it: I'll consent to take the first step. I will go and call on M. de Beauveau. M. Valenglay, it is a pleasure to see you."

He went gayly to the door, pretending that it was open and that he had only to walk through to be received when his turn came.

He repeated this child's play three times, bowing low and long, as though holding a plumed hat in his hand, and murmuring:

'Open sesame!'

At the fourth time the door opened and a warder appeared.

Don Luis said, in a ceremonious tone:

I hope I have not kept the Prime Minister waiting?"

There were four inspectors in the corridor.

'Are these gentlemen my escort?' he asked. "That's right. Announce Arsene Lupin, grandee of Spain, his most Catholic Majesty's cousin. My lords, I follow you. Turnkey, here are 20 crowns for your pains, my friend."

He stopped in the corridor.

'By Jupiter, no gloves, and I haven't shaved since yesterday!'

The inspectors had surrounded him and were pushing him a little roughly. He seized two of them by the arm. They groaned.

"That'll teach you," he said. You've no orders to thrash me, have you? Nor even to handcuff me? That being so, young fellows, behave!'

The prison governor was standing in the hall.

"I've had a capital night, my dear governor," said Don Luis. "Your C. T. C. rooms are the very acme of comfort. I'll see that Lockup Arms receives a star in the 'Baedeker.' Would you like me to write you a testimonial in your jail book? You wouldn't? Perhaps you hope to see me again? Sorry, my dear governor, but it's impossible. I have other things to do."

A motor car was waiting in the yard. Don Luis stepped in with the four detectives:

"Place Beauveau," he said to the driver.

'No, Rue Vineuse," said one of the detectives, correcting him.

'Oho!'" said Don Luis. "His Excellency's private residence! His Excellency prefers that my visit should be kept secret. That's a good sign. By the way, dear friends, what's the time?"

His question remained unanswered. And as the detectives had drawn the blinds, he was unable to consult the clocks in the street.

It was not until he was at Valenglay's, in the Prime Minister's [illegible] that he saw a clock on the mantelpiece.

"A quarter to seven!" he exclaimed. "Good! There's not been much time lost."

Valenglay's study opened on a flight of steps that ran down to a garden filled with aviaries. The room itself was crammed with books and pictures.

He was still calm, but nevertheless felt a certain uneasiness, a longing to be up and doing, to throw himself into the fray; and his eyes on involuntarily returning to the face of the clock. The minute hand seemed endowed with extraordinary speed.

At last some one entered, ushering in a second person. Don Luis recognized Valenglay and the Prefect of Police.

"That's it," he thought. I've got him."

He saw this by the sort of vague sympathy perceptible on the old Premier's lean and bony face. There was not a sign of arrogance, nothing to raise a barrier between the Minister and the suspicious individual whom he was receiving, just a manifest, playful curiosity and sympathy. It was a sympathy which Valenglay had never concealed and of which he even boasted when, after Arsene Lupin's sham death, he spoke of the adventurer and the strange relations between them.

"You have not changed," he said after looking at him for some time. "Complexion a little darker, a trifle grayer over the temples, that's all."

And putting on a blunt tone he asked:

And what is it you want?"

An answer first of all, Monsieur le President du Conseil. Has Deputy Weber, who took me to the lockup last night, traced the motor cab in which Florence Levasseur was carried off?'

"Yes, the motor stopped at Versailles. The persons inside it hired another cab which is to take them to Nantes. What else do you ask for, besides that answer?'

'My liberty, Monsieur le President."

"At once, of course?' said Valenglay, beginning to laugh.

"In 30 or 35 minutes at most."

"At half-past seven, eh?"

"Half-past seven at latest, Monsieur le President."

"And why your liberty?'

"To catch the murder of Cosmo Mornington, of Inspector Verot, and of the Roussel family."

"Are you the only one that can catch him?"

'Yes.'

"Still, the police are moving. The wires are at work. The murderer will not leave France. He shan't escape us."

"You can't find him?"

"Yes, we can."

"In that case he will kill Florence Levasseur. She will be the scoundrel's seventh victim. And it will be your doing."

Valenglay paused for a moment and then resumed:

"According to you, contrary to all appearances, and contrary to the well grounded suspicions of Monsieur le Prefect de Police, Florence Levasseur is innocent?

"Oh, absolutely, Monsieur le President!"

"And you believe her to be in danger of death?"

"She is in danger of death."

"Are you in love with her?'

"I am."

Valenglay experienced a little thrill of enjoyment. Lupin in love! Lupin acting through love and confessing his love! But how exciting!

He said:

'I have followed the Morning case from day to day and I know every detail of it. You have done wonders, Monsieur. It is evident that, but for you, the case would never have emerged from the mystery that surrounded it at the start. But I cannot help noticing that there are certain flaws in it.

"These flaws which astonished me on your part are more easy to understand when we know that love was the primary motive and the object of your actions. On the other hand and in spite of what you say, Florence Levasseur's conduct, her claims as the heiress, her unexpected escape from the hospital leave little doubt in our minds as to the part she is playing."

Don Luis pointed to the clock.

"Monsieur le Ministre, it is getting late."

Valenglay burst out laughing.

'I never met any one like you, Don Luis Perenna. I am sorry that I am not some absolute monarch. I should make you the best [illegible] ... A post which the German Emperor has already offered me."

"Oh, nonsense!"

"And I refused it."

Valenglay laughed heartily, but the clock struck seven. Don Luis began to grow anxious. Valenglay sat down and, coming straight to the point, said, in a serious voice:

"Don Luis Perenna, on the first day of your reappearance—that is to say, at the very moment of the murders on the Boulevard Suchet—Monsieur le Prefect de Police and I make up our minds as to your identity. Perenna was Lupin.

"I have no doubt that you understood the reason why we did not wish to bring back to life the dead man that you were, and why we granted you a sort of protection. Monsieur le Prefect de Police was entirely of my opinion. The work which you were pursuing was a salutary work of justice, and your assistance was so valuable to us that we strove to spare you any sort of annoyance. As Don Luis Perenna was fighting the good fight, we left Arsene Lupin in the background. Unfortunately —"

Valenglay paused again and declared:

"Unfortunately, Monsieur le Prefect de Police last night received a denunciation, supported by detailed proofs accusing you of being Arsene Lupin."

"Impossible!" cried Don Luis. "That is a statement which no one is able to prove by material evidence. Arsene Lupin is dead."

If you like," Valenglay agreed. "But that does not show that Don Luis Perenna is alive."

Don Luis Perenna has a duly legalized existence, Monsieur le President.

Perhaps. But it is disputed."

'By whom? There is only one man who would have the right; and to accuse me would be his own undoing. I cannot believe him to be stupid enough —"

Stupid enough, no, but crafty enough, yes.

'You mean Caceres, the Peruvian attache?'

"Yes."

But he is abroad!'

'More than that, he is a fugitive from justice, after embezzling funds of his legation. But before leaving the country he signed a statement that reached us yesterday evening, declaring that he faked up a complete record for you under the name of Don Luis Perenna. Here is your correspondence with him and here are all the papers establishing the truth of his allegations. Any one will be convinced, on examining them first, that you are not Don Luis Perenna, and, secondly, that you are Arsene Lupin."

Don Luis made an angry gesture.

That blackguard of a Caceres is a mere tool," he snarled. "The other man is behind him, has paid him and is controlling his actions. It's the scoundrel himself, I recognize his touch. He has once more tried to get rid of me at the decisive moment.

I am quite willing to believe it, said the Prime Minister. But as all these documents, according to the letter that came with them, are only photographs, and as, if you are not arrested this morning the originals are to be handed to a leading Paris newspaper tonight we are obliged to take note of the accusation.

But Monsieur le President," exclaimed Don Luis, as Caceres is abroad and as the scoundrel who bought the papers of him was also obliged to take to flight before he was able to execute his threats, there is no fear now that the documents will be handed to the press.

How do we know? The enemy must have taken his precautions. He may have accomplices."

He has none."

How do we know?"

Don Luis looked at Valenglay and said:

What is it that you really wish to say, Monsieur le President?"

I will tell you. Although pressure was brought to bear upon us by Caceres's threats, Monsieur le Prefect de Police, anxious to see all possible light shed on the plot played by Florence Levasseur did not interfere with your last night's expedition. As that expedition led to nothing, he determined, at any rate, to profit by the fact that Don Luis had placed himself at our disposal and to arrest Arsene Lupin.

"If we now let him go the documents will certainly be published; and you can see the absurd and ridiculous position in which that will place us in the eyes of the public. Well at this very moment, you ask for the release of Arsene Lupin, a release which would be illegal, uncalled for, and inexcusable. I am obliged, therefore, to refuse it, and I do refuse it."

He ceased, and then, after a few seconds, he added:

Unless—"

"Unless?" asked Don Luis.

"Unless—and this is what I wanted to say—unless you offer me in exchange something so extraordinary and so tremendous that I could consent to risk the annoyance which the absurd release of Arsene Lupin would bring down upon my head."

"But, Monsieur le President, surely, if I bring you the real criminal, the murderer of——"

"I don't need your assistance for that."

Novel War Devices.

From the London Times.

The inventions department of the ministry of munitions receive almost every day ideas of the most novel kind. All are carefully considered. Some are useful, but almost nine-tenths are wholly impractacticable. In an article on the subject, published in the current number of the Ministry of Munitions Journal, it is said that the following extraordinary suggestions for dealing with hostile aircraft have been received:

The clouds are to be frozen artificially and guns mounted on them, heavy guns are to be suspended from captive balloons; the moon is to be covered with a big black balloon, airplanes are to be armed with scissors, or scythes, like Boadicea's chariot, or to trail bombs behind them on a long cord, heat rays are to be projected for the purpose of setting zeppelins on fire; electric waves to paralyze the magnetos. One of the most popular suggestions of all is to attach a searchlight to an anti-aircraft gun, get the light on the object, and shoot along the beam, but unfortunately, the path of a shell is quite different from that of a ray of light. Most elaborate "decoy" schemes are sometimes worked out for the confusion of the enemy, comprising in at least one case sham factories with chimneys and hooters complete. To prevent the polished lines of a railway showing at night, the last carriage of the last train, according to another correspondent, was to camouflage them by dribbling blacking as it went along.

Other proposals were:

A balloon carrying magnets hung on strings to attract the rifles out of men's hands.

A shell to contain fleas or other vermin inoculated with disease.

The squirting of cement over soldiers so as to petrify them.

The sending of snakes into enemy trenches by pneumatic propulsion.

The throwing of live wire cables carrying a high voltage among advancing bodies of infantry by means of rockets.

Germany should be attacked in one case by making a "tube" all the way, and in another by employing trained cormorants to fly to Essen and pick out the mortar from Krupp's chimneys.

An Offensive Lawn Mower.

One correspondent sent quite a number of original methods for repelling attacks, including large calliper shaped devices which could be closed on anyone intruding between the legs; a series of nets spread in front of our lines which could be drawn so as to enmesh the Germans, and a machine of the nature of a lawn mower as large as a tank to make mincemeat of them.

The purpose of the article in the Journal is to warn off inventors of this sort, and frequently they are genially argued with.

One gentleman had a powder the composition of which he declined to disclose, which on b[illegible] water turned it into [illegible] least so he said. AUSTRALIA A COUNTRY OF GREAT DISTANCES

From the New York Post.

Five months ago an inconspicuous dispatch announced the completion of the first transcontinental Australian railway—the line from Port Augusta to Kalgoorlie, with the longest straight stretch of track in the world. It was built under the federal agreement made when western Australia entered the commonwealth. A few days since another dispatch stated that the Cape-to-Cairo railway has now reached Bukama, in the Congo Free State, at a distance of 2,600 miles from Cape Town. Such items furnish interesting evidence that peaceful construction still goes on in time of war, and even in an empire racked by it. Whoever consults a map can see that the extensions are important. The new Australian line makes it possible for the citizen of Perth, Fremantle, or Northampton, on the west coast, to step aboard a train and in [illegible] days later step off another at Melbourne, or Sydney, or Brisbane; having covered between the farthest removed cities a distance exceeding that from San Francisco to New York. The future M. P. headed for the capital, Canberra, need fear no stormy voyage. By the South African line the traveler can ride from Cape Town a distance north more than equal to that from New York to Salt Lake City; he steps off where the Congo is navigable, and can then journey by boat, with another 250 miles of rail thrown in, to the mouth of the Congo, or 4850 miles in all. Or turning east, he can go by boat to a point on the Congo connected by rail with Lake Tanganyika, and by rail and steamer through Albertville and Ujiji to Dar-es-Salaam and Zanzibar.

These railways directly point the way to greater achievement. In Australia the builders will now turn to the projected railway to connect the northern and southern extremities of the continent; and for this a good beginning has been made. From the central part of South Australia a line now runs north about [illegible] through the contin[illegible] and from Port Da[illegible] coast a line stretch[illegible] south to Pine cree[illegible] distance has been [illegible]

Thus did Mrs. Luella Hinrichs complain in the supreme court that she was a victim of cruelty on the part of William John Hinrichs, a commission merchant, from whom she wants a separation.

Mrs. Hinrichs added, however, that the climax in the family discord did not occur until one morning last April when she alleges Mr. Hinrichs threw several buckets of water over her while she slept. She also complained that her husband failed to keep his promise that his three children by a prior marriage were not to be a part of the household.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.

It's Acid-Stomach That Makes Millions Sick and Suffer

Life is dark, not worth much to the man or woman with an acid stomach.

Acid-stomach kills Hope, Ambition, Energy, Courage. It saps the strength of the strongest body, impoverishes the blood—causes untold suffering—makes millions weak, unfit and brings on premature old age.

Millions of people are weak and unfit, suffering all the time, in one way or another, from superacidity or acid-stomach.

They don't seem dangerously sick. Just ailing. Going through life weak, listless, dragging one foot after another. They're nervous and irritable; lack power and punch; frequently have severe attacks of blinding, splitting headaches; subject to fits of melancholia and mental depression. And nearly always their stomachs are out of order, even though many experience no actual stomach pains—digestion poor, never getting anywhere near the full strength from their food.

So, you see, it's just this acid stomach that is holding so many people back—sapping up the strength they should get from their food—taking away their vigor and vitality—leaving them weak and inefficient.

Get rid of the excess acid. That's the secret of good health and is the only way to obtain good digestion and assimilation. It is the right way to be well and keep strong. Ordinary medicine won't do any lasting good. The best they can do is to spur up your appetite for awhile.

A modern remedy makes it possible to remove excess acid without the slightest discomfort. It is called EATONIC, in the form of pleasant tasting tablets. Their action in the stomach is a good deal like a piece of blotting paper takes up a drop of ink—they literally absorb the injurious excess acid and carry it away through the intestines.

Begin using EATONIC right now—today—and get on the road to bounding, vigorous, vibrant health. Thousands upon thousands of people who have used EATONIC are enthusiastic in its praise. They say they never dreamed that anything could bring them such quick relief.

EATONIC is fully guaranteed. Your druggist will give you a big box for only 50 cents with the distinct understanding that if you are not pleased in every way, you get your 50 cents back. If you can't get EATONIC where you live—send us your name and address; we will send you a fifty cent box and you can send us the 50c when you get it. MILITARY BOARD ESTABLISHES PRICE TO BE PAID FOR HUSKING CORN IN HANCOCK COUNTY

At a meeting in Garner, on Saturday afternoon, the Military Board of Hancock County established the price for husking corn at 7 cents per bushel where an elevator is used and 8 cents where corn is shoveled. This is the price being set in all of the counties adjoining Hancock and the Board, after considering it with the Food Administration, the Farm Bureau and interested farmers of the county, arrived at this price as being as near fair to both sides as possible

There has been so much talk of outrageous prices that this step was necessary. While some few may have already hired their huskers at a little higher or lower price than this, the majority of the farmers have been waiting for some definite price to be set. Every farmer in the county is expected to conduct himself according to these prices. While corn huskers no doubt will be scarce, a few are being sent in by the Government Employment Stations and anyone needing corn huskers should make their wants known to the County Agent at Britt, where they will be taken care of in order. They will all be sent out at this price of 7 and 8 cents

Iowa People Asked to Make Gas Masks for Our Soldiers Who Are Fighting the Hun

An essential of a soldier's gas mask is carbon.

The gas defense division of the United States army has asked Iowa to send more carbon to protect our soldiers in the trenches against Hun attacks.

The best quality is extracted from certain fruit pits and nut shells. Seven pounds of shells or 200 peach pits will yield carbon for one mask

Iowa throws away tons of this material every day. Our soldiers ask us to save it and turn it over to the Red Cross, in turn to save them from a horrible and agonizing death

United States Food Administrator Deems has asked the county food administrators and the chairman of the women's committee in each county to organize the campaign for the saving and collection of the pits and shells for gas masks

Administrator Deems has sent the following suggestions to all the members of the food administration staff in the state, to lodges, clubs, etc :

1. Save, collect and turn over to the Red Cross these only: Peach stones, prune pits, plum pits, apricot pits, olive pits, native cherry pits, date seeds, brazil nut shells, hickory nut shells, walnut shells, butternut shells. (Other pits and shells are deficient in carbon. Do not include them.)
2. All pits must be dried in the oven or sun.
3. Do not extract kernels from pits.
4. Extract meats from nuts.
5. Do not separate the different kinds of pits and shells.
6. The county food administrators and county chairmen of the woman's committee are asked to act with Red Cross officials in organizing the campaign to secure the material.
7. All others are asked to co-operate with them in forming the organization and to begin at once active personal work in their organizations and among their friends, to induce the people to save and give the material.
8. Get the newspapers to urge the campaign.
9. Interest the merchants to make displays and advertise the drive.
10. Arrange with business houses to establish receptacles.
11. Enlist the schools. Every pupil should be busy gathering the materials.
12. Induce people to deliver material from their homes to the Red Cross.
13. The Red Cross, alone, will make shipments to the army. Shipments by parcel post to nearby Red Cross officials must be in bags or boxes of dried pits and shells, of not more than 70 pounds weight.
14. Organize house-to-house canvass to inform the public.

In his letter Mr Deems says: "I believe you can make every one in your community understand the vital importance of the drive Action by you and your friends may save the lives of boys from your own town. It is not a thing to be put off Do it now. If word comes from Pershing that Americans failed to provide carbon for the gas masks and that some of our boys died in agony on that account, how will we feel if we have not done our full duty and a little more in this simple matter? It costs us nothing. It takes no time. It only tests us."

IOWA HOGS BRING MORE THAN $15.50

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION CONTINUES MINIMUM PRICE FOR THE PERIOD OF THE WAR.

United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems of this state has notified the owners of 10,000,000 hogs in Iowa that the Food Administration has decided to continue its assurance of a minimum price of $15.50 for average packer's droves at Chicago.

C. W. Hunt, of Logan, Iowa; A. Sykes of Ida Grove, Iowa, and Professor John Evvard of Ames Iowa served on the National Agricultural Advisory Committee on Live Stock and its associates, who conferred with the Food Administration in regard to the commercial methods to be followed in interpreting the Administration policy fixed last November with regard to the price of hogs.

The policy announced was as follows:

"The prices so far as we can effect them will not go below a minimum of about $15.50 per hundred weight for the average of packers' droves on the Chicago market until further notice. As to the hogs farrowed next spring (1919), we will try to stabilize the price so that the farmer can count on getting for each 100 pounds of hog ready for market, thirteen times the average cost per bushel of corn fed into the hogs. Let there be no misunderstanding of this statement It is not a guarantee backed by money. It is not a promise by the packers. It is a statement of the intention and policy of the Food Administration which means to do justice to the farmers."

This policy is continued, Mr Deems has been informed by Mr. Hoover. The actual price of hogs, of course, is much higher than $15.50. The committee on which Messrs. Hunt, Sykes, and Evvard of this state served recommended in its report to Mr. Hoover "that the 'average cost per bushel of corn' for the purpose of determining the price of hogs be considered as the average 'farm value of corn,' or the average selling price of corn at local railroad stations as determined by the Department of Agriculture, and that the general corn figures be arrived at by taking these averages and weighting them according to production over the eight leading hog and corn producing states for a period of five months preceding the month the hogs are marketed, or prior to the month for which directions are given to the packers. The price of hogs should be calculated on the average of packers' droves at Chicago.

"To illustrate: Based upon the prices of corn figured on the above basis during the last five months, and a general survey of market and consumption conditions, it was agreed that a fair price interpretation of the ratio for the month of October would be an average price, for the average of packers' droves, of about $18.50 per hundred pounds at Chicago. It cannot be expected that the day to day market prices, with the fluctuating flow of demand and supply, can be maintained at any fixed and definite figures, but that it should be the aim to maintain about an average during the month."

It was on the recommendation of this committee that the Food Administration continued the $15.50 minimum.

The food program is a fighting program, and every fighter counts.

SAVE FOOD BY USE OF PUBLIC KITCHEN

NEXT YEAR U. S. FOOD ADMINISTRATION OF IOWA WILL HAVE ONE IN EVERY COMMUNITY.

The United States food administration for Iowa expects to inaugurate a vigorous campaign early next spring to establish communal kitchens and drying plants in every town in the state.

Mrs. Frank Clawson of New London, Ia., has demonstrated this summer what can be done to conserve food in a community canning plant.

Acting for the Red Cross chapter of New London, Mrs. Clawson has maintained a canning kitchen during the summer and has put up more than 3,000 quarts of fruits and vegetables for residents of the community, she says in a report to Federal Food Administrator Deems of Burlington, Iowa.

Owners of fruits and vegetables have gone to her kitchen to have the food put up and have given the Red Cross the surplus, which has amounted during the season to more than $165.00, in addition to paying the expense of operation, which does not include any pay to Mrs. Clawson or her committee of seven women helpers or any other outgo except cost of gasoline and coal oil.

The institution started with a small cooker donated by John McLaughlin, a retired farmer, but the business grew so rapidly that a larger cooker was bought for $85.00. This will take care of 26 to 28 quarts of fruit at one time and during the day 100 quarts can be put up. This requires one gallon of gasoline.

The plant is located on the main street of New London and work has been done for women from Winfield, Mount Pleasant, Wayland and all the surrounding country. The demands are so great that it became necessary to limit the operations to the products of the district immediately surrounding New London. Committees from communities in the vicinity of New London have called on Mrs. Clawson for information as to how to establish and maintain this kind of a public service.

School began Monday morning after a three day recess in honor of Mr. "Flu." Say! We think about as much of him as we do of the Kaiser. "They belong in the same place."

Some are still absent from our ranks, but a little time will bring them back. Six week tests begin on Tuesday and last until Friday. These should not be feared by anyone who keeps up their daily work. Let us do our best, even though we make mistakes, everybody else does, too. One who never tries, never makes mistakes. It is discouraging to be sick and get behind in your work, but will you let that little obstacle stand between you and success?

OBITUARY—THE BRITT TRIBUNE

Last Thursday the Britt Tribune breathed it's last editorial breath and passed into silence forever.

The Britt Tribune came to life in the year 1879 and was one of the pioneer papers of the county. It was married and divorced several times to various editors, until finally in the year 1886 on Thanksgiving Day the paper was united in editorial bonds to E. N. Bailey and clung to him until editorial death parted them last Thursday.

The Britt Tribune has been one of the most popular papers in this part of the state and leaves a great many friends and patrons who mourr it's loss and look in vain for Bailey's famous editorials. It has always stood for the best and in these trying times, has been patriotic to the core and been the source of patriotic movements.

The "remains" were purchased by The Britt News who will dispose of them in a fit manner. The "remains" constitute a fine lay-out of modern printing machinery and type and no doubt the same will be used to enlarge their plant.

The Tribune has been "ailing" for some time due to the dreaded disease known to printers as "scarcititis-of-printers." E. N. Bailey has been short of help, having one son in France, the other running a paper at Crystal Lake, and beginning to age himself he could no longer stand the editorial strain and so took the opportunity to sell out.

The Tribune leaves to mourn it's loss the former editor and closest relative, E. N. Bailey; a long list of subscribers and loyal patrons of the paper. Goodbye Bailey from our editorial ranks, we hold out a welcome hand if ever you should again take up your pen.

Among the most remarkable fishes are those provided with lanterns of their own and which swim in the dark recesses of the bottom of the deep ocean where no ray of natural light from above can penetrate, says the Popular Science Monthly. A model of one of these fishes, notable for its phosphorescent organs, is on exhibition in the United States national museum. The sides of the fish are dotted at regular intervals with luminous spots. In addition there is a large luminous area like a lantern on the top of the head. In the model the luminous spots on the sides are represented by buttons of glass connected with the interior by tubes. The luminous protuberance on the head was modeled in gelatine and then tinted. When in actual operation the model is connected with electric current so that a distinct glow, appearing in the side spots and the frontal lantern," produces a very striking and, it is believed by fish experts, a quite accurate representation of the appearance of a living phosphorescent deep sea fish. The model is about a foot long.

Dynamite oxy-acetylene torches fire and wrecking cranes were employed successively in razing five tall thin walled, reinforced concrete cement storage bins built 15 years ago at South Chicago, says the Engineering Record. Heavy charges of dynamite in the supporting columns produced no effect. Oxy-acetylene torches were then employed to cut the steel rails that reinforced them the weight being shifted to wood stores. Even the effect of the heat and flames of burning kerosene soaked supports roaring up through the barrels of the tanks, apparently had no disintegrating effect, as the structure was not wrecked when it dropped on edge. Wrecking cranes finished the work, starting at the top and pulling the tanks apart in chunks.

The first attempt of government by the people begun in America was in 1619 when Sir George Yeardley was sent from England as governor of the Jamestown colony. His charter provided that he should call a few chosen men two from each of the 11 boroughs that constituted the colony. The meeting which was known as the assembly, was held at the church, with the governor and his council presiding. Those who came from the boroughs were called burgesses, and the assembly which met every year, was styled the house of burgesses. At this period this was the only English colony in America.

A spider has been discovered in the fresh water ponds and ditches of the British Isles that possesses all the habits of a fish as it not breathes in air the same as land spiders do. This queer arachnid weaves a sort of web or sack carries it below the surface and fastens it to some reed or root to serve as its home. In a series of trips to the surface he carries down each time a bit of air which he deposits in the sack. When the sack is full he enters it and enjoys a quiet life as long as the supply of air lasts.

One of the Maxim guns says Sir Hiram was designed to fire a shell weighing about a pound. These shells were of course expensive, costing about $1.60 each. On a demonstration of the gun before Li Hung Chang it fired 40 of the shells costing about $650 in one minute. The old Chinese statesman on being told the cost of the shells said: "This gun fires altogether too fast for China. The king of Denmark's comment was: "That gun would bankrupt my little kingdom in about two hours."

How many people realize the sensational development that the pneumatic tire business has experienced? The first company to undertake the manufacture of pneumatic tires was the Dunlap company organized at Dublin Ireland in 1889 with a capital of about $75,000 to make tires for bicycles and it rapidly grew to be a great business. Then came the automobile to add its demands, and today, only 27 years later the pneumatic tire business of the world is estimated at the enormous sum of $650,000,000.

The motion picture is more than 50 years old if we understand by that term any devise for producing the optical illusion of moving objects. These toys were called by various names, such as thaumatrope, zeotrope, stroboscope, phenakistoscope stereoscopic cabinet, kinematoscope etc. The first exhibition of photographic motion pictures was made by Henry Heyl, in Philadelphia in 1870.

It requires on the average about 125 watt-hours a ton mile to operate a car in city service says the Electric Railway Journal. Translated into a more comprehensible unit, this is 166 foottons. That is, the same amount of energy is required to move the car one mile on the level as would raise it vertically 166 feet. All of this energy goes into heat part of the loss being preventable the rest otherwise.

A redwood pole on the Hanford line of the San Joaquin Light and Power Company in southern California recently had to be replaced because of the activity of the birds in using it as a storehouse for winter food, it is reported in the Electrical World. One pole in particular had been in service 17 years, and was filled with hundreds of acorns which birds had deposited there.

According to an account took of the Second parish in Falmouth, Me. dating back to 1755, which is in the possession of Henry S. LIQUOR RAIDS ARE STAGED AT LEMARS

Several Places Visited By Officers In Search of Illegal Stocks.

LeMars, Ia., Oct. 11.—C. H. McMillan, of the Anti-Saloon League, accompanied by state officers, paid a visit to LeMars and caused more than a ripple of excitement. The officers accompanying him were F. A. Slocum, Philo Vanwagner and Jack Farrand.

Mr. McMillan and the officers were evidently all cocked and primed for their work, coming armed with search warrants.

They proceeded to the Palace cafe, operated by C. Druger, where they searched the premises but failed to find any contraband liquor. They confiscated a stock of cigarets which it is said will be donated to the Red Cross society.

The officers searched the premises of John Edwards, where it is said they found some of the ardent spirit.

At the premises of John Duster the officers after a vain search took away with them a bottle of cider with the intention it was stated of having it analyzed to determine if it was of the hard variety.

Action was delayed for a time until the owner of the paper could be seen by a committee. A report was made that he would speak for himself. GIVE IOWA SOLDIERS OPPORTUNITY TO VOTE

Commission Appointed By Governor Harding Commences Its Work.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 10.—There are 40,000 Iowa soldiers now in army service in one-half the camps of this country, and a few thousand others who are scattered here and there in camps where they have been assigned as volunteers in the navy, in coast artillery, in aviation, engineering, medical and training sections.

It is designated to give these soldiers a chance to vote at the coming election by again employing the old law of 1863 under which soldiers in the civil war were given a chance to vote while in the field. Governor Harding submitted the question to the attorney general, and that official gave a detailed opinion, as did Cosson two years ago, that the old law should be used for the benefit of Iowa soldiers this year, in view of the fact that there are so many in some camps that it will be a physical impossibility for them to vote under the absent voters' law.

The fact that there are in camps from 103 to 14,000 Iowa soldiers, and that every absent voters' ballot voted has to be sealed and sworn to before a notary public would cause a large part of these soldiers to fail to ever receive their ballots to vote and to fail to get them back to their home precincts if voted. Military officers cannot take acknowledgements in civil proceedings. At Camp Pike, for instance, where there were last month 12,573 Iowa men, it would be out of the question for any considerable number of these men to ever vote under the absent voters' law. The election commissioners will provide regular polling places for them, and their votes can be taken under the same rules and restrictions as if at home for all officers from senator down to county positions. No officers in districts less than a county can be voted for owing to the impossibility of making the canvass and entering the votes for these minor offices.

Governor Harding has named Attorney Price of Fort Dodge, Editor Junkin, of Creston, and Senator Caswell, of Denison, as three commissioners to plan and map out the details for the big task of taking the Iowa soldiers' vote in whatever camps a sufficient number may be found to make it practicable. These commissioners met with the governor in Des Moines, Sunday, and with Secretary of State W. S. Allen later, to outline the situation and start the important work. First the information as to the number of Iowa men in each camp and the numbers from each county in each camp has to be ascertained, then a sufficient number of ballots for each county in the state to supply these men at the election must be prepared and then the commissioners must arrange for election judges and clerks at each camp and see that the vote is regularly and legally polled, with the same restrictions as to citizenship as though the soldiers were at home.

The war department recently, in the application of the state of New York for permission to take the vote of the soldiers of that state in France and England declined such permission, on the ground that the soldiers over there are so constantly on the move and are so necessary to the fighting units in action, that it would be impossible and inadvisable to have commissioners try to take their votes outside of the United States. The war department did however, promise cooperation and all the facilities possible for taking the vote of soldiers still in this country. The Iowa commissioners will therefore not attempt to secure the soldier vote anywhere but in the United States.

Paris, Oct. 9.—(4:14 p. m.)—The battle is proceeding with great intensity along the whole fighting front.

With the fall of Cambrai, General Ludendorff's battle continues crumbling about him. The attack by the armies of General Byng and General Rawlinson toward Le Cateau this morning tends to precipitate withdrawal of the German armies in this region, which evidently are being thrown into disorder.

The French and Americans are forcing back the enemy in the Champagne and consolidating their gains on the Suippe river front, while French cavalry is north of the river, reconnoitering toward Juniville and Machault.

London, Oct. 10.—The city of Cambrai has been captured by the British with 8,000 prisoners.

London, Oct. 10 (1 p. m.)—German troops today are counter attacking very heavily on the Suippe river front in the Champagne and the French have not been able to make much progress.

BY JOHN DE GANDT,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris (10:50 a. m.) Oct. 10—The allies are still smashing forward between St. Quentin and Cambrai.

The British and French are at the gates of Bohain (11 miles northeast of St. Quentin). The Americans are less than four kilometers (two and a half miles) from Busigny (three miles and a half north of Bohain).

The French, operating in liaison with the American left wing, are pressing northward in the Argonne forest, which the enemy is hastily evacuating.

Two entire divisions have been destroyed in the fighting along the Suippe river. On the right bank of the Aisne, French and Americans are progressing toward Lancon (seven miles southwest of Montfaucon).

Further to the northeast the Americans along the Aire river are rendering the enemy's hold on the Grandpre pass untenable.

AMERICANS WIN AT VERDUN.

By the Associated Press.

With the American Army Northwest of Verdun, Tuesday, Oct. 8.—Pressure against the German lines on the western side of the Argonne sector resulted in satisfactory progress early today. The Americans were met by a very heavy machine gun fire, and from the start of the day's fight were subjected to an intense bombardment. Along the line the enemy is offering increasingly strong resistance and is using large quantities of gas. In the center the day was quieter and artillery activity remained at a low ebb. American observation balloons arose at will, while German aerial forces were virtually inactive.

By the Associated Press.

With the Anglo-American armies Near St. Quentin, Oct. 9.—Heavy fighting continued throughout the night on the Cambrai-St. Quentin front, and the British and Americans continued their progress of Tuesday under a heavy protective fire from the British artillery.

The defeated enemy was almost smothered under the great deluge of steel and explosives.

A large number of guns have been captured by the British and Americans in addition to the great batches of prisoners which continue to arive at the cages. The American troops alone captured two complete field batteries and a battery of heavy artillery.

The Americans captured these guns Tuesday afternoon when they suddenly outflanked both ends of the valley south of Premont.

German reinforcements have arrived, but as these troops have been engaged several times recently their presence merely adds to the confusion of the enemy ranks.

With the British Forces in France, Oct. 8 (1:30 p. m.)—The battle which began at dawn today has resulted in a serious defeat for the enemy.

The British and American troops French have advanced everywhere, smashing through the last line of the Hindenburg system and driving the disorganized Germans before them. In some places and especially on the Fremont, which appears to have been the key to the fighting, the Americans, the fighting troops have penetrated the German lines for a distance of more than two miles and still are advancing.

The French First army on the right has entered Essigny le Petit.

The terrific British barrage fire struck terror in the hearts of the enemy and in many instances, the machine gunners, however, held out to the last and were killed with many of them were annihilated.

Some of the places reached by the Americans and British by today's fighting were not in today's programme, it is said. But having won from the very start, it was apparently decided to carry them.

FAMOUS SEAL TAKEN FROM BELLY OF FISH

Peking, (by mail) A jade seal belonging to a famous general of the Ming dynasty was found recently in the belly of a fish according to a Chinese daily

A fisherman, living outside one of the city gates, caught a fish weighing over 50 pounds When he dressed it for sale, he found inside, the jade seal, about half an inch square and one inch thick.

The seal bears the name of Tsi-Chi-kuang The letters are engraved in the Chuan style and are still legible The finder did not know the value of the seal, and parted with it for a dollar. The new owner took it to curio experts and was assured it was genuine. He sold it later to a foreign collector for $500

The rare quality of the jade and the engraving convinced the experts that it was the property of the great General Tsi Chi-kaung who flourished in the latter part of the Ming dynasty and whose deeds in the suppression of the Japanese pirates who infested the Chinese coast have rendered his name a household word

How About Waistcoats?

From the Hartford Times.

It is only when the tailor gets into convention and passes resolutions for the supposed regulation of the manner of men's garb that he becomes funny if not pernicious. One of his exhibitions of that sort of tendency was his recent proposal, under the name of the National Association of Retail Clothiers to abolish the waistcoat—for the purpose of saving cloth, he says.

The waistcoat has its foes abundantly in evidence. Should we mention first those who exploit it in rainbow colors, such as Joseph never suffered—under the guise of its friends' It has those who abjure it, alike in winter and summer, as a useless garment And just now it has those who maintain that we can't afford the cloth, and that it were better to keep the coat and trousers at the expense of the waistcoat than to lose all three. All of these are foes of the waistcoat, because they do not appreciate its proper use.

VALUABLE POTASH DEPOSITS IN CANADA

Maple Creek Sask —Fortunes which promise to total millions may come to 16 Canadian soldiers who have been officially awarded immense beds of potash deposits in Ingbright lake, 30 miles north of here

The soldiers incidentally were among the first of the Canadian forces to clash with the Germans in France

Last July rumors became general that the dry bed of Ingbright lake contained vast quantities of sulphate of potash magnesium sulphate salts and minerals Later it was learned that the region had been visited by experts from the estate of the late Baron Rhondda who was food controller for Great Britain and that the Canadian Northern railroad also had become interested

The stories attracted the attention of Maj M A MacPherson and 15 privates A delegation started from Swift Current in an automobile and soon were racing northward across the prairie followed by other automobile parties who were also making for the lake ... The soldiers reached the lake a few minutes ... Rhondda ... railroad officials The Rhondda party came up ... But Maj MacPherson and his party had staked their claims and according to their reports, the claims were not contested

Samples of the deposits have been analyzed at the University of Saskatchewan and pronounced unusually pure. It was declared that open pit mining can easily remove great quantities of the deposits.

M'ADOO MAKES "TOUCH."

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

Boston.—A girl selling daisies for a war charity approached Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo on his arrival here today and asked him to buy a flower

"Certainly Mr McAdoo replied. He dug down in one pocket after another and each time his hand came up empty For a moment the secretary of treasury of the United States and director general of the railroads of the country, hesitated. Finally he smiled and turning to a friend made a "touch." Then he bought the flower.

Banks Must Restrict Nonessentials' Credits.

From the Financial World.

Pierre Jay, chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank, of New York, has urged upon banks and trust companies in the New York federal district that they conserve credits by restricting or curtailing loans for purposes not directly conected with the government financing or the production or distribution of things necessary to maintain the health and efficiency of our armed forces, and our civilian population On the other hand, business men are urged not to overbuy but carry smaller stocks and the individual is told he may also help along by living on a more economical basis.

Credit is a business essential, and its proper expansion is the fundamental foundation upon which the banking structure rests. But in times of war it becomes incumbent upon a nation to conserve its credit as much as possible in order that the war may be properly financed But if this restriction were to be rigidly carried out producers of nonessentials, who have been steady borrowers from the banks in pre war periods and who have been compelled to carry these loans, if not increase them, so that their businesses could survive until the restoration of peace, would find themselves in a serious dilemma Such is the unfortunate side of war in its purely material phase essential war work demands increasing volume of credit, while the nonessential producer depends upon it to carry him over the crisis safely Each bank in raking over its loans must determine in each instance whether it is safe for it to ask for curtailments, for if it should attempt to enforce this new ruling without judgment or consideration of the difficulties confronting the borrower, and were he forced to take up his loan failures would be unavoidable, resulting entirely from conditions extraneous to the nature of the business. And it could also happen that the banks, being the largest creditors, would have to operate some of the nonessential businesses they would be forced to take over This would happen where the banks hold mortgages in considerable amounts on properties, whose operation is nonessential to the prosecution of the war. They could not be paid off they would have to be foreclosed, and under foreclosure proceedings property seldom nets its intrinsic value In handling credits and to adjust them to war conditions is a very delicate problem. One thing which should not be permitted during the war is the financing of new projects not needed for the war, they can wait until peace is reestablished without harm to any person and with real help to the nation for such capital thus saved would then be available for war needs

But he was uncommunicative. He behaved like any ordinary persons. The crowded hour of glorious life' we had long expected has passed and it brought no thrill.

We may not belong to the cohorts of the shining ones. We may be simple folk, minded to do good, accepting with contentment a homely lot in life, following with conscience a round of duty that has nothing decorative in it. But there is not a gray day in the dullest life that does not hold material of romance, poetry and even fun, if we have the wit to seize upon the chance and make the most of it. Life may be merrily lived in the hovels of the poorest. The negro who has not had the industrial chance he deserves may be a millionaire in sunny humor Existence may be as amusing as a circus, though in an alley, and more dreary than the tomb of the sumptuous house of plutocrats and princes.

It all depends on the kind of people Tables, chairs, paintings and rugs cannot kiss you good morning and throw their arms about your neck. Mere furniture does not bring the uncontaminated joy of living It takes a person—a loving, living person—to create personality and to distribute it lavishly. Favorite mortals wherever they go are those who give themselves, in all sincerity of sympathy, to another's woe or weal—who rejoice with those that are happy and share the pain of those that are cast down. None is independent of compassion in sorrow, of companionship in the frolicsome mood. Therefore, be not content to sit back and take, in friendship, but try to anticipate, by giving ere you have received—and you will not be in want of friends.

MILITARY MEDAL IS GIVEN TO WOMEN

Nearly Hundred Plucky British Nurses Have Won Distinction at Front.

London (by mail)—The highest honor English war women have won is the Military medal

The soldiers' silver medal "for bravery in the field" has now been conferred on nearly 100 plucky British women.

Among many wonderful examples of courage recorded in the official citations are these

Sister Charlotte Lillian Annie Robinson

"For conspicuous devotion to duty and courage when a stationary hospital was struck by four bombs from an enemy airplane and one wing was practically cut in two, many patients being buried in the debris. Sister Robinson at very great personal risk went in among the ruins to assist in recovering the patients, quite regardless of danger, her one thought being to rescue the patients She displayed magnificent coolness and resource"

Sister Nellie Galvin

'For bravery and devotion to duty during an enemy air raid when four enemy bombs were dropped on the building occupied by the hospital causing much damage to the ward in which Sister Galvin was on night duty She remained in the ward attending to the sick, several of whom were wounded and carried on her work as if nothing had happened She displayed the greatest coolness and devotion to duty"

Staff Nurse Beatrice Dascombe.

"For gallantry and devotion to duty during an enemy air raid when her ward being destroyed by a bomb and herself wounded, she insisted on remaining at her post and attending to the wounded."

Sister Mary Ellen Davis.

"For gallantry and devotion to duty during an enemy air raid. When the Sisters' quarters were wrecked and bombs were falling, she showed a fine example and assisted materially in controlling the situation and attending to the sisters who were wounded."

Miss Katherine Margaret Freshfield.

"For gallantry and devotion to duty during an enemy air raid The ward in which she was working was destroyed by a bomb, but she continued to attend to her patients, and was herself very severely wounded"

Commandant Winifred Eleanor Sarah Mount Batten.

"For gallantry and devotion to duty during an enemy air raid.' She superintended the work of the convoy, drove an ambulance car herself during the raid, and by her coolness and disregard for her own safety insured the prompt removal of the wounded to hospital.'

Nurse Mary Gwynnedd Campbell.

"For gallantry and devotion to duty during an enemy air raid, when buildings were set on fire. She moved about in full glare regardless of imminent danger, taking patients to safety and inspiring confidence in all"

WELFARE BUREAU WOULD AFFILIATE

The Organized Welfare Bureau which will give opportunity for affiliation to similar organizations in Sioux City, has passed the following resolution

Whereas, the Organized Welfare Bureau of Sioux City has as its object the efficient supervision of as much of the welfare work of the city as it is possible for it to embrace, and in view of the fact that its method of procedure is to work upon the basis of an annual budget which makes it difficult for it to undertake any fresh effort involving any considerable outlay during its fiscal year, it is deemed advisable before the annual meeting each year to give an opportunity to any commitee or organization in the city desiring to enter into negotiations with the bureau for the absorption of or conduct of its work, therefore, it was resolved, that a similar opportunity be extended this year before the annual meeting, which is to take place between the 14th and last day of October, 1918.

It was further resolved, that any such committee or organization desiring to enter into any such negotiations do communicate such desire in writing to Rabbi Emanuel Sternheim, chairman of the executive committee of the Organized Welfare Bureau, not later than the 7th day of October, 1918.

Which Is the Safer Way?

Henry Woodhouse in Everybody's.

Airplane pilots with many air fights to their credit say that they would prefer to fight half a dozen boche aviators single handed over the German lines, with the German 4 inch anti-aircraft batteries popping ... at them at every opportunity than to "go over the edge" of an observation balloon with a parachute. The balloon pilot does not agree to that, and points out that if you are up in a military balloon spotting artillery fire, and all at once you hear the sharp staccato of a boche airplane gun, and your own anti-aircraft batteries start a barrage fire just over your head, to bring down the boche, you are not apt to stop to figure out which is bursting shrapnel from the "archies" and which is an incendiary bullet from the boche. Over the edge you go as fast as you can fasten the parachute to your harness.

If you have seen the boche coming and you telephoned down to the winch crew to haul down the balloon, and they are doing so when the boche begins to fire tracer bullets, it is up to you to decide whether you'll stay in the basket and take the chance of seeing the bag—about 20,000 cubic feet of hydrogen—explode over your head, or jump out and take the chance of being blown off over "No Man's Land" or over the German lines.

It all depends on how the wind blows. The parachute will open after you have shot down a few hundred feet and will check the fall The descent is then slow, and if the wind is blowing toward the enemy lines you have no choice, The wind is the controlling factor and you drift with it

Main Street.

I like to look at the blossomy track of the moon upon the sea,
But it isn't half so fine a sight as Main street used to be
When it all was covered over with a couple feet of snow,
And over the crisp and radiant road the ringing sleighs would go.

Now, Main street bordered with autumn leaves, it was a pleasant thing,
And its gutters were gay with dandelions
early in the spring;
I like to think of it white with frost or dusty in the heat,
Because I think it is humaner than any other street.

A city street that is busy and wide is ground by a thousand wheels,
And a burden of traffic on its breast is all it ever feels:
It is dully conscious of weight and speed and of work that never ends,
But it cannot be human like Main street, and recognise its friends.

There were only about a hundred teams
on Main street in a day,
And twenty or thirty people, I guess, and some children out to play
And there wasn't a wagon or buggy, or a man or a girl or a boy,
That Main street didn't remember and somehow seem to enjoy.

WIRE ENTANGLEMENTS PLAY STRANGE TUNES

Solitary Sentinels In No Man's Land Hear Music Caused By Elements.

With American Armies in France (by mail)—Barbed wire which protects the trenches plays odd tricks on the soldier sentries.

The ground under the wire becomes a runway for all the small things of the night. Rats make trapezes out of the taut strands, eazles follow them and the fight which ensues may set dancing all the empty jam tins strung along the wire as alarms so that sentries over a long stretch of front will fire repeatedly into the night, bringing the guards to their posts and awaking soldiers over a wide area.

At night the wire takes on a ghastly aspect The cool dews settle on the picket posts and the wires contract, straining with rustling and creeping noises or chafing and chattering like a living thing The muffled sentries prick their ears to listen and peer anxiously through the darkness, now and then discharging a shot into the black night, for it is sometimes difficult to tell whether the noise is that of the wire or that of enemy meddlers in No Man's Land, secretly cutting a pathway through the defenses.

When the barbed wire is new and freshly erected and secured to its stout scoffoldings and stakes it looks like some carefully planned work of engineering, the skeleton, perhaps of some concrete rampart or breakwater. Times weathers it at first to an ugly thing of red rust and sullen neutral tints, but later it may blossom in amazing beauty as the rich weeds and undergrowth climb through its meshes, leaving corn flowers and blazing poppies to cloak its ugliness.

The wire has a voice of its own It sings and drones in the wind, carrying back the memories of the men who sit behind it to the dusty roads of Connecticut or Missouri or Alabama, where the tall telegraph poles sing a similar song and lazy insects re-echo the chorus.

EXPORTS TO MEXICO UNDER SET RULES

El Paso, Tex.—Cyanide of pottasium, soap, ammonia, kippered herring and chocolate candy are now being exported to Mexico on a ration basis like sugar, flour and lard. The War Trade Board has announced its willingness to issue export licenses for the exportation of these commodities under the usual war time regulations.

Cyanide is used extensively in the reduction of metals. There is such a shortage of the cyanide supply that all countries are being similarly rationed.

Ammonia may be used for ice making, refrigerating, and in cooling plants but must not be used in beer making. Herring, sardines and other foodstuffs not included in the contraband list may also be exported to Mexico under the license plan.

When taking men's places women spend more money, Washington regretfully announces.

FIGURES SHOW WHAT YOUR DOLLARS WILL DO

What a Liberty Bond Will Buy for My Boy "Over There."

Suppose you have a son with the American expeditionary forces, and suppose you are a steady buyer of Liberty Loan bonds. Did you ever ask yourself what 'Your boy' gets out of it, when you lay down a new $100 bill and say: "I want another hundred-dollar Liberty Bond?" Here are some facts and figures officially made up by the war department:

Your one hundred dollar Liberty Bond will buy your boy one outfit of clothing and sleeping gear, amounting to $91.63. The change is $8.87 and that is just enough to give him his "eats" for 19½ days.

This war is now in its fifth year—has been running on about 1,500 days. The nineteen and a half days' board left for the boy out of your hundred-dollar Liberty Bond wouldn't amount to much if the fighting should go on a few years more! That $91.63 outfit would be pretty well used up at the end of a few months of campaigning.

Your hundred dollar war bond shows the best possible disposition on your part, but unless you buy more than one, somebody else has to put up money to keep your boy's hungry stomach lined with bacon and fighting food.

That illustrates in a simple way the urgent necessity for liberality in buying Fourth Liberty Bonds. What you gave the government on the first, second and third loans has been used up long ago. Your boy is "over there" risking his life and all that he has every minute of the day. Surely it is "up to you" to do absolutely all you can to keep that boy fed and clothed and cared for.

But one point was overlooked in figuring the proceeds of the hundred dollar war bond. It bought the boy an outfit of clothes and 19 days' board, but it didn't buy him a gun nor a trench knife—not even a revolver, or a hand grenade. Worse than all that, the hundred dollars didn't cover knife, fork or spoon; nor did it give the boy a pick and shovel for intrenching when the Boche fire gets too hot. Somebody else had to buy another bond to supply those things and give your boy the ammunition he needs for offense and defense.

Look at a few more figures:

When your boy goes over the top there must be a nice barrage laid down to protect him. Each 75-millimeter shell that is fired costs $18. Each 6-inch shell costs $20. The 12-inch high explosive shell loaded costs about $270. The 16-inch shell loaded with TNT costs about $1,000, and the smokeless powder to fire it costs $325 more. The gun it is fired from sets the government back $173,000. That is not all; the wear and tear on big caliber guns is terrible, so that the life of the tube is very brief.

All these things point clearly to the mistake people make when they say: "Oh, I have bought several war bonds. I think I have done my share."

That is miles from the truth. You have not done your share as long as there is a dollar of your capital or income that you don't absolutely have to have to keep life in your body All the rest ought to be spent for Fourth Liberty Bonds.

PLEA BY GOLD STAR MOTHER

Tells Chicago Women Why Everyone Should Buy Bonds to Back Boys.

By MRS. JAMES C. ELY of Chicago Gold Star Mother.

It would be hard for me to express more earnestly an appeal for the fourth Liberty loan than the message sent to us from our son shortly before his death when he said: "It is an investment—not a loss—when a man dies for his country."

Our boys are dying for their country—can there be too great an investment for those of us who have only money to give?

WHAT YOUR LIBERTY BOND BUYS

What is to be done with all the money that is being asked for on the Fighting Fourth Liberty Loan? Pay for battleships, submarines, and a thousand other things to be used by our boys on the land, on the sea, in the air and under the sea. To complete a single battleship now under construction requires $23,075,000, and a battle cruiser takes $24,000,000. A scout cruiser takes $7,220,000, and a destroyer $1,500,000. A coast submarine costs $850,000 and a seagoing submarine $1,430,000.

For artillery, automatic rifles, and small arms, and for ammunition for them, we have spent $3,700,000,000. Every Liberty Loan subscriber helps to arm our soldiers.

More than 120,000,000 has been spent just for staple supplies for our army, such as flour, bacon, rice, etc. Every subscriber to the Liberty Loan helps feed our soldiers.

AN INTERESTING FACT

Some one has advanced the opinion that the letter "E" is the most unfortunate character in the English alphabet, because it is always out of cash, forever in debt, never out of danger and in hell all the time. But we call your attention to the fact that "E" is never in war and always in peace. It is the beginning of existance the commencement of ease and the ending of trouble, the beginning of Edison and the ending of submarine. Without it there would be no meat, no bread, no life, no heaven. It is the center of honesty, makes love perfect and there will be no regrets if you send us an order for printing of any kind. LIBERTY CHORUSES BIG AID

Americanization of the Foreign-Born Helps Boost the Fourth Loan.

There is a marked difference in the third and fourth Liberty loans in the amalgamation of foreign born citizens with those of native birth

"Since the third loan we have come to know each other better and to appreciate the contributions each makes toward the new democracy which is the outgrowth of the war," said Mrs. Constantine Howard of the Foreign Language division.

The Liberty chorus of more than 100 voices—representing 32 nationalities—organized under her leadership, is one of the great features of the present campaign.

"In the previous campaigns the foreign-born workers limited their efforts largely to awakening an interest in bond investment among their own nationalities. Now," continued Mrs. Howard, "they are selling the bonds to us, but owing to a difference in organization the amounts subscribed to the fourth loan by the various nationalities will not average so much in reality as they have done heretofore.

"Their enthusiasm has awakened an understanding of the real purpose of the war both among their own peoples and among native-born Americans. Those who came here seeking freedom from oppression have taught us by their enthusiasm to value ever more highly that liberty of which we once sung perhaps more with our lips than our hearts.

"The ever increasing demands for the appearance of the Liberty chorus in Chicago and throughout the district at patriotic events is the best proof of the responsive chord which our foreign-born peoples have evoked in American consciousness.

"Through the Liberty loan and the need for universal sacrifice for a common cause has come a wealth of civic betterment, as well as the necessary funds to carry on the fight for world-wide liberty. We are being welded into a united peoples through sacrifice. The gold stars which dot the service flags all over the nation—the lending of every available dollar has united us.

"What is your community doing to stimulate this social consciousness into active patriotic expression? If you are allowing a line to remain between foreign-born and native Americans the true message of the Liberty loan is not reaching the inner consciousness of your community.

"This work of Americanization will go on when the immediate need for raising funds to fight the war to a finish has passed. Nothing can be more inspiring or hopeful for a correlated community life than the entire obliteration of racial differences which had its beginning during the third loan

NOBODY EVER DOES ENOUGH.

This officer was at home with a shattered arm and several other wounds. Work of the most arduous kind had won him seven "brisques" or wound stripes. He learns that the offensive had been resumed against the Germans and he put on his belt to return to his company.

"But your arm is broken," said his father.

"No matter. I have a perfectly good plaster cast on it."

"You have done enough, anway. Let the rest fight it out."

"Nobody ever does enough. Good by!"

That applies to every American who is asked to lend to the United States on fourth Liberty bonds. Buy more

HELPING THE ENEMY

"YOU LEND AS THEY FIGHT."

"MR BUSINESS MAN, YOU'VE NOT BEEN HIT UNTIL YOU'VE LOST AN ARM OR A LEG BUY ALL THE BONDS YOU CAN"

"THAT'S YOUR SHARE IN LIBERTY BONDS? ALL YOU HAVE IN THE BANK AND ALL YOU CAN SAVE."

"WHAT KIND OF A FIGHTER ARE YOU? ANSWER, 'HOW MANY BONDS HAVE YOU BOUGHT?'"

THE WILL TO WIN.

The casualty lists are hitting the rural communities as well as the cities and bringing home the war in earnest Every casualty list should increase the will to win, and strengthen the determination to win regardless of cost. The men are giving their lives on the fight ing front, and the folks at home canno do less than exert every effort to in crease the production of food crop and to expend every dollar possible in buy ing Liberty bonds.

EVERY LIFE A REASON FOR PURCHASING BONDS

Duty to Our Country Far Greater Than to Dearest Friends in Time of Need

By LILLIAN GISH, Famous Screen Actress.

I know 500,000,000 reasons for buying a Liberty bond and not one against a bond. Certainly every life in this country and in the lands of our allies offers a reason, for each one considers his or her life and freedom worth any protection necessary, even to death.

No matter how pressed for funds one would loan a dearest friend a few dollars in time of greatest need, knowing the money would be returned with interest. And how much greater is the duty to one's country than to one's dearest friend!

If you had been with me in London one afternoon, a "Four-Minute" man of a different breed than ours would have given you so many reasons to buy bonds you would never think of reasons, but just give, and give, and give. He was a Hun aviator and he was over London just four minutes. And he dropped bombs.

One dropped on a public school where little children were at their studies. It was a big school Nearly all were killed or maimed. Their mothers came, when the alarm was spread. They fought with the police. Most of the mothers had husbands at war. Their faces and their outcries! How much those women had to give!

A few Liberty bonds measure up pretty small compared with a little child, or a brother, or father, or husband, or sweetheart, or friend. In the past we have put our raw efforts in the mint of commerce, and got money; and now we put our money in the mint of patriotism and get Liberty bonds.

In the prayer book of democracy today the fly-leaf should be a Liberty bond. Have you got yours?

How Farmers' Clubs Can Help.

Meetings of the Grange and Farmers' clubs in rural communities should be utilized for the purpose of stirring up enthusiasm for the Liberty loan. The war which is now being brought home to all of us in the daily casualty lists will be the chief topic of interest, and it will be an easy matter to turn the discussions to the necessity and duty of participating in the war work by buying Liberty Loan bonds.

A Double Saving.

Money invested in Liberty bonds only insures quick assets when most needed with a good monetary return if held to maturity, but after the war the buying power will be greatly enhanced, making a double saving.

YOUR SON'S LIFE OR A NEW SUIT

What It Means If 105,000,000 People Refuse to Economize on Clothing.

NATION HURT IN MANY WAYS

One of Numerous Cases in Point Vividly Illustrates the Vital Necessity of "Saving to Save the Country" in War Time.

By PAUL M. WARBURG, Former Vice Governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

I am one of one hundred and five million of inhabitants of the United States; my duties are the same as those of every other true American, and those of every other true American are the same as mine. Whatever I contribute to the cause of the country, I may expect to see done—each in his own way—by 105,000,000 people.

Let us suppose for the purpose of illustration that I decide that I shall effect a saving on clothes. I might select boots, automobiles, umbrellas, or any other article for which I regularly spend my money, as I have no desire to single out any one commodity, but clothes lend themselves to my thought, so I name them. If I make up my mind, then, at this juncture that to wear old clothes is more respectable than to be seen in new ones; if I decide to buy one new suit of clothes less than I usually purchase each year, and if I figure that suit to cost no more than $10—the country as a whole, should we all pull together and act on the same lines, would save thereby over one billion dollars. It is true that in dealing with our 105,000,000 population we include children and many poor people that could not save ten dollars each because they never spend more for clothes than they absolutely must. But on the other hand $10 is a much smaller amount than the average man or woman spends for a new suit of clothes. The assumption that a billion dollars could easily be saved on clothes may, therefore, be accepted as conservative.

The first thought that occurs to us in this connection is, that by this saving in clothes over one billion dollars would be freed to be invested in Liberty loan bonds. That is the first important and most obvious result. But there are other economic results involved in this saving that are of far greater importance than the mere saving of money.

Economic Results Are Vast.

Let us consider first what one billion dollars' worth of clothes means. Suppose they were half-wool and half-cotton and that the value of the raw material constituted only 50 per cent of the price paid by the ultimate consumer, that would, at the present price of 60 cents per pound for wool and 30 cents per pound for cotton respectively, represent 208,334 tons of wool and 416,667 tons of cotton. Can you imagine how much freight space would be required on water and on land, in moving this mass of raw material? Do you realize that if these bales were put into freight cars, assuming a loading capacity of 16 tons per car for wool and 13 tons per car for cotton, this would represent 13,021 box cars loaded with wool and 32,056 box cars loaded with cotton? Assuming 75 cars per train, there would be about 600 trains; the total length of these trains would be approximately 314 miles, and these trains, hauled by 600 engines, when standing in line would approximately cover the distance from Baltimore to Pittsburgh? Can you imagine the amount of coal consumed in first transporting and then weaving this raw material into cloth? Can you imagine the number of hands employed in these processes? And then consider that more coal, more labor and more transportation are required in distributing the cloth and again more labor and more material in converting it into clothes, and again more labor and transportation in retailing the finished product to the final consumer.

Let us be mindful that all the time these processes are being carried on Uncle Sam is short of the men necessary to dispatch his war work, and furthermore that shortage of coal and the clogging of the wheels of transportation have stopped his progress at most critical moments and in the present emergency continue to remain a constant menace to the country.

May Cost Your Son's Life.

My new suit of clothes means, therefore, delay for our military operations; delay in transporting and equipping men, and in sending to them, and to our allies, the supplies they need; means increased losses and a longer duration of the war. My new suit of clothes may cost, therefore, the life of my son.

The supply of goods, of labor and of transportation is limited. It is a matter of common agreement that this limited supply is not sufficient freely to satisfy all wants and that unrestricted attempts on the part of each individual to satisfy his own requirements may lead to a wild scramble and destructive competition with the government, resulting in fatal delay and endless increase in prices.

The loaf of bread available for ourselves and for our allies is not large enough to "go around" if we all want to eat more than is absolutely necessary for our maintenance. It is everybody's duty, therefore, at this time to "tighten his belt" and to make a genuine effort to live on as thin a slice of the loaf as he can. Unless that be done we must buy additional food in neutral countries, thereby using tonnage that should be kept available for our military operations and increasing our difficulties in adjusting our trade balances with neutral countries.

Hurts Uncle Sam in Many Ways.

To return to our story of the suit of clothes. During last year the United States had to import 421,000,000 pounds of wool, representing a value of about $172,000,000. About half of this came from Argentina. Our suits of clothes called for a substantial portion of this wool and therefore to that extent robbed Uncle Sam of the use of his ships. Moreover, our factories being busy in producing the things required for the prosecution of the war and our home consumption still proceeding at almost top speed, the quantity of goods available for shipment to Argentina in payment for the wool (or for that matter to Chile for nitrates, to Peru for copper, and so on), is insufficient. As a consequence the United States had to pay for more goods in South America than South America has had to pay for goods bought in the United States, thereby causing a decline of dollar exchange in these neutral countries. This shrinkage in the price of the dollar means that it has lost a corresponding part of its purchasing power in neutral countries. The scarcity of goods available for our export trade has thus become a serious obstacle in our way in trying to secure at reasonable prices or in adequate quantities some of the things that we absolutely require from foreign countries.

My suit of clothes has hurt Uncle Sam, therefore, in several ways: I have consumed more wool than necessary and thereby forced the United States to import a correspondingly large quantity of this article; I have consumed more cotton goods than necessary and to that extent have deprived Uncle Sam of the means with which to pay for the minimum of wool which we may have to import.

I have used the illustration of a new suit of clothes; it would be easy, though somewhat tedious, to show that we have been dealing only with one case in point. The country is short at this time of hides and skins and has to import large quantities from neutral countries because we are extravagant in our individual purchases of shoes. Similarly, though we are the largest producers of copper, we are forced to import copper from Peru because or civilian population has not begun sufficiently to curtail its use. In like manner we might ask ourselves is it at all excusable that at this time we still manufacture such articles as silk stockings, when every thread of silk must be imported, while we could use our own cotton?

It is impossible and unnecessary to enumerate the many articles that are in a similar position. Many billions of dollars can easily be saved when once we are capable of realizing the cumulative effect of individual "saving;" take the word "saving" in its larger meaning, as involving not only money, but also goods and services. If every individual could be made to see with his own eyes that neglect of saving of this sort means decreased war efficiency, a prolongation of the war, and a larger number of casualties; if every one who has a son or dear relative on the fighting lines across the water could be made to feel that millions of small savings directly affect his boy—there would be no doubt that we could secure the most conscientious and enthusiastic co-operation of all the people. Thus far—we must say with regret—of 105,000,000 people, 100,000,000 do not see the connection between the suit of clothes and the life of the boy.

Germany's Enforced Economy.

Germany's military success is largely predicated upon her ability to center the entire national effort upon the business of war. It is safe to say that she never would have been able to bear the burdens of the fight as well as she has during these four long years had it not been for the enforced savings in material, money and men brought about through the British blockade. If it had not been for the stern necessities created by that blockade the German people would not have been willing to submit to famine rations as to food, clothes, shoes and other similar articles. Industries catering to the appetites and extravagances of the masses would have kept men and material from the government instead of making everything available for the war work of the government, and financially she would have exhausted herself by buying things abroad that she could go without or for which she had to strain her ingenuity in finding or creating substitutes.

It is difficult to bring about drastic economy without the compulsion exercised by hard necessity. For us the problem is whether or not, of our own free will, we shall be able to establish our own voluntary blockade against waste and extravagance. It is a problem whose solution requires the greatest intelligence and the greatest degree of unselfish patriotism. It is a problem that will put the spirit of our people to the severest test.

The government is not devoid of means of promoting economy. The war industries board, the food and fuel administrations, the capital issues committee, the department of labor and department of agriculture all move in the same direction of increasing necessary production and decreasing unnecessary consumption.

Full success however, may be counted upon only if the whole hearted cooperation of every citizen of the United States can be enlisted.

"And if I give you my word of honor, Monsieur le President, to return the moment my task is done and give myself up?"

"Come, Arsene Lupin," he said, "play the game! If you really want to have your way, pay for it! Hang it all, remember that after all this business, and especially after the incidents of last night, you and Florence Levasseur will be to the public what you already are the responsible actors in the tragedy nay more the real and only criminal. And it is now when Florence Levasseur has taken to her heels that you come and ask for your liberty! Very well, but damn it set a price to it and don't haggle with me!"

"I am not haggling, Monsieur President," declared Don Luis, in a very straightforward manner more extraordinary and tremendous than you imagine But if it were twice as extraordinary and twice as tremendous, it would not count once Florence Levasseur's life in danger Nevertheless, I am entitled to try for a less exorbitant transaction Of this your words remove all hope I will therefore lay my cards upon the table as you demand, and as I had made up my mind to do.

He sat down opposite Valenglay in the attitude of a man treating with another on equal terms

"I shall not be long A single sentence, Monsieur le President, will express the bargain which I am proposing to the Prime Minister of my country"

And looking Valenglay straight in the eyes he said slowly syllable by syllable

"In exchange for 24 hours' liberty and no more undertaking on my honor to return here tomorrow evening and to return here either with Florence to give you every proof of her innocence, or without her to constitute myself your prisoner I offer you—"

He took his time and, in a serious voice concluded

"I offer you a kingdom Monsieur le President du Conseil"

The sentence sounded bombastic and ludicrous, sounded silly enough to provoke a shrug of the shoulders sounded like one of those sentences which only an imbecile or a lunatic could utter And yet Valenglay remained impassive He knew that, in such circumstances as the present, the man before him was not the man to indulge in jesting

And he knew it so fully that, instinctively, accustomed as he was to momentous political questions in which secrecy is of the utmost importance, he cast a glance toward the Prefect of Police as though M Desmalion's presence in the room hindered him

"I positively insist," said Don Luis, "that Monsieur le Prefect de Police shall stay and hear what I have to say He is better able than any one else to appreciate the value of it, and he will be a witness to its correctness in certain particulars

"Speak!" said Valenglay

His curiosity knew no bounds He did not much care whether [illegible] any practical results In his heart he did not believe in it. But what he wanted to know was the lengths to which that demon of audacity was prepared to go, and on what new prodigious adventure he based the pretensions which he was putting forward so calmly and frankly

Don Luis smiled

"Will you allow me?" he asked

Rising and going to the mantelpiece, he took down from the wall a small map representing Northwest Africa. He spread it on the table, placed different objects on the four corners to hold it in position, and resumed:

"There is one matter, Monsieur le President, which puzzled Monsieur le Prefect de Police and about which I know that he caused inquiries to be made, and that matter is how I employed my time, or, rather, how Arsene Lupin employed his time during the last three years of his service with the Foreign Legion."

"These inquiries were made by my orders," said Valenglay.

"And they led ---?"

"To nothing."

"So that you do not know what I did during my captivity?"

"Just so."

"I will tell you, Monsieur le President. It will not take me long"

Don Luis pointed with a pencil to a spot in Morocco marked on the map.

"It was here that I was taken prisoner on the twenty-fourth of July My capture seemed queer to Monsieur le Prefect de Police and to all who subsequently heard the details of the incident. They were astonished that I should have been foolish enough to get caught in ambush and to allow myself to be trapped by a troop of forty Berber horse. Their surprise is justified. My capture was a deliberate move on my part.

"You will perhaps remember, Monsieur le President, that I enlisted in the Foreign Legion after making a fruitless attempt to kill myself in consequence of some really terrible private disasters. I wanted to die, and I thought that a Moorish bullet would give me the final rest for which I longed

"Fortune did not permit it. My destiny, it seemed, was not yet fulfilled. Then what had to be was Little by little, unknown to myself, the thought of death vanished and I recovered my love of life. A few rather striking feats of arms had given me back all my self confidence and all my desire for action

"New dreams seized hold of me I fell a victim to a new ideal. From day to day I needed more space, greater independence, wider horizons, more unforeseen and personal sensations. The Legion, great as my affection was for the plucky fellows who had welcomed me so cordially, was no longer enough to satisfy my craving for activity.

"One day, without thinking much about it, in a blind prompting of my whole being toward a great adventure which I did not clearly see, but which attracted me in a mysterious fashion, one day, finding myself surrounded by a band of the enemy, though still in a position to fight, I allowed myself to be captured.

"That is the whole story, Monsieur le President. As a prisoner, I was free. A new life opened before me. However, the incident nearly turned out badly. My three dozen Berbers, a troop detached from an important nomad tribe that used to pillage and put to ransom the districts lying on the middle chains of the Atlas Range, first galloped back to the little cluster of tents where the wives of their chiefs were encamped under the guard of some ten men. They packed off at once; and, after a week's march which I found pretty arduous, for I was on foot, with my hands tied behind my back, following a mounted party, they stopped on a narrow upland commanded by rocky slopes covered with skeletons mouldering among the [illegible] French swords and other weapons

"Here they planted a stake in the ground and fastened me to it. I gathered from the behavior of my captors and from a few words which I overheard that my death was decided on. They meant to cut off my ears, nose, and tongue, and then my head.

"However, they began by preparing their repast. They went to a well close by, ate and drank and took no further notice of me except to laugh at me and describe the various treats they held in store for me. . . . Another night passed. The torture was postponed until the morning, a time that suited them better. At break of day they crowded round me, uttering yells and shouts with which were mingled the shrill cries of the women.

"When my shadow covered a line which they had marked on the sand the night before, they ceased their din, and one of them, who was to perform the surgical operations prescribed for me, stepped forward and ordered me to put out my tongue. I did so. He took hold of it with a corner of his burnous and, with his other hand, drew his dagger from its sheath.

"I shall never forget the ferocity, coupled with ingenuous delight, of his expression, which was like that of a mischievous boy amusing himself by breaking a bird's wings and legs . Nor shall I ever forget the man's stupefaction when he saw that his danger no longer consisted of anything but the pommel and a harmless and ridiculously small stump of the blade, just long enough to keep in its sheath. His fury was revealed by a splutter of curses and he at once rushed at one of his friends and snatched his dagger from him.

"The same stupefaction followed: this dagger was also broken off at the hilt. The next thing was a general tumult, in which one and all brandished their knives. But all of them uttered howls of rage.

"There were 45 men there; and their 45 knives were smashed. . . . The chief flew at me as if holding me responsible for this incomprehensible phenomenon. He was a tall, lean old man, slightly hunch-backed, blind of one eye, hideous to look upon. He aimed a huge pistol blank at my head and he struck me as so ugly that I burst out laughing in his face. He pulled the trigger. The pistol missed fire. He pulled it again. The pistol again missed fire. . . .

"All of them at once began to dance around the stake to which I was fastened. Gesticulating wildly, hustling one another and roaring like thunder, they leveled their various firearms at me: muskets, pistols, carbines, old Spanish blunderbusses. The hammers clicked. But the muskets, pistols, carbines, and blunderbusses did not go off!

"It was a regular miracle. You should have seen their faces. I never laughed so much in my life, and this completed their bewilderment.

"Some ran to the tents for more powder. Others hurriedly reloaded their arms, only to meet with fresh failure, while I did nothing but laugh! The thing could not go on indefinitely There were plenty of other means of doing away with me. They had their hands to strangle me with, the butt ends of their muskets to smash my head with, pebbles to stone me with. And there were over 40 of them!

"The old chief picked up a bulky stone and stepped toward me his features distorted with hatred. He raised himself to his full height, lifted the huge block with the assistance of two of his men, above my head and dropped it in front of me, on the stake! It was a staggering sight for the poor old man. I had, in one second, unfastened my bonds and sprung backward, and I was standing at three paces from him, with my hands outstretched before me, and holding in those outstretched hands the two revolvers which had been taken from me on the day of my capture!

"What followed was the business of a few seconds The chief now began to laugh as I had laughed, sarcastically To his mind, in the disorder of his brain, those two revolvers with which I threatened him could have no more effect than the useless weapons which had spared my life. He took up a large pebble and raised his hand to hurl it at my face. His two assistants did the same And all the others were prepared to follow his example

"'Hands down!' I cried 'or I fire!' The chief let fly his stone At the same moment three shots rang out. The chief and his two men fell dead to the ground. 'Who's next?' I asked, looking round the band.

"Forty-two Moors remained I had eleven bullets left. As none of the men budged, I slipped one of my revolvers under my arm and took from my pocket two small boxes of cartridges containing 50 more bullets. And from my belt I drew three great knives, all of them nicely tapering and pointed. Half of the troop made signs of submission and drew up in line behind me. The other half capitulated a moment after. The battle was over. It had not lasted four minutes."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Arsene I Emperor of Mauretania.

Don Luis ceased A smile of amusement played round his lips The recollection of those four minutes seemed to divert him immensely.

Valenglay and the Prefect of Police, who were neither of them men to be unduly surprised at courage and coolness, had listened to him, nevertheless, and were now looking at him in bewildered silence. Was it possible for a human being to carry heroism to such unlikely lengths?

Meanwhile, he went up to the other side of the chimney and pointed to a larger map, representing the French roads.

"You told me, Monsieur le President, that the scoundrel's motor car had left Versailles and was going toward Nantes?"

"Yes, and all our arrangements are made to arrest him either on the way, or at Nantes or at Saint-Nazaire, where he may intend to take ship."

Don Luis Perenna followed with his forefinger the road across France, stopping here and there, marking successive stages. And nothing could have been more impressive than this dumb show

The man that he was, preserving his composure amid the overthrow of all that he had most at heart, seemed by his calmness to dominate time and circumstances. It was as though the murderer were running away at one end of an unbreakable thread of which Don Luis held the other, and as though Don Luis could stop his flight at any time by a mere movement of his finger and thumb.

As he studied the map, the master seemed to command not only a sheet of cardboard, but also the highroad on which a motor car was spinning along, subject to his despotic will.

He went back to the table and continued:

"The battle was over And there was no question of its being resumed My 42 worthies found themselves face to face with a conqueror, against whom revenge is always possible, by fair means or foul, but with one who had subjugated them in a supernatural manner There was no other explanation of the inexplicable facts which they had witnessed. I was a sorcerer, a kind of marabout, a direct emissary of the Prophet."

Valenglay laughed and said:

"Their interpretation was not so very unreasonable, for after all, you must have preformed a slight-of-hand trick which strikes me also as being little less than miraculous."

"Monsieur le President, do you know a curious short story of Balzac's called 'A Passion in the Desert?'"

"Yes."

"Well, the key to the riddle lies in that."

"Does it? I don't quite see. You were not under the claws of a tigress. There was no tigress to tame in this instance."

"No, but there were women."

"Eh? How do you mean?"

"Upon my word, Monsieur le President," said Don Luis gayly, "I should not like to shock you. But I repeat that the troop which carried me off on that week's march included women; and women are like Blazac's tigress, creatures whom it is not impossible to tame, to charm, to break in, until you make friends of them."

"Yes, yes," muttered the Premier, madly puzzled, "but that needs time."

"I had a week"

"And complete liberty of action."

"No, no, Monsieur le President The eyes are enough to start with The eyes give rise to sympathy, interest, affection, curiosity, a wish to know you better. And that merest opportunity ——"

"And did an opportunity offer?"

"Yes, one night I was fastened up or at least they thought I was I knew that the chief favorite was alone in her tent close by I went there I left her an hour afterward"

"And the tigress was tamed?"

"Yes, as thoroughly as Balzac's; tamed and blindly submissive"

"But there were several of them!"

"I know, Monsieur le President, and that was the difficulty. I was afraid of rivalry. But all went well; the favorite was not jealous, far from it. And then, as I have told you, her submission was absolute In short, I had five staunch, invisible friends, resolved to do anything I wanted and suspected by anybody.

SAFE FARMING

Save Plenty of Seed Corn

Experience of 1917 Should be a Lesson to All

By F. G. HOLDEN

HARVEST your seed corn before it freezes.

Hang it in the attic or upstairs room where there is a free culation of air.

Profit by the lesson of 1917 and save enough seed corn each to protect yourself if the next season's crop fails to mature.

Don't get caught again without seed corn.

Always save enough seed to last two years.

Remember, the next corn crop may be a total or partial failure and may not be able to save any good seed from it.

It always pays to have good seed corn to sell to your neighbors.

Corn Ready to Hang up. String Contains From Twelve to Fifteen Ears Each.

If your surplus is not needed seed it is not wasted It always has market value or may be fed to If it is needed as seed it will be many times its market value as

To save plenty of good seed is always good business. It is part It is our duty to ourselves, our munity and our country

Crop reports indicate that, ditions between now and harvest are favorable, this year's corn crop be about normal.

But, because of the serious corn situation last Spring, the danger that some of the corn have been grown from imported and either will not mature before or will produce a yield inferior in quantity and quality.

Because of killing frosts in tober, the seed corn situation Spring was so serious as to cause tion-wide alarm. The U. S. Department of Agriculture, state officials ricultural colleges, county a newspapers, bankers, business and farmers were aroused Camps were conducted to test seed corn locate every good ear of home seed.

The result has been gratifying the expense must have reached the millions of dollars. In some ties it was necessary to import because the 1917 crop did not and not sufficient seed corn of the crop has been saved

This experience should pro lesson to us. Never again should we be caught without plenty of seed In every normal year we should save plenty of seed. We should always save enough for our own use for two years and enough in addition to some neighbor who may not have any. We should always bear in mind the next corn crop may be a total or partial failure.

Every ear of seed corn should be harvested before the severe fall and stored where it will dry out and keep dry. The best method is to up with binding twine as shown in the cut. Hang the strings in the rows about four inches apart.

The Russian Iscariots.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The American secret service has scored another success which will tell tremendously on the progress of the war and must leave its mark on the course of history It has penetrated the mysterious, sometimes malodorous and always baffling fog which has shrouded the ever shifting Russian situation since the days of Lvoff and Milikoff, and has at last laid firm fingers on the strings which have moved the preposterous and incredible puppets in this tragic farce. It is an achievement in international detective work which has seldom been equaled for skill and dramatic effect; and has never been equaled for its far reaching consequences, its long armed blows at high placed criminals and the story of unparalleled audacity and shameless, heartless, pitiless treachery which it uncovers.

The very audacity of the Berlin-Lenine-Trotzky plot was what paralyzed for so long general credence in the proofs of exposure that were offered. We all knew that Germany would bribe, that human beings were frail, that wolves would wear sheep's clothing and that the devil would quote for his profit the scriptures of an idealistic creed But it staggered the imagination of thinking men everywhere that even the German high command would dream for a moment that they could "put over" so impossible a conspiracy. But they did it. They fooled all the people part of the time. They found tools of unbelievable baseness, treachery and inhuman cruelty in Lenine, Trotzky, and their slimy crew And now the American secret service has caught the lot of them, branded proofs of their perfidy on the not too thin skins of the bolshevist leaders, and saved humanity just in the of time from trusting itself to the sands of bolshevist "honor"

The documents given out by the mittee on public information leave atom of room for doubt Lenine Trotzky sold the blind, helpless and ling Russian people for so much cash hand. They betrayed more than a —they betrayed a great cause deathless ideal. They not only invite trust of a people and then brutally trayed it, but they invited the easily trust of a childlike and confiding they took its innocent hands with a lie to lead it into the fair land of liberty and then they sold it back into a degrading bondage than it had known bitterly and hopelessly before.

It was the most odious treason Judas Iscariot

We in this country have long execrated the name of Benedict Arnold But Benedict Arnold tried to sell an intelligent wide awake people—a people fairly to take care of itself—a people which known liberty for years and was not likely to lose it for long Lenine Trotzky found an abject and long pressed people—a people who hardly what liberty might be—a people championless had been systematically tortured, shot or exiled—a people who at last their one totally unexpected irrecoverable chance for freedom. these two conscienceless and cowardly scoundrels deliberately led this people into a trap which would mean turies of worse than Siberian oppression for 180,000,000 living hoping, suffering human beings who might have been

ITALIAN TREASURY GETTING MORE MONEY

Rome (by mail)—The Stefani Agency has issued a statement of the minister of finance with the figures of the total revenues during the fiscal year closed on June 30, 1918.

The statement shows that from July 1, 1917 to June 30, 1918, the Italian treasury received 4,361,910,000 liras, against 3,476,552,000 during the year 1916, or 1,800,000,000 more than in 1916, and 885,000,000 more than in 1917. The budget estimates made last year are surpassed by 340,000,000.

Comparing the figures with 1914-1915, which was the year of neutrality, the last income shows an increase of 2,-800,000,000

The special tax on the business gave to the state 562,500,000 liras, or 117,500,000 more than last year.

All the income from recorder fees, from mortgages and from government concessions shows a big increase, while the income from automobile, autoboat, and motorcycle fees was less than the last fiscal year.

All the special taxes on moving pictures, jewels, perfumes and restaurants failed to give a big income, owing to the fact that those taxes are only ordered. However, here are the amounts:

The moving pictures paid 7,500,000 liras; jewelry, 4,207,000 liras; perfumes, 17,098,000 liras, and the restaurants, 2,269,000 liras.

The consumers' taxes raised 955,000,000, or 314,000,000 more than last year.

The state monopoly paid an income of 1,076,000,000 liras, or 830,000,000 more than last year. Salt paid 64,000,000; matches, 20,000,000, and the state lottery 56,000,000.

General taxes raised 1,864,000,000, or 437,000,000 more than last year. Income taxes paid 452,000,000 and exemption from military service gave 8,-000,000

The public service shows an income of 282,000,000.

The general income should be increased by 27,000,000 received from the sale of sugar This amount is not included in the general income.

AMERICANS LEARN TO BECOME FLYERS

Great Field In France Is Busy Place--Get Last Training There

American Aviation Camp [illegible] in France. (by mail) The [illegible] flying camp is the largest [illegible] and is said to be great[illegible] other in the world.

A flying field of [illegible] area of an Amer[illegible] nine separate flying [illegible] American aviators [illegible] the stage of flight com[illegible] planes—Liberties, [illegible] and all the others with [illegible] structors and new [illegible] swelling our squadron each month. these were some of the most features of this vast aviation ground.

As the Associated Press correspondent entered one of the fields [illegible] gray machine rose from [illegible] with a loud droning [illegible]

"There goes a [illegible]," said one of the officers, [illegible] of the fast increasing [illegible] now coming, and every flight with keenest interest and enthusiasm by those [illegible] the supreme test on [illegible] Only one opinion was [illegible] these men that it was [illegible] fastest machine of the [illegible] doing wonders [illegible] besides straight away [illegible] been pronounced [illegible] range.

Groups of aviators were [illegible] we arrived, preparatory to [illegible] air. They were the stocky young men, like two football elevens [illegible] to take the field. The flying grounds stretched off for miles, one field of four square miles, each [illegible] stubble fields on which the machines could light without [illegible] them circled countless planes, diving and in squadrons drawn [illegible] geese, looping and diving [illegible] the evolutions of flight [illegible] of acrobatic planes [illegible] making headlong spirals [illegible] and reversements.

In the foreground rose [illegible] of barracks, one story [illegible] long, not very high, [illegible] very practical. Fully a thousand of these barracks had been [illegible] plain to house the [illegible] on the way to the fighting line.

Three Branches

We went from field to field [illegible] each stage in the development of [illegible] bat aviators. General [illegible] was explained there are [illegible] branches of this aviation for [illegible] Chase and combat [illegible] of the fighting [illegible] enemy forces, camps and [illegible] scouting or reconnaissance [illegible] purposes of observation [illegible] tivities. It is for [illegible] bardment that the training [illegible] and of those going [illegible] about four fifths are [illegible] one-fifth bombardment [illegible]

"These are the grasshoppers," said the captain as we came to Field No. [illegible] where the initial ground work and theory of flight begins. The grasshoppers were diminutive machines with just enough horse power to limp over the ground, and, occasionally, rise 10 feet. The men call them taxis and rollers. They were [illegible] singly and in squads. Two were having a race across the plain, and one taking a dive buried its nose in the ground. This was the circus part of flying, at the start but there was plenty of very practical work beside with motor instruction, gunnery, trap shooting, rifle range and machine gun firing. Small dummy enemy airplanes dotted the field as targets and the bounding grasshoppers took their shots and were rated by the watching instructors.

On the second field the aviators had left their grasshoppers and were in a double-control machine accompanied by an instructor. They were getting the "feel" of the machine in actual flight and if the rudder was not manipulated deftly the instructor was there to make the correction. And it was necessary here to learn how to come down as well as to go up, and to come down at a definite point. Small numbered flags marked the landing point of each machine, and the descent must be made close up to the flag.

The captain of field No. [illegible] was also to step into the Flying Dragon, one of the most curious machines of the fleet, for besides being a very fleet machine, it was famous for its dragon body with flaming sides and tentacles and great red eyes. Here on this field the aviators entered single control machines without instruction and for the first time took their risks.

On Field 4 [illegible] began to develop whether the men had qualify as a combat airman or [illegible] or scout observation. He was now in a fast machine with a wing surface of 18 meters and was beginning to make dips and high [illegible] being accustomed to all types of machines. There was a fleet of one of these strange types drawn across the plain. Their chief novelty was in having ball bearings on all of their mechanism giving a hair-trigger response to the slightest touch.

"If you sneeze you loop the loop," was the way the officer explained the delicacy of this mechanism.

Progress Rapid.

Progress is rapid now that it is evident what a flyer can do. He enters a very fast machine at No. 5 with 150 meter wings capable of making 120 miles an hour. Some of the men drop out of the training at this point as it has become evident that they lack the deftness or get faint at the height or the heat of the motor. The rest go on to Field No. 6 where they begin pursuit work and some of the early stages of acrobatic nose dives and slips.

"There is nothing freakish about these acrobatics," said the officer, "for they are one of the most essential parts of combat aviation. To be a chase and pursuit pilot one must be able to outmaneuver the enemy aviator to make quick turns under fire and get above your adversary or on his tail. One or the other will be out-maneuvered, and the fastest man wins the game. The enemy is very skillful at acrobatics, and he must be beaten at his own game."

Lieutenant Quentin Roosevelt was in command of Field 7 while he was here and the car of the late officer stood in the hangar with a group of flyers about it paying tribute to the splendid qualities and daring of their late leader. His good humor was recalled by the name he had given his car, "Doc Yak," and the doctor with his flowing whiskers was painted in flowing colors on the side of the car.

This is the field on which formation flying is begun, in squadrons up to 18 machines but usually with five. The squadron fly in V-shape, with the commander at the apex of the V carrying a streamer which signals the commands. A fleet of 15 machines was starting as we passed and another had just come after two hours in the air, ending with a figure eight a difficult evolution [illegible] "controls" go [illegible]

DON'T BE AN EXTREMIST.

From the Pittsburgh Leader

It was remarked by Macaulay that when feeling runs high and parties align on any question, moral, religious, political or economic, the best men on both sides are to be found nearest to the dividing frontier. The extremists of all the factions always injure and often bring discredit on the cause which they espouse. Few things are better established than this; and recurring evidence thereof is found in the history of every nation. It is a principle of nature; and as the temperate zone separates climes which burn or freeze, so wisdom holds the debatable middle ground between the bitter and violent extreme, and virtue is only a just temper between propensities which are vices when indulged in to excess. Even Deific perfection as Halifax argued in defending the tolerant via media he he always sought to follow, is only the equilibrium of attributes no one of which could preponderate without disturbing the moral and physical order of the world.

CHAPLAIN OBSERVES WOUNDED CLOSELY

Finds Boys Who Have Gone Down Into the Shadow Extremely Practical.

Paris (by mail)—No [illegible] power could [illegible] accommodations fast enough for the great influx of wounded [illegible] the great drive in [illegible] Red Cross [illegible] Corps [illegible] Neuilly. Most of the boys had [illegible] while the more serious cases were being cared for first. Some of them had not eaten in [illegible] hours or more. Some were [illegible] were in pain. Yet there was [illegible] word of complaint. The more [illegible] the more cheerful they seemed. One boy who had lost the sight [illegible] told me that he considered himself lucky; it might have been worse, he said.

They get the finest care possible from both surgeons and nurses. It is [illegible] while the camions are unloading [illegible] so fast that all cannot be [illegible] at once.

[illegible] of the men is a revelation. Naturally every one expected great things of them. But they have far [illegible] all expectations.

When [illegible] one round a day in the [illegible] here at No. 1, I write letters [illegible] run errands and attend to business matters for them, besides being often taken into their confidence in regard to their personal troubles. They [illegible] of their own accord to the man who they know is there just for that [illegible] to be their friend.

[illegible] usually thinks of a chaplain at the bedside of the dying. It is there that we have our supreme call of duty. Sometimes they ask me to [illegible] with them; sometimes they would rather that I prayed silently beside them. Often they thank me just for [illegible] with them until the end. They know that I will write home to their [illegible] and it comforts them and helps them [illegible]. And then [illegible] Frost spoke like one who has had a [illegible] vision.

[illegible] is experiencing religion a [illegible] again in the trenches. The deep religious feeling of these boys who have stood face to face with their God [illegible] is beyond description. One of [illegible] whom I attended in his last [illegible] said to me 'Whatever we are [illegible] one common bond—religion.' [illegible] was a Jew. And his words [illegible]

ITALIAN DEPUTY WAS IMPRISONED IN RUSSIA

Rome (by mail)—Deputy Carlo Di [illegible] Dentice has arrived in Rome after several months in Russia. He [illegible] interviewer for the Epoca his impressions of that great country in [illegible] of revolution and calls for intervention on the part of the allies, as he believes it would threaten the [illegible] seriously and also to [illegible] the [illegible] Japan to good advantage.

"When the Germans entered Riga," he said, "the Red Guards sacked the [illegible]. The invaders organized [illegible] hundred of guards, put a white band [illegible] their sleeves and ordered them to patrol the city and preserve order. Under the pressure of German discipline those brigands became simple gendarmes. Who can say that in the more or less distinct future the Germans will not be able to organize a Russian army and move it against us?"

He also said:

"I had a brief talk with Trotzky, the demon of the revolution, a man with impenetrable mien, who never looks one in the eye. When I asked him to what the revolution was leading he evaded the question and said:

"'Once they used to strike us naked with rods, now we perforate their hides with machine guns.'"

Speaking of his personal adventures, Di Frasso said:

"I was called to the foreign office on February 28 last by a certain Mr. Lusky to explain some particulars about my passport. I was accompanied by our consul, Pirone, and by Colonel Bassigano, of the former military mission.

"As soon as we had entered, Lusky rose and locked the door behind us with a key. With that he touched a bell. Four Red Guards entered and he pointed to me, saying: 'Arrest that man.' I protested vigorously, but as soon as I moved I was seized and taken to prison. I remained there 22 days, shut in a room which contained about 150 other persons. The Red Guards who were our keepers regretted that we were not all shot without delay.

"I happened to have a strange meeting when in prison. In the throng of prisoners one day I thought I recognized a face I knew. I approached and [illegible]. Lusky, the official who had [illegible] me. 'These are the plays of [illegible]olution,' he said philosophically. 'I never be able to guess exactly [illegible]ause for my arrest.'

[illegible]y last day in prison I was interviewed by Lusky on behalf of the [illegible] revolutionists. He told me I [illegible]n suspected of giving money [illegible]gis Kaledin and Alexieff. [illegible]wered that in any case I would [illegible]ven the money to whoever, [illegible] to be doing things most serious, told who I was, a deputy and [illegible] in the army of Italy, already allied with Russia. He answered:

"'Certainly. We cannot be anything but friends.' After a few other questions I was set free."

Much Mail Handled.

From the Great Lakes Bulletin

Reports on the amount of mail handled at the Great Lakes naval station each week, issued Monday morning for the week previous, have shown for the last two months a steadily increasing number of letters received and dispatched each week.

This is mainly due to the rapid growth of the station, although Great Lakes sailors receive even more than their due share of the mail in comparison with other cities of 50,000, Chief Mail Clerk F. C. Burr said the other day.

The report issued for the week ending August 18 shows that 1,340,000 letters and postcards were mailed and received by sailors. This is a substantial increase over the week previous, which held the best previous record. In addition to this amount 3,236 registered letters and 7,080 special delivery letters and parcels were received.

Owing to the rapid increase in the station mails, the personnel of the department has been added to recently, and at the present time, 102 men are attached to the main station and outlying branches.

Mail, except on the main station, is delivered to mail orderlies appointed for each company. This applies also to the various schools on the main station. This system, instead of the general delivery window system, is necessary on the station through the enormous amount of mail handled.

Heartburn, Belching, Indigestion, Food Repeating and Nearly All Kinds of Bodily Miseries

The first sign of stomach misery usually comes after over-eating. The doctors call it "superacidity". The people say—"sour stomach".

Millions of people who have lost their ambition, energy, courage, vitality and strength—who are weak, pale and listless—who go through life just dragging one foot after another—tired and worn out nearly all the time—nervous, irritable, subject to severe headache, insomnia, and a long train of physical ills—would be surprised, yes, dumbfounded, to learn that it is just an acid-stomach that is causing them all their misery. Yet in nearly nine cases out of ten that is just where the trouble starts.

Now a sour, acid-stomach, or "superacidity", of course, simply means too much acid in the stomach. You can now quickly rid your stomach of its excess acid. A wonderful modern remedy called EATONIC literally wipes it out. It does the work easily, quickly and thoroughly. It makes the stomach pure, sweet, cool and comfortable. It helps you to get full strength out of every mouthful of food you eat and unless you do get full strength from your food you cannot enjoy robust, vigorous health.

EATONIC is in tablet form. They are pleasant tasting—just like a bit of candy—and are absolutely harmless. Take EATONIC and find out for yourself how wonderfully different you will feel. See how quickly EATONIC banishes the humiliating effects of acid-stomach—gas, heartburn, belching, food repeating, bad digestion, etc. See, too, how quickly your general health improves—how much more easily your food is digested—how soundly you sleep—how nervousness and irritability disappear. And all simply because, by taking EATONIC, you have rid your stomach of a lot of excess acid that has been holding back and making your life miserable.

So get a big box of EATONIC from your druggist today. He is authorized to guarantee EATONIC to please you and you can trust him to make this guarantee good. If EATONIC fails in any way, take it back—he will refund your money. If your druggist does not keep EATONIC write to us direct and we will send you a big 50c box and you can send us the 50c after you receive it. Address: H. L. A "TWIN" always has TWO complete pedestals. Each pedestal has strength, because it's a complete oval or oblong barrel.

Each pedestal stands on three casters which makes the table as rigid as the 5-leg table.

Woman's Committee of the United States Food Administration for Iowa Is Enlarged

The foundation for the work of the United States food administration in Iowa was laid by the Woman's committee, of which Mrs. F. E. Whitley of Webster City is the chairman. F. Deems and Executive Secretary R. E. Logsdon, to save sugar, wheat, fats and meat. Members and officers of the women's committee are:

The Term "Quack."
Doctor originally meant mad doctor.

The supply of clothing for our soldiers in France is enormous and on a prodigious scale for so long. Ice is hard on clothes and shoes besides the 1,000,000 overcoats on hand there is the continual month for the American forces France is 300,000 suits, 600,000 pairs of trousers, 260,000 pairs of shoes, 340,000 pairs of puttees, 1,000,000 of socks and 340,000 pairs of shoes or about 3,000,000 monthly of these six articles and long list of lesser articles.

"More is coming to the front one of the officers of the quartermaster's department. "Every was sent we would be overstocked look after all requirements three months."

"A considerable part of the supply must be kept in the hospitals where the cases come and cannot wait. The wounded in with clothing blood soaked muddy and must often has to be newed. So that at a 10,000-bed there are 10,000 complete outfits sides a reserve of 10,000 more.

Sizes and weights also increase the requirements. There some 70 sizes of army shoes. One soldier called for a 13½ A was so beyond anything in the lions of shoes on hand that he to be sent to an orthopedic hospital. It is estimated that about four pairs shoes per man are required for which for an army of 1,000,000 means 4,000,000 pairs of shoes.

In underclothes wool and light and heavy are carried but soldiers seem to prefer wool even summer time.

Looking ahead to the winter calculated that 55,000 stoves will be needed to keep the troops through the four or five months of weather and some 20,000 wood cutters will be required to produce the wood for heating. There are already 15,000 foresters at work, but as their product is being used largely for building more will be put on for the wood cutting and the total of enlisted foresters may reach 45,000.

Wood is the chief dependence for warming, as the 175,000 tons of coal brought in from England every month is used chiefly by the railroads in constructive works. French forests, improving the main source of supply for Spain and Switzerland are also furnishing large supplies of lumber.

Every day a table is made up to show the exact state of the supplies required by this big army. The table is a sort of barometer which gives warning of any shortage. If there is no shortage and on the contrary all the articles considerably over run the provision for three months, stocks always ahead. Flour, for instance, is on hand much beyond the three months' limit and so are beans and tobacco.

It is known each day how much the advance zone has as its required minimum of 15 days of reserve stocks, the intermediate zone 30 days and the base more than 45 days—30 all told.

Not Necessary Hereafter for Them to Buy Substitutes With Flour.

Many farmers grow their own substitutes, and it is not desired by Federal Food Administrator Deems to force them to buy other substitutes, provided that proper compliance with the Food Administration program can be obtained without this requirement. Farmers may hereafter obtain wheat flour in Iowa upon certification in the following form:

PLEDGE TO BE SIGNED BY FARMERS GROWING THEIR OWN SUBSTITUTES.

I hereby certify that I have ground or have had ground at the mill for use in my own family and have in my possession ——— pounds of ———, pounds of ——— which have not been balanced against any purchases of wheat flour. I pledge myself in using such flour to conform to the program of the United States Food Administration with regard to substitutes, and to use in the baking of all bread at least one pound of substitutes to every four pounds of wheat flour, or if rye is used, two pounds of rye to every three pounds of wheat flour.

We Must Send Fifty Per Cent More Food to Our Soldiers And Our Allies During this Year

Herbert Hoover has written Food Administrator J. Deems that we must send our soldiers and allies 15,000,000 tons of food this year as against 10,000,000 last year. He says:

"The demand upon us is for larger supplies. The conferences on food supply and shipping we have held in Europe enable us to estimate our burden. Compared with previous years the allied civilians and armies, our own armies, the Belgian relief and certain neutrals who are dependent on us require the following round amounts from us:

	Average prewar 3-year shipments, tons	Shipped, year ending July 1, 1918, tons	Must ship year ending July 1, 1919, tons	Increase this year over last year, tons
Meats and fats (beef, pork, dairy, poultry and vegetable oil products)	645,000	1,550,000	2,600,000	1,050,000
Bread stuffs (wheat and substitutes in terms of grain)	3,320,000	6,800,000	10,400,000	3,600,000
Sugar (from United States and West Indies)	618,000	1,320,000	1,650,000	330,000
Feed grains (mostly army oats)	950,000	1,950,000	2,700,000	750,000

SET YOUR CLOCKS BACK ONE HOUR OCTOBER 27

Uncle Sam says he wants you to set your clocks back one hour the 27th of this month which is next Sunday. This order goes into effect all over the United States and so get busy. Now it is not good for the clock to turn it back so better stop it just one hour, that's the jeweler's advice, but anyway don't forget to set them back or you will be all out of kilter with the rest of this neck of the woods. Oh yes, you gain one hour sleep!

MARRIED!

Tuesday afternoon, October 22nd at two o'clock occurred the marriage of Mr. Henry Ludeke of this city to Miss Agnes Greene, of Boscobel, Michigan.

The happy event occurred at the home of the bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Ludeke, officiated by Rev. A. H. Meyer. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were witnesses of the ceremony.

Mr. Ludeke needs little introduction as he was born and raised in this vicinity and grew to manhood here. He is a prosperous young farmer living west of town a short distance. He is an ideal young man of high ambition and one who will make a bright mark in the world.

We are not intimately acquainted with the young lady he has chosen as his life-mate, but we hear she is a lady of refinement and education and possesses the best qualities which go to make a good home maker. She is highly praised by her many friends.

The young couple will go to housekeeping on Mr. Ludeke's farm. We wish to join their many friends in wishing them a happy and prosperous wedded life.

THE FARM AND THE WAR

By L. H. Bailey (On Former President Roosevelt's Rural Life Commission.)

The response of the farming people to the Third Liberty Loan was gratifying. It was what we expected, as soon as the question was put before the farmers directly. I hope that the Fourth Liberty Loan will be taken still more freely by the rural people.

No great war can be won in these days without the active co-operation of all the people. We contribute by giving ourselves, our business, upholding the hands of the government, and loaning the government our money. This money has been accumulated because we have prospered, and because our government has protected us. The investment is the best, and the spirit that takes Liberty Bonds is the same spirit that makes good crops. The farmers' crops have saved us.

We cannot think of losing this war. We cannot run the risk of an agriculture controlled by a headstrong, unmoral state, such as would be imposed on us if Prussia were to succeed. Agriculture lies at the foundation of our system of democracy; its opinion must count in our public policies; this means that farmers must take such an active part in the maintenance of the war that they will have a right to be heard. They have taken this part thus far, and I know that they will be steadfast to the end.

CLOTHING PROBLEM BIG ONE FOR TROOPS

Great Quantities Constantly on Hand to Supply the Urgency Calls

Tours ( ) The supply of soldiers in France on a prodigious scale is hard on clothing and shoes besides the 1,000,000 on hand there is the constant and upkeep. This month for the American France is 300,000 serviceable pairs of trousers, 260,000 pairs, 340,000 pairs of puttees, 1,200,000 of socks and 340,000 pairs of shoes or about 3,000,000 monthly of these supplies. long list of lesser articles.

More is coming all the time one of the officers of the quartermaster's department. "If a ship was sent we would have a good look after all requirements for three months."

"A considerable part of the serve stock must be kept at the hospitals where the calls are sudden and cannot wait. The wounded come in with clothing blood soaked and muddy and must have to be renewed. So that at a 10,000-bed hospital there are 10,000 complete outfits, sides a reserve of 10,000 more.

Sizes and weights vary greatly crease the requirements. There some 70 sizes of army shoes. One soldier called for a 17½ was so beyond any thing in lions of shoes on hand that had to be sent to an orthopedic hospital. It is estimated that about four pairs of shoes per man are required for a year which for an army of 1,000,000 men means 4,000,000 pairs of shoes.

In underclothes, wool and light and heavy are carried. soldiers seem to prefer wool even for summer time.

Looking ahead to the winter it is calculated that 55,000 stoves will be needed to keep the troops warm through the four or five months of cold weather and some 2,000,000 wood fires will be required to produce the wood for heating. There are already 15,000 foresters at work but as their product is being used largely for buildings more will be put on for the wood cutting and the total of enlisted forces may reach 45,000.

Wood is the chief dependence for warming, as the 175,000 tons of coal brought in from England every month is used chiefly by the railroads and constructive works. Even forests improving the main source of supply in Spain and Switzerland, are furnishing large supplies of fuel.

Every day a table is made up to show the exact status of the supplies required by this program. This table is a sort of barometer which gives warning of any shortage. But there is no shortage and on the contrary all the articles considerably overrun the provision for three months stocks always ahead. Flour for instance, is on hand much beyond the three months limit and so are beans and tobacco.

It is known each day how whether the advance zone has its required minimum of 15 days of reserves in the intermediate zone 30 days and the base ports 45 days in all three months of reserve supplies are kept on hand and constantly moving forward as they come from America to the various fighting fronts.

RUSS GRAND DUKES ARE NOW IN EXIL

Much of Their Personal Property Has Since Been Stolen By Bolshevists

BY JOSEPH SHAPLEN

New York All the Romanoffs have been exiled from Petrograd to Vologda, 400 miles northeast of Moscow.

Grand Duke Alexander, Grand Duke Sergei Michailovitch, Nicolai Michailovitch, as well as the Grand Duchess Xenia, sister of the late Czar, and wife of Prince Paul Alexandrovitch, Prince Paul Alexandrovitch Palace on leaving Petrograd took with them only necessaries and books. They took very little baggage with them due to impossibility of transporting anything cumbersome in Russia. All articles of luxury, art, paintings, religious objects and precious stones belonging to the grand dukes were left in Petrograd.

The Grand Duke Nicolai Michailovitch, who is a noted writer and historian, in fact the only man of historical talent produced by the Romanoff dynasty in recent years, left all his writings, memoirs and very rich historical library in the care of a certain prominent Russian writer and politician, who played a big part in the revolution and prominent member of the Russian Historical society, which, after the revolution, unanimously chose the Grand Duke Nicolai Michailovitch its president.

This grand duke is noted throughout Europe not only as an historian but as an antiquarian and collector.

The palace of Nicolai Michailovitch is a wonderful museum of ancient history the contents of which he collected from all parts of the world. The Grand Duke refused to go to Perm where he has many powerful friends, and preferred to go to Vologda because he preferred to go to Vologda because he explained, there was a collection of ar-

ENGLISH CHILDREN THANK AMERICANS

Send Thousands of Letters Expressing Gratitude For Saving of Foods

New York Jenny Lees of Stanley [illegible] Lancashire, England, is to make a visit to the United States with Alice Brown of Scotland, England, here is a letter from her thanking [illegible] for saving food so that she and [illegible] need not go hungry. [illegible] want to write to her.

This in effect through the use of those words is the plan adopted by United States Food Administrator Herbert C. Hoover to convey the thanks of English school children to the children of America for helping him to conserve food for the benefit of English girls and boys.

Mr. Hoover has brought back from London many thousands of letters from the British boys and girls and has plan [illegible] letter to every [illegible].

The [illegible] were received by Mr. Hoover during his recent visit to London. Two motor cars were required to carry them. Some of them were written by individuals while others were signed by the children of a whole school so that the total represented the thanks of thousands of British children.

The editor of the Teachers World presented to Mr. Hoover a deputation of English school children and told the American food administrator that the letters were heartfelt expressions of gratitude to the American nation which had denied itself to provide England with food.

"I will very proudly distribute these letters among our American schools," replied Mr. Hoover. "I am sure that they will form one of the most effective links possible between the people of the two nations. Each one of them will be prized, and I will see to it that not one of the thousands of schools scattered throughout our country is left without at least one of them. They form a heap of real treasure and should have a very far reaching result.

"I feel that too much is made of my own part in the American effort. I only addressed all these letters [illegible] to really the thanks [illegible] go to the American people. There is, however, something very beautiful and symbolic in the thought underlying them [illegible]

New California Organization to Unite Farmers and Workers

San Francisco, Cal. "One of the most significant movements now going on in the labor world," said Paul Scharrenberg, secretary of the California State Federation of Labor, in an interview with a representative of the Christian Science Monitor, "is the attempt to bring together the farmers, or producers of food products, and the workers who produce the various finished products of commerce. We have sought to bring these two large groups into touch with each other in order that they may cooperate for the benefit of all concerned, by the formation of the California Union of Producers and Consumers, this organization representing the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union and the Pacific Cooperative League and the California State Federation of Labor."

One of the purposes of this new organization as explained by Mr. Scharrenberg is to break down the idea that the interests of the workers on the land and the workers in the factory are in conflict in any way. It is proposed to bring joint action to bear on pressing legislative changes to further public ownership of all public utilities, including transportation and communication; to free the land and society from privilege and monopoly and to provide a practical plan of cooperation for the equitable distribution of food and other necessities of life.

One of the plans of the California Union of Producers and Consumers is the development of irrigation systems under the auspices of the state, an idea that has not heretofore been widely advocated, at least in an organized way. "We favor the federation of all irrigation systems," said Mr. Scharrenberg, "under the auspices of the state, in order to promote their development and, where necessary, to arrange facilities for joint operation and to permit the manufacture and sale of electric power."

"In view of the new and serious industrial and social problems created by the war which will have to be faced with the coming of peace, we favor the appointment by the state of a representative reconstruction committee to devise plans for the orderly readjustments of our state in the difficult period of demobilization."

The Union of Producers and Consumers containing as it does as an intermediary link the Pacific Cooperative League of California is taking a stand also on the matter of public recognition of the practice of cooperation as a means of bringing the producer and consumer closer together and thus consolidating the interests of society generally. The state is urged to take up the question of the cooperative movement in connection with its activities in relation to the high cost of living with a view to utilizing the existing cooperative organizations for immediate purposes and encouraging the creation of additional cooperative organizations where they are needed and conditions are ripe.

Why Doughboys?

From the Washington Times

The term "doughboy" as a nickname for the American infantryman is a very old one, dating back to the Mexican war of 1846.

In that year the United States regular soldiers first made acquaintance with the houses of mud colored, sun-dried bricks that are seen everywhere, even today, in New Mexico, Arizona and the southern part of California.

These bricks are called by the Mexicans adobes (pronounced "dobies"), a term also applied to the small, squat, flat roofed houses built with them.

When the American invaders entered what was then Mexican territory the infantrymen found these dwellings—mostly deserted by their panic stricken inhabitants—handy as billets, and promptly occupied them as such. But the calvarymen, who had to be near their picketed horses out on the open prairie, were unable to avail themselves of similar accommodation.

Partly in envy and partly in good natured chaff, these christened their more fortunate comrades "dobie dodgers," afterward shortened to dobies," a good round sounding nickname, that was bound to stick and which, in course of time became corrupted into "doughboys."

The Gold Star.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

If the kaiser and his crew would like to know exactly how many permanent, impervious, impregnable obstacles there exist to them ever getting a compromise peace with this country, they should count the American graves in France. There are, of course, plenty of other "obstacles." We are shipping 250,000 of them over there every month now. And there are lots more where they come from. But human nature is fallible and the human mind will forget and the resources of plausible German propaganda are enormous. Live Americans might, in a word, be fooled or cajoled or pathetically touched into letting military Germany escape the steel meshed net in which she is now struggling so frantically. But never dead Americans or their mourning women folk at home. Even a German casuist cannot pour propagandist poison into the deaf ears of the dead.

The kaiser and his crew should read and mark and inwardly digest a little story that Robert T. Small, our Washington correspondent, sent us the other day as having been told him by a congressman newly returned from his constituents. The story was of an American mother who had lost an 18-year-old son in France. She was not wearing crape but a black band with a small gold star. Her heart was so full of a splendid pride that it had no room for futile grief. This was not remarkable or unique. American mothers all over the country have felt this way right along.

But what was mightily worthy of remark and would abundantly repay study by the miscreants who have infected mid Europe with madness, was what this American mother said about her boy not "dying in vain."

> I should hate to feel that my boy gave his life in vain, she told the congressman. "There will be thousands of other mothers like me, and we will not agree that the United States shall ever make a patched up peace with Germany which would permit of a repetition of this world sacrifice. If I thought any of the high authorities in Washington would dare consider a compromise peace with Germany I personally would lead an army of women to the national capital to mob them out of office."

There is the doom of kaiserism pronounced by the most imperishable thing on this planet—a mother's love.

SHIP BUILDERS ARE DOING RECORD WORK

Towns and Villages on Delaware River Near Philadelphia Great Hives of Industry.

Philadelphia Shipbuilding under the spur of the German submarine menace has made Philadelphia for the second time in American history, a "cradle of liberty." Fostered by the natural advantages of the Delaware river, together with proximity to the nation's steel production centers, the country's largest group of shipyards, including the world record making Hog Island plant, has grown up in the home district of the Pennsylvania metropolis.

In this district are employed more than 100,000 shipworkers, one-fourth the enrollment in the industry throughout the United States, whose outturn to date is 50 vessels, 27 of them ready for service. Vessels of all types, from 3,500 ton wooden steamers to huge steel freighters of 12,000 tons are produced. The influx of workers has overrun a score of communities, enforcing the building of seven new towns, yet the cry is for more men and more men. Given a sufficiency of materials and the workers to handle them, the "Philadelphia phenomenon" in ship construction promises to become another world's center.

In this region the Emergency Fleet corporation, through the companies carrying on its work has undertaken an extensive housing project. At Bristol, Chester, Cornwells, and Hog Island, in Pennsylvania, at Camden and Gloucester, on the New Jersey side and at Wilmington, in Delaware, homes, bachelor apartments, barracks, boarding houses and even a hotel have been erected, with the hope of solving the problem of inadequate labor growing out of poor accommodations.

How the yards on the Delaware river have expanded in the past 11 months and what this influx of labor means to the communities along the river, is indicated by comparison with the census of last October, when the aggregate of men engaged was less than 25,000. Excluding Cramps and the New York Shipbuilding corporation, which were then working as completed yards the nine other plants on the Delaware then reported 12,000 workers.

Recruited From Outside.

More than half the present force of shipbuilders has been recruited from outside the district, so that the population growth from this source alone has been doubled that of any normal year. At Bristol, 25 miles above Philadelphia, and beyond the confines of the previously accepted shipbuilding zone, workers at the Merchant plant now exceed the entire population of the borough in 1910. Chester, where John B. Roach built American warships 50 years ago, has trebled in a year its population gain between 1900 and 1910.

Except the great Hog Island plant, that of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation at Camden, employing 11,500 men, is the largest in the Philadelphia district. When work under way is completed there will be 29 shipways, most of them able to accommodate at one time two ships of ordinary size. The yard set a new world's record when it launched the collier Tuckahoe in 27 days from the time the keel was laid. Ten days later the vessel was completed, a feat which has not been equaled for a ship of this type. Transportation has been a problem, with the majority of workers forced to travel long distances to and from the plant. To overcome this difficulty the company is erecting the town of Yorkship a mile from the [illegible] line.

The community which will be without saloons, will be made a part of Camden.

Neighboring Gloucester is another shipbuilding center. When the glory of the old race track days faded under the ban of New Jersey legislative enactment, the town went to sleep. It has been awakened. The Pusey & Jones Company operates two yards. The "Pennsylvania" plant, two years old, has launched seven ships of assorted types within a year, and the newly completed "New Jersey" shops have four vessels on the ways. Launchings here are made sidewise into a basin, a process said to be much simpler than the sternforemost slide which has been practiced through centuries of shipbuilding. The company is erecting 550 homes for its workers near the two yards.

Recently both the Gloucester and Wilmington yards of the Pusey & Jones Company have been combined under the Emergency Fleet management and a standard type of 12,000 ton steel vessels will be built.

Made Great Record.

Creation in less than a year of a great fabricated steel shipyard with one set finished and three others about ready to take the water, is the feat accomplished by the Merchant Shipbuilding Corporation whose 2-way plant is situated on the west bank of the Delaware at Bristol. The company and its 13,000 employes have pledged themselves to deliver 16 completed 8,800-ton cargo carriers by the end of 1918. Contracts call for 60 vessels of 528,000 aggregate tonnage. A model town covering 175 acres, built simultaneously with the yards, has eliminated housing difficulties.

With a park about which centers its educational and recreational life this community, Harriman, presents advanced ideas in townsite development. The 400 to 500 buildings, completed or under construction, include bachelor houses, single houses and a modern 300-room hotel. The town also boasts a public school, high school, auditorium, gymnasium and athletic field and its own fire department and postoffice.

At Chester where the Sun Shipbuilding Company's 9,000 workers have completed four cargo ships and launched two others, a $6,000,000 model community is being built. Another housing project is that of the Traylor Shipbuilding Corporation at Cornwells, where nearly 100 homes, in addition to barracks, are being erected. The Traylor company has trained virtually all its 3,400 men, who are building wooden ships. Its management claims a national record in planking a hull in 11 days.

Wilmington a shipbuilding town for generations, quickly responded to the nation's demand for cargo carriers. With 6,000 workers, the Harlan & Hollingsworth plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, has completed six steel vessels and launched another. The Pusey & Jones Co. has another steel ship plant here, employing 3,000 men on four ways, and the American Car & Foundry Co., with 4,000 persons on its payroll, is building wooden hulls. Wilmington has contended with a serious housing problem which the plant managers say will be overcome when 600 houses now in construction, are completed.

DRUNKENNESS SHOWS DECLINE IN ENGLAND

London, (by mail) — Compulsory temperance has reduced drunkenness in England approximately 82 per cent since the war began. It has increased industrial efficiency of the nation many fold and made a return to the old regime of unrestricted alcoholism after the war.

This is the purport of a report to the British people by Lord D'Abernon chairman of the board of liquor control.

Liquor may be sold but only at certain hours and in limited quantities. Saloons are allowed to sell alcoholic drinks only five hours out of every 24. If a dispensary sells out its quota before closing time, its patrons have the alternative of soft drinks or going home.

Treating has been prohibited by law. The bartender who tolerates it is liable to fine and the establishment's license may be revoked.

The liquor board believes abolishment of the treating system has played an extremely important part in counteracting excessive drinking.

A dynamic substitute for the barroom and "free lunch" counter as a social gathering place has been found in the new canteens the government and various private concerns have opened where large numbers of laborers are employed—near the ship docks and munition factories. The government canteens are operated without profit, and the privately owned eating places aim to charge but little more than enough to pay expenses.

The strength of alcoholic beverages has also been lessened, the average dilution being about 25 per cent. Distilling of spirits, except for war or medicinal purposes was stopped two years ago.

MENUS FOR PRISONERS IN AUSTRIAN CAMPS

Rome (by mail)—The Epoca publishes more details gathered from our prisoners about the hardships they suffered in the Austrian concentration camps. In them all the severest orders are given to the Croat sentinels.

The food has been reduced to small portions and bread is often lacking. The soup has been reduced to hot water in which turnips have been boiled.

In evidence of this unusual treatment the Epoca publishes the following recipe of the Austrians in full:

"Food for the prisoners in the concentration camps at Sigmundsberg: Barley, two parts; sawdust, two parts; straw, one part; flour, one part, which are to vary according to the quantity of the material available. The quality is always the same. As for the quantity it may vary and does very, and in such a case the bread, if it may still be called such, may be wholly of sawdust.

The latest figures show that there are 4,500 picture houses in the United Kingdom with an annual attendance of 1,075,000,000.

THE BLUE TRIANGLE AT RUSSIA'S FRONT

The Blue Triangle clubrooms in Petrograd were in half shadow. A few scattered candles flung gleams as persistent and as vague as Russia's hope of liberty. A hundred Russian girls and six young men were guests of the first Young Women's Christian association in all Russia. It was a gala afternoon tea but it was dark because the winter days end at three o'clock and there is a restriction on the use of candles and kerosene as well as of electricity.

The girls were making merry even in the gloom of winter, the twilight and the tragedy of war. One slender white-faced girl with purple-shadowed eyes was merrier than all the rest. Her wit and ringing laugh were contagious.

"Sonya is wonderful tonight," one girl whispered to another as she stirred gently into her tea the one lump of sugar doled out carefully for the party. The Y. W. C. A. secretaries had been saving the sugar for months—putting aside at each meal one of the two lumps served with the coffee in the restaurant, that there might be a bit of sweet for this first party. There was no bread.

"Sonya is not drinking her tea," her pale little admirer went on, "yet she fainted this morning at the factory and the forewoman said she was hungry."

"We're all hungry," was the monotonous reply. "It wasn't that."

Something stopped the laughter and talk suddenly but the hush that fell in the dimly lit room was as joyous as the gaiety. One of Russia's greatest singers stood by the piano and lifted up her glorious voice filled with the tears and heartbreak that people at peace call thrills.

They went away early when the music was done—these sad-eyed, half-starved little guests of the Blue Triangle—for danger lurks in the dark of Petrograd streets, robberies and murders—sharp little by-products of a nation's chaos and a world at war.

Sonya lingered after the others were gone. She was standing close by the secretary-hostess' chair when she turned from saying good-night to the last one of the other girls. The laughter had died out of the girl's eyes and the gaiety from her voice.

"Will you give me a note to the factory superintendent," she asked, "telling him I'm attending classes here at night?" She spoke in French, for she knew no English, and the secretary, no Russian.

"Yes, if it will help you." The secretary was glad to give her such a note but she was curious. "Tell me why."

"If he knows the girls are going to night classes he won't put us on the night shift. He will let us work days so we can come. Yesterday I asked for the night shift. Today I have changed my mind."

The secretary wondered. Sonya had not been in any of the classes Had the bright little party given her an interest in the work of the association? Had the friendliness of the American secretaries reached her? Was it the music that had given her an impetus to study toward something beyond a factory?

"What is it that interests you?" the secretary asked her. "You are not in any of the classes now, are you? What is it you want to take up?"

"This morning I looked out the factory window," and Sonya's voice reminded the secretary of the call of a night bird before a storm "Down in the courtyard was a crowd and three men were killed. Killed by the police—the bolshevik police, while I stood there and watched. They said they were anarchists. One was my brother. Another was my sweetheart I came here tonight to forget But I cannot forget. Always I will remember I want nothing now but to carry on their work, and to do that I must study and learn—I must learn English and many other things. I want to go in all the classes. If the foreman at the factory knows I do that, he will help. He will let me work days."

In the dark, the hunger, the cold, and the terror of Petrograd, the Blue Triangle is sending out its shining invitation to the bewildered women and young girls of Russia. It is offering a little oasis in the midst of the chaos where they may come and rest and relax, play games, listen to music, study English, French, stenography, bookkeeping, or music, and as one tired girl expressed it, forget for the moment that they are in Petrograd. Most of the girls who gather at the sign of the Blue Triangle are bookkeepers and stenographers, but scattered among them are factory girls, domestics, and girls who never have worked.

"In Petrograd and elsewhere in Russia," says Miss Clarissa Spencer, world secretary of the Y. W. C. A. who started the work in Russia, "girls formerly employed in government offices come to us who have struck against the bolshevists. They're out of jobs. They're hungry. One girl told me she couldn't take gymnasium work. It gave her such an appetite. But they refuse to return to work for the bolshevists."

Miss Helen Ogden, one of the Y. W. C. A. secretaries who was forced to leave Petrograd on account of the German advance, writes home that: "It's like living on the screen of a melodrama to be in Russia. Bullets and shooting are almost as familiar street sounds here as the clang of the street car and the honk of the automobile at home. Here we learn to live and work under frequent shooting and street battles and to flee only when we are told by the authorities that we must."

Law Regulating Fashions.

In 1639 the general court of Massachusetts passed a law that "No garment shall be made with short sleeves; and such as have garments with short sleeves shall not wear them unless they cover the arm to the wrist. And hereafter no person whatever shall make any garment for women with sleeves more than half an ell wide (twenty-two and a half inches)." If laws regulating fashions were passed today, how many women would be fined for law-breaking?

Between Love and Duty.

"I want to talk to you about becoming your son in-law," said the young man "I can't advise you on the subject of becoming a member of the family," replied the father of the young woman in the case. "As your sincere friend, I ought to speak freely, but as a husband and father I am restrained"

For Bills and Receipts.

For the woman who hoards receipts there are bill or receipt books covered with cretonne in so many designs that one can match almost any room. These bill books open and shut like an accordion, and the cover and flaps are also of cretonne.

Masterful Blue-Eyed Women.

Blue-eyed beauties are known for their self-control, coldness, austerity and precision They are severe and suspicious and demand the continuous homage of those about them Moreover, they are domineering and masterful, and wherever possible will be found to rule the roost.

WE'RE ON THE TEAM; WE'RE IN THE GAME; WE'RE OUT TO WIN

By A. ALONZO STAGG,
Famous Athletic Coach University of Chicago.

I said to a friend recently that I had not felt so poor in 31 years, or since I was a freshman at Yale working my way through. "Well, don't you think we ought all of us to feel poor these days?" was the reply. That is just the point. We ought. If we don't feel on the strain most of the time these days I doubt whether we are doing our full duty in helping win the war.

My observation is that we never accomplish much in this life without being dead in earnest, without hard work and without self-sacrifice, and I can't figure out how we can win this war without all of us co-operating most generously along these lines. First of all, unless we feel dead in earnest about our winning the war there is something wrong with us and it were better that a mill stone were hanged about our neck and we were drowned in the depth of the sea.

No one will work hard and make personal sacrifices unless his heart is in the enterprise. The beautiful part of this affair is that we can all be in it—we are all on the big team with a chance to play the game to our limit. At present we must play the particular position which is assigned to us, and play it for all that is in us whether we like our job or not.

The main thing and the loyal and the patriotic thing is that we give to our utmost of time and energy and money. Putting the fourth Liberty Loan across means that each one of us must give that uttermost of time and energy and money.

We're on the team, we're in the game, we're out to win. Now let's get down under it and root and lift and boost until we cross the goal line.

Coal Consumers Organize.

Recent developments in the coal situation in the Philippines, including a shortage in the supply of fuel for the archipelago during the last few months and the increasing use of fuel in the islands for industrial purposes in which fuel costs are of prime importance, have led to the organization of an association of large coal consumers in Manila which is likely to be of great importance in industrial matters in the far east.

Beat Train in Speeding.

A man beat a train in a recent race between the two from Groom to Kurseong, India—a distance of 15½ miles. The victor, a private named Graham, of the Argylls, beat the train by two minutes. The distance was covered in one hour and thirty minutes by continuous running. Graham walked two days before from Ghoom to Kurseong and back, 31 miles in six and one-fourth hours

IOWA WOMEN PLAN WIDER WAR WORK

FOOD ADMINISTRATION COMMITTEE GREATLY ENLARGES ITS ORGANIZATION AND WILL UNDERTAKE INTENSIVE SERVICE.

At its recent meeting to consider work to be done during this year the Women's Committee of the United States Food Administration for Iowa planned an enlarged organization, which will put its members in the closest possible touch with every housewife in the state.

It was through personal visitation that the committee last fall signed up 517,000 housekeepers who pledged fidelity to the program of food conservation—the saving of wheat, sugar, meat and fats. At the annual meeting in Des Moines a few days ago the women voted again to undertake this personal visitation to pledge the women of Iowa anew to the program as it will be outlined in the new Home Card about to be issued by the Food Administration

Addressing the conference of women at Des Moines, R. E. Logsdon, Executive Secretary of the Federal Food Administration for Iowa said: "We have a far more difficult program before us this year than last. Our program in a sentence is to reduce the consumption of foodstuffs in this country all along the line to the actual requirements of our people consistent with proper nutrition and the maintenance of health In other words our activities are to be devoted entirely to the suppression of over-eating, unnecessary eating and all waste of foodstuffs. Inasmuch as the housewife has practically the control of the use of foodstuffs in her household, it is essential that the housewife be awakened to the necessity of guarding the consumption of foodstuffs in her household, along the lines indicated. This can be accomplished by a continuous system of propaganda, making over eating and waste impossible in any patriotic household."

Bigger Organization.

To carry out the suggestion made by Secretary Logsdon, Mrs. F. E. Whitley, chairman, and her committee adopted plans to enlarge their organization by selecting a chairman for every school district in the state about 10,000 in all To members of the organization the Food Administration will issue a certificate in the form of a federal oath, adding official responsibility and dignity to the service which the women committeemen will perform.

The program of the Women's Committee for the year includes the following points, among others:

1. A new home card, sometimes known as the kitchen card, is now in the course of preparation and will be distributed to all housewives of the state through the organization of the Women's Committee, sometime in October.

2. Window cards bearing the emblem of the Food Administration in colors will be distributed to 100,000 homes by personal visitation.

3. A series of communications relating to special necessities and requests involved in carrying out the international food program will be distributed to women and women's organizations by the committee during the next few months. They will be considered at all meetings of women's organizations, however large or small, throughout the state, in order that the housewives may fully understand the program and also that the exigencies of the food situation make necessary what they are requested to do.

Oppose Fourth Meal.

4. Each county organization will maintain a continuous and vigorous campaign against the Fourth Meal, extra meals, extra lunches and similar affairs.

5. Members of the Women's Committee will interest themselves in the instruction of school children in food conservation through the medium of school teachers of the state. To this end a booklet has been prepared entitled "War Service in Iowa Schools" which is now ready for distribution and general school use. The Sunday schools of the state will be induced to undertake some instruction of the school children in the food conservation form of service.

6. The Women's Committee will urge upon retail and other merchants the use of displays, exhibits, demonstrations and posters on the subject of food conservation.

7. Members of the Women's Committee will individually and collectively consider the matter of the publication of price of food commodities in the daily newspapers and attend meetings of County Price Interpretation Committees when they are held. They will undertake to stimulate an interest among the housewives in consulting these prices and in making reports and suggestions to Price Interpretation Committees. The prices published by the Price Interpretation Committees show the maximum which may be demanded by the different classes of dealers in food commodities. Unless the housewives observe the prices carefully and inquire frequently of the retailers from whom they purchase their foodstuffs as to the market on each; unless they occasionally request permission to examine the invoices of such dealers, it is reasonable to believe that some extraordinary changes may take place in the prices of foodstuffs, and this calamity may be attributed largely to the housewives, lack of interest in the system of price publication.

IOWA ICE PRICES WERE CUT DOWN

FOOD ADMINISTRATION ACTIVITIES UNDER DIRECTION OF W. T. HARPER HAD THAT RESULT.

Adjustment of conditions with respect to the ice supply and price of ice were made in many communities by the milk and ice division of the United States food administration for Iowa during the season, and the foundation was laid for complete control of the situation in every county in the state next year.

W. T. Harper of Ottumwa is chief of the ice division and has spent the summer adjusting disputes as to conditions and prices. The outcome has been a net reduction in prices and much improved conditions for consumers of the product.

Early in the year the United States food administration announced a determination to prevent profiteering in ice, the spoliation of food and deprivation of children on account of high prices of ice making the preservation of milk difficult in the households, especially of the poor Mr. Harper has administered the situation in Iowa along that line. Following are some of the adjustments made through his activity and reported by him to United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems:

Fontanelle—Price reduced from 75 to 60 cents.

Greenfield—Price 55 cents, but advance was asked. Producer at Corning was influenced by food administration to reduce price to the iceman at Greenfield and price was kept at 55.

Orient—Price was ordered reduced from 75 to 60 cents.

Bloomfield—Advance asked from 50 cents to householders, 40 to business houses and 30 to butchers. New rates fixed at 50 cents to householders (no change), 50 cents to business houses, 45 to business houses taking over 200 pounds and 35 cents in wholesale quantities.

Jefferson—Complaint was made of ice prices and report from ice company disclosed that its ice was costing it $4.70 a ton, whereas other artificial companies were making it at $3 to $3.50.

Estherville—Ice plant went out of business without notice. Basis for securing supply furnished to Food Administrator Groves.

Missouri Valley—Complaint as to quality of ice disclosed that undistilled water was used. Producer claimed not to be able to get fuel oil. Ice division of food administration secured him eight carloads, for which he never called and no further complaint heard.

Fairfield—One complaint was adjusted by Food Administrator McKemey.

Iowa City—All natural ice supply washed out in early spring by floods Adjustment of this difficulty was followed by complaint as to charges for delivery to extreme limits of consuming districts. Food Administrator Carson was asked to have ice companies make figures on cost of delivery to inside, medium and outside territory with a view to striking an average.

Charlton—Price reduced from 60 cents with coupons and 55 cents cash to householders, to 50 cents, August 15.

Knoxville—Ice famine threatened during the hot weather and the ice division located supplies at Davenport, Des Moines and elsewhere which promised to protect food supplies but entailed an extra charge on consumers. No complaint has been heard.

Moulton—The Artificial Ice company of Centerville sold ice at Centerville at 55 cents to householders and shipped ice to Moulton and sold it for 50 cents. The natural ice dealer at Moulton reduced his price to 40 cents and drove the Centerville company out of the field. He then began charging its customers 60 cents, maintaining his own at 40. A 50 cent price for all was insisted on by the ice division of the food administration and no complaint has been filed.

Clinton — Difficulties about rules thrashed out in public hearings. Prices were 50 cents to householders, 35 and 40 cents to merchants and $4.50 a ton to butchers. But the rules provided that ice companies should put ice in boxes if 50 pounds were taken but on the sidewalk if 25 only were taken, while they would not sell for cash from wagons.

Cherokee—Prices advanced in 1917 to 50 cents to householders, 30 cents to grocers, etc. In 1918 ice dealers proposed to advance the price to 60 and 40. County Food Administrator French recommended a compromise at 55 and 33 cents. The ice division agreed to this but notified dealers if it was not accepted a 50 cent price for householders would go in. It was accepted.

Sugar Hoarder Penalized.

Emma Marsh, wife of a government employee at Jeffersonville, Ind., admitted to John McDonald, federal food administrator for Floyd county, that she had purchased 70 pounds of sugar for a family of four, and as a consequence she was permitted to pay to the Red Cross $25. Gus F Richards, described by Mr McDonald as "rather proud" of having bought 16 pounds of sugar at one time, was permitted to pay $15 to the Red Cross.

HOW TO AVOID BACKACHE AND NERVOUSNESS

Told by Mrs. Lynch From Own Experience.

Providence, R. I.—"I was all run down in health, was nervous, had headaches, my back ached all the time. I was tired and had no ambition for anything. I had taken a number of medicines which did me no good. One day I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for women, so I tried it. My nervousness and backache and headaches disappeared. I gained in weight and feel fine, so I can honestly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman who is suffering as I was."—Mrs. ADELINE B. LYNCH, 100 Plain St., Providence, R. I.

Backache and nervousness are symptoms or nature's warnings, which indicate a functional disturbance or an unhealthy condition which often develops into a more serious ailment.

Women in this condition should not continue to drag along without help, but profit by Mrs. Lynch's experience, and try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and for special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co., Lynn, Mass.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

(CHAPTER EIGHTEEN—Continued.) 41

"'My plan was being carried out before we reached the last halting place. My five secret agents collected all the arms during the night. They dashed the daggers to the ground and broke them. They removed the bullets from their pistols. They damped the powder. Everything was ready for ringing up the curtain.'

Valenglay bowed.

'My compliments. You are a man of resource. And your scheme was not lacking in charm. For I take it that your five ladies were pretty?'

Don Luis put on a bantering expression. He closed his eyes, as if to recall his bliss and let fall the one word:

'Hags!'

The epithet gave rise to a burst of merriment. But Don Luis, as though in a hurry to finish his story at once, went on:

'In any case, they saved my life, the hussies, and their aid never failed me. My 42 watch dogs, deprived of their arms and shaking with fear in those solitudes where everything is a trap and where death lies in wait for you at any minute, gathered round me as their real protector. When we joined the great tribe to which they belonged I was their actual chief. And it took me less than three months of dangers faced in common, of ambushes defeated under my advice, of raids and pillages effected by my direction, to become the chief also of the whole tribe.

'I spoke their language, I practised their religion, I wore their dress, I conformed to their customs: alas! had I not five wives? Henceforth, my dream, which had gradually taken definite shape in my mind, became possible.

"I sent one of my most faithful adherents to France with 60 letters to hand to 60 men whose names and addresses he learned by heart. Those 60 men were 60 associates whom Arsene Lupin had disbanded before he threw himself from the Capri cliffs. All had retired from business, with a hundred thousand francs apiece in ready money and a small trade or public post to keep them occupied. I had provided one with a tobacconist's shop, another with a job as a park keeper, others with sinecures in the government offices. In short, they were respectable citizens.

"To all of them—whether public servants, farmers, municipal councillors, grocers, sacristans, or what not—I wrote the same letter, made the same offer, and gave the same instructions in case they should accept. . . . Monsieur le President, I thought that, of the 60, 10 or 15 at most would come and join me. 60 came, Monsieur le President, 60, and not one less! Sixty men punctually arrived at the appointed place.

'On the day fixed, at the hour named, my old armed cruiser, the Ascendant, which they had brought back, anchored in the mouth of the Wady Draa, on the Atlantic coast, between Cape Nun and Cape Juby. Two longboats plied to and fro and landed my friends and the munitions of war which they had brought with them: camp furniture, quick firing guns, ammunition, motor boats, stores and provisions, trade [illegible] of good as well, for my 60 good men and true had insisted, on turning their share of the old profits into cash and on putting into the new venture the six million francs which they had received from the governor. . . .

Need I say more, Monsieur le President? Must I tell you what a chief like Arsene Lupin was able to attempt seconded by 60 fine fellows of that stamp and backed by an army of 10,000 well armed and well trained Moorish fanatics? He attempted it; and his success was unparalleled.

"I do not think that there has ever been an idyl like that through which we lived during those 15 months, first on the heights of the Atlas range and then in the infernal plains of the Sahara: an idyl of heroism, of privation, of superhuman torture and superhuman joy: an idyl of hunger and thirst, of total defeat and dazzling victory. . . .

"'My 60 trusty followers threw themselves into their work with might and main. Oh, what men! You know them, Monsieur le President du Conseil! You've had them to deal with, Monsieur le Prefect de Police! The beggars! Tears come to my eyes when I think of some of them.

"'There were Charolais and his son, who distinguished themselves in the case of the Princesse de Laballe's tiara. There were Marco who owed his fame to the Kesselbach case, and Auguste, who was your chief messenger, Monsieur le President. There were the Growler and the Masher, who achieved such glory in the hunt for the crystal stopper. There were the brothers Benzeville, whom I used to call the two Ajaxes. There were Philippe d'Antrac, who was better born than any Bourbon, and Pierre Le Grand and Tristan Le Roux and Joseph Le Jeune.'

"'And there was Arsene Lupin,' repeated Don Luis.

"'I will not speak of him, Monsieur le President. I will not speak of him, for the simple reason that you would not believe my story. What they tell about him when he was with the Foreign Legion is mere child's play beside what was to come later. Lupin was only a private soldier. In South Morocco he was a general. Not till then did Arsene Lupin really show what he could do. And, I say it without pride, not even I foresaw what that was. The Achilles of the legend performed no greater feats. Hannibal and Caesar achieved no more striking results.

"'All I need tell you is that, in 15 months, Arsene Lupin conquered a kingdom twice the size of France. From the Berbers of Morocco, from the indomitable Touaregs, from the Arabs of the extreme south of Algeria, from the negroes who overrun Senegal, from the Moors along the Atlantic coast, under the blazing sun, in the flames of hell, he conquered half the Sahara and what we may call ancient Mauretania.

"'A kingdom of deserts and swamps? Partly, but a kingdom all the same, with oases, wells, rivers, forests, and incalculable riches, a kingdom with 10,000,000 men and 100,000 warriors. This is the kingdom which I offer to France, Monsieur le President du Conseil.'

Valenglay did not conceal his amazement. Greatly excited and even perturbed by what he had learned, leaning over his extraordinary visitor, with his hands clutching at the map of Africa, he whispered:

"'Explain yourself, be more precise.'

Don Luis answered:

"'Monsieur le President du Conseil, I will not remind you of the events of the last few years. France, resolving to pursue a splendid dream of dominion over North Africa, has had to part with a portion of the Congo. I propose to heal the painful wound by giving her 30 times as much as she has lost. And I turn the magnificent and distant dream into an immediate certainty by joining the small slice of Morocco which you have conquered to Senegal at one blow.

"'Today, Greater France in Africa exists. Thanks to me, it is a solid compact expanse. Millions of square miles of territory and a coastline stretching for several thousand miles from Tunis to the Congo, save for a few insignificant interruptions.'

"'It's a Utopia,' Valenglay protested.

"'It's a reality.'

"'Nonsense! It will take up 20 years' fighting to achieve.'

"'It will take you exactly five minutes!' cried Don Luis, with irresistible enthusiasm. 'What I offer you is not the conquest of an empire, but a conquered empire, duly pacified and administered, in full working order and full of life. My gift is a present, not a future gift.

"'I, too, Monsieur le President du Conseil, I, Arsene Lupin, had cherished a splendid dream. After toiling and moiling all my life, after knowing all the ups and downs of existence, richer than Croesus, because all the wealth of the world was mine, and poorer than Job, because I had distributed all my treasures, surfeited with everything, tired of unhappiness, and more tired still of happiness, sick of pleasure, of passion, of excitement, I wanted to do something that is incredible in the present day to reign!

"'And a still more incredible phenomenon, when this thing was accomplished, when the dead Arsene Lupin had come to life again as a sultan out of the Arabian Nights, as a reigning governing law giving Arsene Lupin, head of the state and head of the church, determined, in a few years at one stroke, to tear down the screen of rebel tribes against which you were waging a desultory and tiresome war in the north of Morocco, while I was quietly and silently building up my kingdom at the back of it.

"'Then, face to face with France and as powerful as herself, like a neighbor treating on equal terms, I would have cried to her, "It's I, Arsene Lupin! Behold the former swindler and gentleman burglar! The Sultan of Adrar, the Sultan of Iguidi, the Sultan of El Djouf, the Sultan of the Touaregs, the Sultan of Aubata, the Sultan of Brakna and Frerzon, all these am I, the Sultan of Sultans, grandson of Mahomet son of Allah I. I. I. Arsene Lupin!"

"'And before taking the little grain of poison that sets one free for a man like Arsene Lupin has no right to grow old, I should have signed the treaty of peace, the deed to gift in which I bestowed a kingdom on France, signed it, below the flourishes of my grand dignitaries, kaids, pashas, and marabouts, with my lawful signature, the signature to which I am fully entitled, which I conquered at the point of my sword and by my all powerful will: "Arsene I, Emperor of Mauretania!"'

Don Luis uttered all these words in a strong voice, but without emphasis, with the very simple emotion and pride of a man who has done much and who knows the value of what he has done. There were but two ways of replying to him: by a shrug of the shoulders, as one replies to a madman, or by the silence that expresses reflection and approval.

The Prime Minister and the Prefect of Police said nothing, but their looks betrayed their secret thoughts. And deep down within themselves they felt that they were in the presence of an absolutely exceptional specimen of mankind, created to perform immoderate actions and fashioned by his own hand for a superhuman destiny.

"It was a fine curtain, was it not, Monsieur le President du Conseil? And the end was worthy of the work. I should have been happy to have had it so. Arsene Lupin dying on a throne, sceptre in hand, would have been a spectacle not devoid of glamour. Arsene Lupin dying with his title of Arsene I, Emperor of Mauretania and benefactor of France: what an apotheosis! The gods have willed it otherwise. Jealous, no doubt, they are lowering me to the level of my cousins of the old world and turning me into that absurd creature, a king in exile. Their will be done! Peace to the late Emperor of Mauretania. He has strutted and fretted his hour upon the stage.

"Arsene I is dead, long live France! Monsieur le President du Conseil, I repeat my offer. Florence Levasseur is in danger. I alone can rescue her from the monster who is carrying her away. It will take me 24 hours. In return for 24 hours' liberty I will give you the Mauretanian Empire. Do you accept, Monsieur le President du Conseil?"

Well, certainly, I except," said Valenglay, laughing. "What do you say, my dear Desmalions? The whole thing may not be very orthodox but hang it! Paris is worth a mass and the Kingdom of Mauretania is a tempting morsel. We'll risk the experiment."

Don Luis's face expressed so sincere a joy that one might have thought that he had just achieved the most brilliant victory instead of sacrificing a crown and flinging into the gutter the most fantastic dream that mortal man had ever conceived and realized.

He asked:

"What guarantees do you require, Monsieur le President?"

"None."

"I can show you treaties, documents to prove——"

"Don't trouble. We'll talk about all that tomorrow. Meanwhile, go ahead. You are free."

The essential word, the incredible word, was spoken.

Don Luis took a few steps toward the door.

"One word more, Monsieur le President," he said, stopping. "Among my former companions is one for whom I procured a post suited to his inclinations and his deserts. This man I did not send for to come to Africa, thinking that some day or other he might be of use to me through the position which he occupied. I am speaking of Mazeroux, a sergeant in the detective service."

"Sergeant Mazeroux, whom Caceres denounced, with corroborating evidence, as an accomplice of Arsene Lupin, is in prison."

"Sergeant Mazeroux is a model of professional honor, Monsieur le President. I owed his assistance only to the fact that I was helping the police. I was accepted as an auxiliary and more or less patronized by Monsieur le Prefect. Mazeroux thwarted me in anything I tried to do that was at all legal. And he would have been the first to take me by the collar if he had been so instructed. I ask for his release."

"Oho!"

"Monsieur le President, your consent will be an act of justice and I beg of you to grant it. Sergeant Mazeroux shall leave France. He can be charged by the government with a secret mission in the south of Morocco, with the rank of colonial inspector."

"Agreed," said Valenglay, laughing heartily. And he added, "My dear Prefect, once we depart from the strictly lawful path, there's no saying where we come to. But the end justifies the means; and the end which we have in view is to have done with this loathsome Mornington case."

"This evening everything will be settled," said Don Luis.

"I hope so. Our men are on the track."

"They are on the track, but they have to check that track at every town, at every village, by inquiries made of every peasant they meet; they have to find out if the motor has not branched off somewhere, and they are wasting time. I shall go straight for the scoundrel."

"By what miracle?"

"That must be my secret for the present, Monsieur le President."

"Very well. Is there anything you want?"

"This map of France."

"Take it."

"And a couple of revolvers."

"Monsieur le Prefect will be good enough to ask his inspectors for two revolvers and to give to you. It that all? Any money?"

"No thank you, Monsieur le President. I always carry a useful 50,000 francs in my pocketbook, in case of need."

"In that case," said the Prefect of Police, "I shall have to send some one with you to the lockup. I presume your pocketbook was among the things taken from you."

Don Luis smiled:

"Monsieur le Prefect, the things that people can take from me are never of the least importance. My pocket book is at the lockup, as you say. But the money——"

He raised his left leg, took his boot in his hands and gave a slight twist to the heel. There was a little click, and a sort of double drawer shot out of the front of the sole. It contained two sheafs of bank notes and a number of diminutive articles, such as a gimlet, a watch spring, and some pills.

"The wherewithal to escape," he said, "to live and—to die. Good-bye, Monsieur le President."

In the hall M. Desmalions told the inspectors to let their prisoner go free. Don Luis asked:

"Monsieur le Prefect, did Deputy Chief Weber give you any particulars about the brute's car?"

"Yes, he telephoned from Versailles. It's a deep yellow car, belonging to the Compagnie des Cometes. The driver's seat is on the left. He's wearing a gray cloth cap with a black leather peak."

"Thank you, Monsieur le Prefet."

An inconceivable thing happened. Don Luis was free. Half an hour's conversation had given him the power of acting and of fighting the decisive battle.

He went off at a run. At the Trocadero he jumped into a taxi.

"Go to Issy-les-Moulineaux!" he cried. "Full speed! Forty francs!"

ce Boxes on Wheels

Refrigerator cars for carrying meat are ice boxes traveling on wheels.

Most people in America would have to go without fresh meat, or would have to pay more for what they could get, if it were not for these traveling ice boxes.

Gustavus F. Swift, the first Swift in the dressing industry, saw the need of these traveling ice boxes before others.

He asked the railroads to build them. The railroads refused. They were equipped and preferred to haul cattle rather than dressed beef.

So Gustavus F. Swift had to make the cars himself. The first one was a box car rigged to hold ice. Now there are 7,000 Swift refrigerator cars. Each one is as fine an ice box as you have in your home.

Day and night, fair weather and foul, through heat and cold, these 7,000 cars go rolling up and down the country, keeping meat all right, on its way to you.

Thus another phase of Swift & Company's activities has grown to meet a need no one else could or would supply, in way that matched Swift & Company ideas of being useful.

When you see one of these Swift & Company cars in a train, or on a siding, you will be reminded of what is being done for you as the result of experience and a desire to serve.

CURIOUS SENTRY GRABS TWO HUNS

They Had Escaped From Prison and Were Boldly Traveling Toward Front

BY FRED S. FERGUSON.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With ... on the Vesle ... Peter Pesenski, American, ... always was a ... person. As a sentry on ... headquarters of his ... in the war zone he was always ... to know just what business ... people had around there, if he ... know them, or if they didn't appear to be at home. Peter would stop ... of his own outfit if the latter's actions didn't look good to him.

While Peter was thus looking after his job as sentry, always curious and always stopping people he wasn't sure of, two Germans escaped from a prison camp. This camp was some 100 miles or so from Peter and his sentry posts, on the Marne. The two Heinies in some ... found themselves French uniforms. They had gotten a little food together, and sneaking by the guards one night, headed for the German lines. They traveled several nights. Their food ran out and they lived on wheat and vegetables from the fields. They kept to the woods most of the time, but occasionally allied soldiers saw them. On account of their French uniforms no one paid any particular attention to the fugitives.

After four days the Heinies reached the Marne region. Things were lively up there then. Troops were on the move, everyone was busy and no one paid any attention to a pair of unattached French soldiers. So the Germans became bold. They passed through a village in broad daylight.

Peter had just taken up his early afternoon trick at his post right at the gate of headquarters. His rifle was shining, his shoes clean and his tunic buttoned up as smartly as for parade. Peter looked things over. There was considerable movement along the road. Wagons, men and horses were hurrying past. Most of the men were Americans, but Peter noticed some French here and there.

Then he saw two Frenchmen in particular. They were walking slowly. The first thing Peter noticed was that they needed a shave. Also their uniforms were soiled. Peter's curiosity began to work. He watched the pair closely, and became more curious. Just why should two Frenchmen be as far back of the lines as headquarters and look as though they had just stepped out of the line? Peter asked himself, and couldn't think of an answer.

The objects of Peter's curiosity by this time were right in front of the gate leading to headquarters.

Peter stepped out into the road.

"How are you?" Peter ventured in his very best French.

Very good, and you?" came the response.

Then Peter wanted to know where the two were going and where they came from. He got an answer, but his report was:

"O' I guess not."

Simultaneously his rifle clicked and he covered the strangers.

Peter marched them away. A brisk line of questioning and the story of the two Germans came out.

Peter returned to his post. And then, with the American's pride in his newly mastered" language, Peter told his pals the real secret of his capture.

It was all up with 'em, as soon as they began to talk to me," said Peter. They spoke rotten French."

PENNSYLVANIA TO BE DRY AHEAD OF NATION

Philadelphia.—Practically a "dry" Pennsylvania is looked for some time in advance of July 1, 1919, the date set for national war time prohibition. In Philadelphia the license to sell liquor expires on June 1. The privilege costs nearly $1,200 and the authorities do not anticipate that many saloon keepers will care to pay that much for the privilege of dispensing liquor for one month.

Similarly in the interior towns, where the present licenses expire on April 1, the feeling prevails that few liquor sellers will feel that they can afford to pay more than $500 for the three months' privilege.

Hospital Nurses.

An orderly was on duty in an operating room for the first time and was to witness an amputation. He wondered whether he would get nervous. He also noticed a bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked nurse, and he wondered if she, too, would blanch under the ordeal. Following the operation, he admitted to the nurse that it had been his first operation. She congratulated him on having borne up so well.

"What did you feel like during your first operation?" he asked the nurse.

"This morning was my first operation," she said. "But I didn't know that men could stand those things as well as women."

Jno. Bleumke, Jr., 2553 Courtland St., Chicago, Ill., says: "I was down with my back suffering from lumbago. I walked like an old man, all bent over. My back pained terribly and when I moved my arms my back hurt. I finally had to go to bed and just felt sick all over and was helpless as a baby. My kidneys acted too frequently, the secretions were scanty and highly colored. I had terrible pains in the back of my head and I felt drowsy all the time. I finally used Doan's Kidney Pills and soon felt one hundred per cent better. When I finished the one box I was entirely cured. The pains left my back and head and my kidneys acted normally. I am glad to recommend Doan's to other kidney sufferers."

Don't Bluff!

THERE'S an old addage in "poker" that the man who is caught "bluffing" loses the pot.

The same adage applies to business. The man who bluffs—who tries to "put over"—soon finds that bluffing in the game alone

Then there's the fellow who plays poker with a few cards up his sleeve

When he shows five aces, he gets caught, because card players know that there's only four aces in a deck

The clothier who tells you today that he can give former values at former prices is trying to play the game with a padded deck of cards

He assumes, in other words, that the purchasing public are a "pack of fools."

The merchant that "baits you by selling an article less than it's worth," does it to make money, and to make money in this way he must ask more on other articles—articles that he can "cover up" the real reduction—and he does it

5. Infernal machines and mechanical, chemical or other devices or compositions which may ignite or explode.

6. Liquids or liquifiable articles, fragile articles and other unmailable matter when not packed in accordance with the requirements of the Postal Laws and Regulations.

7. All other articles which may kill, or in any wise hurt, harm or injure another or damage or deface or otherwise injure the mails or other property.

Bear these facts in mind when packing your Christmas parcel.

Nothing should go into your Christmas parcel which will not keep fresh for the time of packing until Christmas.

Dried fruits and other foodproducts should be packed in small tin or wood boxes one quarter to one half pound size.

Hard candy, including chocolate would probably be safe in tinfoil or heavy cardboard, but no soft chocolate or anything that could be possibly crushed should be used, as the remaining contents of the package might be spoiled thereby. Several dainties packed in oblong tin boxes holding each a quarter of a pound will provide a better variety for the packet than a large quantity of a single confection.

No liquids nor articles packed in glass should be placed in the parcels. For wrapping these gifts use white or colored handkerchiefs from 8 to 12 inches square.

New Wheat Conservation Program for Iowa

[illegible] mixed flours will shortly appear on the market under the title "Victory Mixed Flours." These flours may be sold without substitutes and must be manufactured as follows:

Wheat flour and barley flour mixed in the percentage of 80 to 20.

Wheat flour and corn flour mixed in the percentage of 80 to 20.

Wheat flour, corn flour and barley flour mixed in a percentage of 80 per cent wheat flour, 10 per cent corn flour and 10 per cent barley flour.

Wheat flour and rye flour mixed in the percentage of 60 to 40 per cent.

All such mixed flours are to be labeled "Victory Mixed Flour" and on the label is to appear the ingredients in the order of their proportion to the flour.

In selling mixed flours the dealer is not permitted to sell such mixed flour at a higher price than that of standard wheat flour.

Retailers dealing in wheat flour must carry in stock one or all of the following substitutes: Barley flour, cornmeal, corn flour.

These three are the only substitutes which may be sold with standard wheat flour and they are the only ones which the dealer is obliged to carry. They are the only ones which the dealer may require the consumer to purchase with standard wheat flour.

Present stocks of mixed flours containing 20 per cent or more substitutes may be distributed and sold without substitutes until exhausted. If they contain less than 20 per cent substitutes a full pound of substitutes must be sold with each four pounds of such mixed flours.

In selling standard wheat flour the retailers must sell one pound of substitutes with every four pounds of wheat flour.

The dealer in selling wheat flour must deliver the substitutes with the wheat flour. No exception will be made to this rule.

The limits of 24½ pounds in town and 49 pounds in the country have been withdrawn. The dealer may sell to the consumer such quantities of wheat flour as the consumer desires to purchase provided he observes the 80-20 rule.

If dealers desire to supply the demand of the consumers they may sell as substitutes in a ratio of one pound of substitutes to four pounds of wheat flour the following additional substitutes but such sales can only be made at the request of the consumer: Kaffir flour, rice flour, peanut flour, sweet potato flour, buckwheat flour, feterita flour, milo flour, bean flour, potato flour and meals of the above basic cereals.

Dealers may also sell rye flour as a substitute in the ratio of two pounds of rye flour with three pounds of wheat flour.

Pancake flours are not included in the 80-20 rule and may not be sold as substitutes.

All whole cereals and all breakfast foods, oat meal, or rolled oats, and rice are eliminated as substitutes.

As a means of conservation consumers are requested not to purchase cornmeal as a substitute when such cornmeal is to be used for cornbread. Cornmeal should be purchased as a substitute only for the purpose of baking in combination with wheat flour. This is not a rule but a request for patriotic co-operation with the government on the part of the consumer.

Retailers may now buy a 60 days' supply of wheat flour.

Retailers in purchasing wheat flour are not obliged to purchase substitutes at the same time, nor to certify to substitutes on hand. They must, however, observe the rules noted above.

The foregoing rules apply to all custom and exchange transactions as well as to sales of flour to farmers.

The 80-20 rule supersedes the 50-50 rule.

Letters From "Our Boys" In France and in U. S. A.

Somewhere in France
September, 1918.

Mrs Henry Wille

Dear Parents, Brothers, Sisters, and all. -

Well I am going to write you a letter today and let you know that I am in good health and hope the same of you folks I am not going to write you a very long letter today, as I really don't know any news, only to let you know that I am still alive and the same as ever I didn't even get sea sick Most of them did, but it only made me feel a little dizzy for a few days

Say I ordered a magazine from the Y M. C A man which is going to be sent to you each month for a year, so when you get it you will know where it is from.

The weather is cooler here than at Camp Pike, but for one thing it is later in the season, too.

I suppose time you get this letter the people around there will have their silos filled and will soon be ready to husk corn. I think I will be back there next year to husk corn and husk a hundred bushels a day. Ha! Ha!

We had pretty nice weather while we were on the water. No storms, only a little rain most every day. It seems as though it rains easier on water. Most every little cloud has rain in it. We saw a few fish, they were fat and about as large as a dog. We could see them jump above the water. And also saw some that could fly. I expected to see a long distance when I got on the water, but it seemed as though we were in a ditch with a hill all the way around it, so you see we couldn't see very far.

Say did Leslie and Carl have to register? Which I suppose, and did they get their questionnaires? I suppose there were a lot of them that registered. Well how are you feeling anyway? I want you to enjoy yourself the same as ever and I will do the same, I think. I have nothing to complain of as I haven't been sick as long as I have been in camp, and I think I ought to feel thankful for it, too.

Well perhaps we won't be able to write as often as when I was in the United States. I will try to do my best and will leave the rest to our Ruler above. He will see to the rest.

Well, I don't really know any more news to write today. The next time I will write more. Well, hoping this letter will find you in good heath as it eaves me. So may the Lord be with you all till we meet again. And even if it should not be on this earth, there will be a day coming when it will be peace every day. So best wishes to all.

Your son,
Elmer Hartbeck,

The following soldier's letter from Fred C. Collins may be of interest to readers of the Times who also may have relatives stationed at Camp McArthur, Waco, Texas. Fred visited in Klemme with his relatives of the Gibbs and F. A. Arnold families some years ago and will be remembered by many of Klemme and vicinity. The letter is to his uncle.

October 20th, 1918.

Dear Uncle:—

Received the pipe and tobacco and was very much pleased with same. Well, Uncle, how are you getting along and how are you feeling? Fine, I hope. It is very warm down here, about 100 in the shade, and no shade. I guess it is cold where you are. I don't know how long they are going to keep me on this side, but I am doing my bit just the same. I am in charge of 48 men and some of them don't know their left from their right foot. Most of them are Mexicans. We drill from 7:30 in the morning until 5 in the evening. With six weeks of hard drilling we can make good soldiers out of rookies. I belonged to the National Guard at one time. I was in for 5 years so it comes easy for me. I was called up before the Board for another exam yesterday. They gave me special service. They told me that I would be transferred into another branch of the service where they could use me the best. I have been in four camps just doing nothing but drilling rookies and I guess I will be transferred some day this week. I am sending you one of my pictures. They are not very good. Just as soon as I can will have some more taken. Well Uncle, they are calling us for mess so I will have to close. Will write more next time. With love to all.

Your nephew,
Fred C. Collins,
Co. F., 2nd Bri. Dev Camp
Camp Mac Arthur.
Waco, Texas.

Tell all the folks hello for me and be sure and write. We have about 600 cases of Spanish influenza in camp So far I have been well and feeling fine.

I want to thank you for the paper and envelopes. Will make good use of them writing to you. All the folks are well at home and Papa told me to be sure and write to you and let you know that there is a Collins in this war. He wears a service button on his coat, so I guess you can wear one too, and I will try to do my best and be a god soldier and hold the name up.

Give my love to all the folks and tell them to write.

Fred.

FROM PRIVATE HERMAN COOBS TO HIS SISTER LENA

Somewhere in France.
September 15th, 1918.

Dear Sister:—

I received two letters from you a few days ago. They were the first letters I received from you since I am in France. One was mailed August 1 and the other August 14th. I also received one from Anna. She sent me Ben's address and I wrote to him at once. So if his Co., is still intact he will get it. I would like to have him in this Co. as I am to have a helper. We are having it prett ysoft here. I worked at my trade the past week and am to go back again tomorrow. We have a piano here. The Y. M. C. A. loaned it to us. They were out one night and put on a real U. S. motion picture show. The Y. M. C. A is a great help to us. I haven't been to town for over two weeks as the city does not interest me very much. It sure was good news when I read in your letter that Henry was in Class 3. I would hate to have him go as the folks need him. John may get a taste of army life now as the new draft age catches him also. Well Sis, I have had nine months of army life to date and it has not been so bad at that.

We get pretty good eats over here and we get tobacco issued to us also. We can buy cigarettes cheaper here than at home, and I purchased a Gillette safety razor at the U. S. commissary for $1.75. This razor would cost $5.00 in the U. S. The good old Government is doing their bit for the boys over here and the U. S. boys are doing their part in return by driving the Huns toward the Rhine. At present the boys have them on the run and I do not think it will be long before it is over and it will be good news to receive. I hope we can be on the field to help finish the job. Well Sis, I will have my 20th birthday tomorrow and in France at that. I sent mother a card to remind her that I had not forgotten her birthday. I am glad to hear that the crops are fine and that you are all well. I am feeling fine and sure like it better here than hot Southern camp (Georgia) in U. S. I feel sorry for the Iowa boys that went there. I don't like the idea of mother worrying so much. I don't know how the conditions are where Ben is, but I am as safe here as in U. S. Tell mother to write and write all you want to, as incoming mail is not censored. Well, must close, with love to all of you, I am,

Your brother,
Private Herman Coobs,

J. F. RYAN, NEW BARBER AT THE FORMER McELMURRAY BARBER SHOP

Last Saturday Mr J F Ryan of Garner opened up the former McElmurray Barber Shop and did a rushing business that day and is still agoing. Mr. Ryan is a first class barber in every way, in fact he has barbered the greater part of his life or since he was old enough to hold a razor. He is quite well known here as he has lived in this county for a number of years. "Jimmy" of course is Irish and we have often been told an Irishman makes the best barber. Well just get a shave or a hair-cut and "Jimmy" will not disappoint you. He intends to move his family here in the spring or as soon as a suitable house can be obtained and will make Klemme his future home as he says the town and the people look good to him. Remember he also sends laundry which leaves every Wednesday morning. Get your laundry in early.

THANK YOU—FROM THE EDITOR

Last week we began the task of mailing out statements to our readers who were in arrears on their subscription to the Times. A great many have responded and have their papers paid up in advance. Now we wish to thank you for your prompt attention to the matter. The Government has ordered us to do this and we must comply with the ruling. Do your share if you have not already, by acting promptly in the matter. It will be necessary for us to cut your name from the list if it is not paid up. Uncle Sam says we must and we will do as he says. Now it's up to you who are in arrears to settle promptly or your name will have to be taken from the list until you are paid up. But thank you to those who have acted so promptly, let the rest of you fall in line. The Editor.

GARNER DEMOCRAT CHANGES HANDS

R. F. Schneider, the former Editor and Publisher of the Garner Democrat has leased the publication to Ted Tierney who took possession last week.

Mr. Schneider has been the publisher of the Democrat for several years, a part of which time the Editor of this paper was foreman at that plant. Mr Schneider has enlisted in the army and expects his call soon. He has made a great many friends since he took over the Democrat and will be greatly missed by them.

Mr. Tierney needs little introduction to Klemme people as he was also the former editor of the Times for a number of years and since has been active in other editorial fields. His many friends welcome him back to their vicinity. Here's success to both the former and present editor of the Democrat.

T F Mitchell has been transferred from the Klemme station to the station at Swea City and expects to leave for that place about next week. We have not learned who has been assigned to the station here. Mr and Mrs Mitchell have a long list of friends who regret to see them leave but wish them the best of success in their new location. Mr Mitchell will receive a much larger salary at Swea City and will have a much better station to work.

MAN ACCIDENTALLY SHOOTS SELF SUNDAY

Sunday afternoon, Herman Haef, living northwest of Ventura, accidentally shot himself with a shot gun as he was crawling under a fence on his way to the house. The accident occurred about six rods from the house and the shot brought his family to the terrible scene.

From what we can learn Mr Haef is a well to do farmer and has a family, and is a middle aged man.

We, the undersigned members of the bar of Hancock County, recognizing the importance of maintaining our Supreme Court at the highest possible standard, and believing that the re election of the Hon Frank R Gaynor, Hon Byron W Preston and Hon Truman S Stevens will help to maintain such standard, do hereby endorse and approve their candidacies and recommend them to the voters of this county as men in every way worthy support at the polls.

Any person who has canning sugar left over will kindly return it to the grocer from whom they bought it and who will report it to the County Food Administration. Nov 1, 2 and 3 have been fixed as the dates to return this sugar in pursuance of the signed agreement of purchase that they would return that portion of it that they did not use for canning. If you don't return it you are hoarders and guilty of larceny and may be proceeded against accordingly.

ELECTION DAY NEXT TUESDAY

Next Tuesday will be a day of excitement for the voters as every good old election day always proves to be. Come to the polls and cast your vote for the man you think should hold the position. We are not going to take sides with any of the candidates through the columns of this paper. We know who we are going to vote for and have made a careful study as to who will be the best man for the office. It is a serious problem and one which each and every voter should give careful thought. In these times we must put the best and patriotic men in the office. Don't be influenced by anyone in regard as to whom you should vote for. It is your privilege to vote for the man you think should hold the office—vote for him, regardless of party. Polls open at the usual hours at the City Hall, Tuesday, November 5th.

PROUD MOMENT TO BE AN IOWAN

Des Moines, Ia., Oct 25 "I was never prouder to be from Iowa than when I was in Chicago last week and saw the frantic endeavors of that city to sell its quota of Liberty bonds declared Paul Junkin of Creston, well known Iowa publisher and editor, on his return from the Great Lakes training station where he went to secure information relative to taking the soldier vote

"I was repeatedly accosted on the street and asked to buy bonds. I always replied that I had bought mine in Iowa and that answer was enough Almost invariably the solicitor would say a kind word for Iowa and ask me how we put over our loan so promptly.

"Chicago is greatly interested in the way Iowa is organized for the bond campaigns. In my judgment Iowa never attained so much desirable advertising throughout the nation as when the old Hawkeye state led the way over the top with this fourth drive and in the third drive of some months ago"

MAKE GOOD PLEDGE TO TAKE WAR STAMP

Iowans Reminded Now Is Time to Redeem the Promises They Made.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 24.—Now that the Liberty loan campaign is out of the way, steps are to be taken by the Iowa war savings committee to secure 100 per cent redemption of the War Savings Stamp pledges made earlier in the year. The campaign is to be put on at the direct request of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo who declares that the government expects every pledge to be made good. Homer A. Miller, state director of the war savings campaign in Iowa, today made the following announcement regarding the pledge redemption drive:

"Word has gone out to county and city chairmen of the War Savings Stamp campaign to begin work at once to secure a 100 per cent collection of War Savings Stamp pledges made during the year. They will begin their work at once and will push vigorously the collection of all delinquent pledges.

"The government expects and demands that every citizen of Iowa who signed a pledge earlier in the year for the purchase of stamps make good that pledge. The government assumes that every pledger signed his pledge in good faith and does not hold it in the light of a mere scrap of paper

"The government through Secretary McAdoo, also asks that payments due on pledges in December be paid in November in order that the entire campaign in the state can be cleaned up by December 1. Iowa has many millions worth of stamps yet to buy and this amount cannot be raised without 100 per cent redemption of all pledges and the purchase of stamps to the limit by those who did not sign a pledge

"In order to bring about a full redemption of all pledges I ask every Iowan who signed a pledge to go at once to the bank, or postoffice where it is redeemable and make good on his or her promise to loan money to the government with which to finance the war. Reasonable time will be allowed for this Later steps will be taken to bring in the delinquent The honor of the state demands that our full quota of $48,000,000 be sold and we cannot be satisfied with less."

IOWA TEACHERS WILL MEET LAST OF DECEMBER

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 25.—Plans for the annual meeting of the State Teachers Association scheduled to be held in Des Moines, October 31, November 1 and 2, have been abandoned, and the meeting will be replaced with an executive session to be held in Des Moines December 26-28, according to plans formulated at a meeting of the executive committee of the association yesterday afternoon.

The November meeting was given up because it was generally considered inadvisable to close the schools for the teachers' attendance of the meeting in view of the time lost in the schools by the quarantine.

The executive session will be attended by all officers and members of governing committees of the association, and by all teachers who are able to attend. Round tables and addresses scheduled for the annual meeting will be abandoned. The election of officers will be held, however

Members of the executive committee who attended the meeting yesterday include Superintendent M G. Clark, of Sioux City, president of the association, Superintendent W L. Hanson, of Burlington, chairman of the executive committee; Dr. C. P. Colgrove of Fayette, president of Upper Iowa University, County Superintendent Grace D Bradshaw, of Pocahontas; Charles F Pye, of Des Moines, secretary of the association.

PENALIZE COAL MEN FOR MAKING OVERCHARGES

Des Moines, Ia., Oct 25 As a first step in its campaign of enforcing regulations, the Polk county fuel commission yesterday ordered C W Bowers, a coal, wood and feed dealer, at Clark and Main streets, to close his store to the public as a penalty for repeated overcharging of coal customers. FIND HUMAN BONES IN LONELY PLACE

Hamburg, Ia., Oct 23—All sorts of fanciful tales have been conjured up by the finding of seven human skeletons on the farm of George Lusby, two miles east of Hamburg, where there was once a forest located in a section where in early days and days not so very early, many exciting incidents have taken place

A force of men were at work digging for the construction of a reservoir when they came upon the skeletons. They were buried about five feet deep There never was a burying ground on the place or anywhere near

Dr S T Mitchell and W T Davidson visited the place and made an examination of the skeletons. They are of five grown persons and two children. Dr Mitchell says they were undoubtedly white people The skeletons lay in an orderly manner with the feet of all to the south

Who they were how they came by their deaths and why they were buried in this lonely spot as it must have been at the time of interment are questions that are not answered, and the mystery probably never will be cleared up

WHERE THE AMERICAN RED CROSS MONEY WENT

Paris, (by mail)—The vast and varied activities of the American Red Cross in relieving suffering in the war zone is outlined in the latest report of the civil affairs department of the organization.

During the month of ... department rendered aid to 412,561 civilians, exclusive of the work among allied soldiers. Of this huge army 226,638 were refugees from the war stricken regions. In the early days of the German offensive thousands of refugees passed through Paris daily, most of them practically destitute and suffering from exposure and hardships of the hurried flight. American Red Cross emergency committees met them at the stations and supplied aid. A large percentage of the refugees so assisted were children.

The supplies distributed by all the bureaus during the month include 206,710 garments, 56,647 pairs of shoes, 17,222 articles of furniture, 60,073 articles of bedding and household linen, 668,672 pounds of food, 85,570 yards of cloth, and 4,287 articles of hospital equipment and supplies.

Some of the other activities in succoring the war stricken include 17 civilian hospitals with 1,698 beds; also a new hospital for soldiers who have lost limbs. Three refugee homes are housing 1,500 homeless children from the invaded territory. In Paris alone 32,000 school children are procuring supplementary food for noontime luncheons from the Red Cross. Sixty-one dispensaries for children or tubercular refugees cared for 45,028 patients and two workshops have been completed for re-education of war cripples. Money grants totaling 921,485 francs were given to other organizations for relief work of which more than one half went for aid of tuberculur sufferers and $45,358 francs to war refugees.

Paris.—(by mail.) American soldiers billeted in a French village behind the firing lines recently surprised and won the gratitude of the women of that village by giving it a regular house cleaning last June. Telling of the incident in a Red Cross hospital an American soldier said:

"The women and girls were in the fields cultivating. At night they were too tired to do house work yet the whole village needed it. One day when they were all in the fields us boys turned to and cleaned up that burg.

"We washed every window in the place and swept and scrubbed everything that would stand it. When the women came that night they were so pleased they cried. After that they couldn't do enough for us and were proud when we would let them have a shirt to wash."

BASEBALL MAGNATES FACE KNOTTY PROBLEMS

New York.—Major league baseball magnates face a knotty problem at the coming annual meetings when they will be called upon to decide the status of the players at present under contract or reserve. Very few of the club owners hold the opinion apparently that it will be possible to resume baseball operations next spring. If such proves to be the case and there are few indications to the contrary it would appear that the majority of players who figured in the 1918 pennant races will not receive contracts during the early months of next year.

According to the present system it is mandatory upon the clubs to renew their options or reserve clause upon players not later than January 1 each year and to follow this action by mailing contracts to the players not later than February 1. It is extremely doubtful if this procedure will be followed in 1919. Under the ordinary ruling a player who did not receive his contract by March 1 would become a free agent and upon the resumption of big league baseball would be in a position to sell his services to the highest bidder.

It is understood however that the magnates will hold that the business of baseball was suspended under instructions from the government and that since the right to operate was beyond their control all contracts and other clauses are suspended automatically. Under this construction the contract of the player carries over until such time as the government gives consent for a renewal of the business of baseball. Thus if the professional leagues do not resume until 1920 the year of 1919 would be considered as nonexistent in so far as it might affect a player's contract.

There is still another angle to the proposition which involves the magnates and the two major leagues as individuals and cooperating business organizations. It might be held to be within their rights to refuse to negotiate with or for the services of a player who previously to the suspension of the game, was the property of another club. If such action were generally adopted the player would be obliged to report back to his original club for a renewal of his contract or a release if he desired to reenter play in either of the big leagues.

HELMETS ON GRAVES SHOW THE NATIONALITY

With the American Army in France, (by mail)—By their helmets you shall know their graves.

It's the case over the battlefield that stretches north from the Marne over rolling hills covered with grain fields and woods.

As the German forces retired they left many dead behind. American troops following buried these Germans where they fell at the first opportunity. Usually the graves are marked with nothing but a German helmet on the fresh mound of earth.

Sometimes a stick is erected or a cross depending on the intensity of artillery fire in the region and the time at the disposal of the moppers up. Sometimes the German helmet is on top of the cross. Once on the grave the helmets are untouched.

The American dead were buried in groups farther back when possible. Sometimes it couldn't be done. Then a silent group of doughboys buried their fallen by the roadside.

These too are recognized by the helmets on the fresh earth mounds with crosses at the head, and usually a bottle stuck in the earth into which data regarding the fallen fighter was hastily scribbled and placed by his comrades. Some day it can be put ... and information ... folks.

BARGES ON DRAINAGE CANAL.

From the Chicago Tribune.

In years to come September 21 may be celebrated as an epoch making day in Chicago's maritime history, for on that day the first fleet of barges under their own power, set out for their maiden journey from Chicago down the drainage canal.

The fleet consisted of one steam barge and two others in tow loaded with about three hundred barrels of salt and a large quantity of rock salt consigned to La Salle, Ill. At La Salle the fleet takes on a cargo of coal to bring back to Chicago.

It was something of an occasion for it was the fruition of 15 years of earnest endeavor by a number of forces which are convinced that the greater expansion of the nation's commerce lies through the building and use of waterways.

The start was made with considerable caution. For instance, the motive barge and the second one carried the cargo. The tail end barge of the train ran empty. It was for this reason that a course to be traversed was the inland waterway uncharted. There might be hidden reefs and it was planned, if the motor boats went aground, to have an empty hand to lighter to.

ONE AMERICAN (?) TOWN BUYS NO LIBERTY BONDS

Lancaster.—This county of plain sects and conscientious objectors includes probably the only hamlet in the country where a Liberty bond has not been sold nor a War Savings stamp disposed of.

Five miles east of New Holland there rises a bushy scrubby hill, known as the Welsh mountain because of its settlers and now inhabited by about 50 families of negroes.

It was there that Abe Buzzard and his cohorts took refuge when state officers years ago attempted to round up the notorious horse thieves that were roving eastern Pennsylvania. Crude stone monuments still stand as markers of spots where battles with the constables were fought.

The negroes are now under spiritual care of a Mennonite minister, and a small mission has been established atop the mountain. But booze and congenial tendencies still combine to create lawlessness, and state constables periodically are called to maintain order.

Dugouts in the side of the mountain, made by the horse thieves when first they sought refuge among the underbrush of the hillsides are still used as dwellings by the negroes of the present day. The only regular income the villagers have is the money paid them at the mission for broom making and carpet weaving. These trades were learned by many of the inhabitants while they were "doing time."

They haven't given anything to help finance the war.

Nobody ever thought it worth while to call upon them for a subscription.

SHOP EARLY.

Do your Christmas shopping early is more than ever wise advice and, at this time, advice which must be followed in order not to interfere with the government's war program. The Council of National Defense, in a special bulletin to women, who do a large share of the Christmas buying, urges that as much Christmas shopping as possible be done in October and completed by November 15. Other suggestions are:

That the articles purchased be chosen with reference to the actual needs of the individuals for whom they are intended. The only exceptions to this should be in the case of toys for little children.

That for gifts which must be sent by mail, express or freight small, light articles are to be chosen.

That purchasers carry home small packages and do not ask for frequent or special deliveries.

That wherever possible gifts be delivered in person rather than by mail or express.

That all packages cards etc., which must be sent by mail or express be started by December 5 at latest.

The state councils have ben asked to see that the dealers keep their agreement not to hire extra help or lengthen the hours at Christmas time.

BASEBALL FOR FRENCH.

From the Kansas City Star.

Systematic training of men to play baseball will be organized throughout the French army by the Young Men's Christian Association, following the formal request of General Cottex, of the ministry of war. Eight centers already have been established to train French instructors and these centers are expected to furnish enough teachers to cover the entire French army.

Baseball instruction in the French army has been placed under P. R. Carpenter, of Worcester, Mass. The rules of the game have been translated and will be distributed among the poilus.

I consider this game constitutes excellent exercise develops precision and quickness of eye and is an attractive pastime," said General Cottes in his request that the game be adopted.

Johnny Evers, the former National league second baseman, recently visited General Vidal's headquarters at Besanon, where he demonstrated the game to the officers' school. After nine days of instruction the young cadets played a five-inning game.

"They were particularly impressed with our manner of throwing a baseball, for it is more efficient than the present French method of throwing grenades which is done straight arm," said Evers.

Well Raised.

From Everybody's.

A negro mammy had a family of boys so well behaved that one day her mistress asked,

"Sally, how did you raise your boys so well?"

"Ah'll tell you, missus," answered Sally, "Ah raised dem boys with a barrel stave and Ah raise 'em frequent."

My Pledge.

America shall win the war.
I will save.
I will sacrifice.
I will endure.
I will fight cheerfully, and do my utmost, as the whole issue of the struggle depended on me alone.

Some Bricks Which Will Go Into Building Peace Foundation

By Frank H. Simonds.

(Copyright, 1918, New York Tribune.)

The movement of events has carried all peace talk past the points set out by President Wilson in his speech last January—known as the 14 principles of a permanent peace. He has himself since that memorable speech furnished addenda which can not be overlooked. The generals of the allies have furnished other conditions. All the allied governments with armies in the field have recognized the claim of the Czecho-Slovaks to liberty. This means the disintegration of Austria. Bulgaria has since surrendered unconditionally and retired from the field. This eliminates practically the whole Balkan question as it was conceived at the moment of the president's January address. There was before that and continues to be, general agreement among the allies that the future Turkey shall be limited to what is known as the present Anatolian provinces. Only the details of the status of Constantinople, the Dardenelles, sea of Marmora and the Bosphorus are left to settle. The main thing to be considered now is the Polish matter—a Polish state and its boundaries.

To set up a Jugo-Slovak state in the present confines of Austria, probably means the utter destruction of Austria. If Germany is prepared to accept this, she accepts it with the mental reservation that the German and probably the Hungarian portions of the present Austrian empire will eventually fall completely under her sway.

In the president's contemplation of a government of the Poles, he naturally expected to make a nation strong enough to maintain itself. This means that Galicia will go to Poland, that what has been known as Russian Poland will be added to the new state and a considerable section taken out of Germany, at least out of the Silesia which Frederick the Great wrested from Maria Theresa. Continuing the discussion of this matter, Mr. Simonds adds:

President Wilson's response to the German notes has cleared the atmosphere and placed squarely upon the shoulders of the German government the responsibility for the success or the failure of its effort to get an armistice. With the preliminary conditions outlined in Mr. Wilson's two notes, the German has to comply if he desires to continue his application for an armistice. If he continues his application, then it will be the duty of the president to transmit any further application to the governments of our allies, and, in concert with them, frame a response. What we shall next have, in case the German is ready to surrender, is a formal request made of the president or made of the allied governments, collectively, for an armistice.

As to Turkey, we in America have no legal right to enter into any discussion of the Turkish and Bulgar questions, because we have not made war upon either. But the solutions to be expected are simple and logical. We may expect to see Bulgaria get back her Thracian province, north of the Enos-Midia line, won in the first Balkan war and lost in the second, we may expect to see her old Dobrudja province, also lost in 1913, but unnecessary to the safety of a Rumania now become a really considerable state. The internationalization of the Dardanelles and of Constantinople, which is a part of Mr. Wilson's program, is equally a part of the program of the allies. The restriction of the Turk to the Osmanli-peopled regions of Anatolia exists in both programs, as does a liberated and protected Armenia. As to Mesopotamia and Syria, the French and British who have liberated them are likely to stay, with the full approval of the inhabitants. Palestine may be an internationalized state, and the balance of the Arabian districts have already achieved independence under their own sovereign.

Polish Question Difficult.

There is left the question of Poland, and it is the most difficult of all. If you give to the new Poland, which will indubitably include Russian and Austrian Polish districts and thus become a state of upward of 18,000,000 people, those German, or rather Prussian, circles in which the Poles are clearly a majority, you will deprive Germany of much of Silesia, all of Posen and a considerable fraction of both East and West Prussia. East Prussia will be isolated from the main German mass by a strip of territory extending down the west bank of the Vistula to the Baltic and Danzig; a hostile frontier will be carried almost to Frankfort-on-Oder, and this within striking distance of Berlin itself.

But by contrast, with Posen and Silesia, so far as it is Polish, the new Poland will be incomplete, and there will survive a Polish question. And without Danzig and a window on the sea the new Poland will be economically and industrially at the mercy of Germany, exactly as Serbia was at the mercy of Austria-Hungary in the evil times before the present war. And the Serbian grievance was one of the causes of the world conflagration. Finally, nowhere in Europe has the persecution of a subject race been more brutal than in the Polish circles of Prussia. To turn the Prussian Poles back to the old slavery would thus be to do violence to all the spirit of the President's declaration.

Mr. Wilson's program of peace, as modified by events which have occurred since his January declaration (the 14 principles of a permanent peace), it divides itself into the redressing of the immediate wrongs of the present conflict expressed in the conquest and devastation of countries attacked by Germany and Austria, the abolition of certain wrongs surviving from 1866 and 1871, in the case of Italy and France, which belong actually in the category of the more recent crimes, and finally the liberation of subject races and fractions of races all over Europe and Asia Minor, and thus the removal of all the more familiar causes of all wars. Once these things have been written into a treaty of peace, then Mr. Wilson has formulated a program for the organization of the already reorganized world on the basis of a league of peace. But all programs for such an organization must derive their authority from the league of nations, when constituted, and are not details in the restoration of peace at the present moment.

Having said these things, I return now for the moment to the discussion of the more immediate question, that of peace. Does Germany mean what she says or is she conducting a new and even more daring and gigantic peace offensive designed to do two things, to create discord among the nations fighting her and to deprive the leaders of these nations of the support of their own publics, while rallying her own people to a new sacrifice? No man is justified in refusing to consider the possibility that Germany is acting in good faith, but who can believe it, who can trust the German, until actual guarantees have been given?

Must Surrender Metz.

In all human probability the question of peace or war will turn on Germany's willingness to evacuate Alsace-Lorraine. If she is in earnest and acting in good faith, then she will agree to the surrender of Metz and Strassburg, precisely as she demanded in July, 1914, that France should evacuate Verdun and Epinal, as a guarantee of neutrality. She will consent because there is no other possibility of gaining an armistice, because Foch and Haig and Pershing are not going to surrender the advantages so dearly purchased in recent weeks and permit Germany to reorganize her beaten armies and renew the fight in good condition next spring at the line selected by her.

But if Germany is acting in bad faith, then she will refuse to surrender Metz and Strassburg, she will attempt to rouse the people of America, Britain and Italy by arguing that they are kept in the fight because of French ambitions, she will seek to sow discord among her enemies, she will gamble on a possible willingness of the president to be her advocate, and she will calculate that rather than surrender Alsace and Lorraine her people will consent to prolong the war, that Germany will rise to the threat of what will be held by her to be mutilation, as France rose in the last days of Louis XIV and again in 1792.

Our greatest peril now lies in thinking of the war as over or accepting the words of the German when these words are not translated into corresponding deeds. The German is talking peace in acceptable words, but he is spreading ruin and waste over the richest and fairest fields of Europe. Would he continue to do this if he expected to make peace presently on terms which would compel him to indemnify his victims for his current crimes? Would he burn Cambrai on Monday if he expected on Saturday to make peace with the guaranteed indemnification of the people of Cambrai? At least it does not seem likely.

We have come to the most critical moment in more than four years of struggle. We have won the war, we have beaten the German, but we have not yet reached the point where we can safely accept his verbal assurances that he desires to make peace on our terms. Short of the acceptance by the German of the fact of defeat, short of his consent to the expression in practical terms of our victory, we cannot safely or wisely consent to an armistice or permit ourselves to believe our labors are at an end.

We cannot forget that the German attacked the civilized world four years ago and in defiance of all his written and spoken pledges. We cannot forget that for four years he has continued to disregard all pledges until the moment when his armies were beaten and all chance of a victor's peace escaped him. We must act with this knowledge in mind; we must demand immediate guarantees which will prevent a resumption of the contest under conditions favorable to Germany next spring. Above all else, we must in our armistice translate our victory in positive terms.

These terms are the surrender of Alsace-Lorraine and Italia Irredenta, the temporary occupation of the left bank of the Rhine from Holland to Switzerland and the prompt demobilization of the German army and navy. Anything else would be a mockery, a negation of all that the world has striven for over four years of agony, a sure foundation for a new German adventure and aggression. I do not see how we can negotiate with Germany in arms; I do not see how we can ask less than unconditional surrender, however that phrase may be interpreted, nor do I see how that phrase can be rationally interpreted save by the demand that the Germans retire behind the Rhine and once and for all abandon those French cities of Metz and Strassburg, which have been the foundations, morally as well as militarily, of her great crime against civilization.

MOVABLE MOVIES ARE NEAR THE FRONT NOW

At the Italian Front.—(by mail)—One of the problems with which the American Red Cross has dealt in the zone of war is the question of amusement for the soldiers who are sacrificing their lives for the cause of civilization.

The men who are sustaining and advancing the lines not only deserve recreation, but they absolutely require it in order to bear the nerve strain of their grim task. This relaxation is furnished by rest houses, canteens where American coffee and American jam are served, even in the near vicinity of the front lines. But a more recent innovation under shell-fire is the moving picture show. This idea is fast becoming a reality through establishment of portable cinema machines, which can be carried around from one to another of the American Red Cross front line canteens on an automobile especially fitted for the purpose, giving entertainments at each stop. These cinematograph outfits will be placed on Ford chassis and completely equipped for their purpose.

The plan is still a new one, which is being perfected by the military affairs department of the A. R. C. One equipment of this sort has already been purchased consisting of an Aster meter, a moving picture machine and supplementary material. Other outfits will follow. Films have been promised from various sources, and it is hoped to establish a regular supply of pictures. Perhaps there will not be a Broadway standard of perfection in these dugout movies, but it will be as near it as the workers can make it.

There is one American Red Cross lieutenant in charge of a rolling canteen at the Italian front who has already forestalled the plan for a portable moving picture exhibition by establishing his own private show at his front line rest house. Lieutenant Waterbury has found a comparatively sheltered corner near his canteen, where he has installed a moving picture machine, temporarily loaned to him by the Italian military authorities. The constant guns and the occasional bursting of shells from a realistic orchestral accompaniment to the show. It is very popular with the Italian soldiers during their short hours of release from trench and battery service.

RED CROSS IS USING BIG PARK NEAR PARIS

Paris (by mail)—Buffalo Park, located just outside the gates of the city, in the direction of Neuilly, and deriving its name from the character of the outdoor entertainments given there for years, has been taken over by the American Red Cross as a park for its lorries and ambulances.

It was in Buffalo Park that Buffalo Bill's "Wild West Show" performed to the huge delight of juvenile Paris.

The United States has extended $5,000,000 more credit to Belgium.

What Willie Got.

Teacher—"A woman divided a pie among her four children—John, Mary, Jane and Willie. John got one-half of the pie, Mary one-fourth and Jane one-sixth. What did Willie get?" Bright Boy—"Huh! Willie got stung!"

Output of Copper.

American copper mines turned out 218,579,133 pounds of copper in 1912, nearly 2,000,000 less than in 1911, but the value was $8,502,482 greater.

THE WESTERN FRONT AT HOME

Earn and give. For a year the young people of America have been coached in thrift. Instead of the old problem in the arithmetic book, "If Mary's mother gave her three apples, Jane gave her two, and she ate one, how many would she have?" the third grade girl is now sent to the blackboard to solve, "How many Thrift stamps at 25 cents apiece will Mary own at the end of 12 months if she saves 10 cents a week?"

The girl in the grade above her is learning in her arithmetic lesson how many Thrift stamps it takes to buy the yarn for 500 helmets for the soldiers in France. Still farther on the eighth grader is told to figure in terms of War Savings stamps how much it costs to supply a regiment of Uncle Sam's men with shelter tents.

And now the Earn and Give club of the younger girls of the Young Women's Christian association is organized to turn those Thrift lessons into giving. The children of America have been turning in pennies and nickles and pasting a green stamp on their Thrift card. The Earn and Give club can now use some of those cards and War Savings stamps in their campaign among the younger people for the united war fund.

This fall when the war council of the Y. W. C. A. made plans for the 1918 war drive, it included in its program the rule that no young girls under eighteen can do any soliciting, on the streets or otherwise. They can give, but they can only give by earning. Consequently in order to co-ordinate the efforts of the girls in all the districts over the country, the Earn and Give club is enrolling members and has given out an estimate of $5 apiece to be earned for the war fund campaign by the American girls who still count their age in 'teens. Five dollars apiece from the younger girls of the country will mean that the nation as a whole will fill its charitable organizations' war chest.

Some high school girl in New York city is going to earn her $5 by shining her own shoes instead of stopping at the Greek stand on her way to school and by making her own sandwiches for her noon lunch. Out in Iowa the girl who has been spending 15 cents plus war tax for a movie three nights a week is going to draw a line through the movie habit except when there is an especially good bill. More than one girl plans to clean all her own gloves this winter and to salvage all the paper and collections of junk about the house which should be sold to the junk man to be worked over into some productive industry. The girls in their 'teens are going to earn instead of ask others for the money. They are to sacrifice and give in their own names and older women will make the public requests for money elsewhere.

Many of the girls who are waiting to join the Earn and Give club are already Patriotic leaguers, and they have learned several practical lessons in the thrift that will make them effective members of the new club by their conservation of fruits and vegetables. They have canned and pickled. Now when the end of summer brings the beginning of school they will change their thrift into winter thrift and begin saving their $5 for the Y. W. C. A. war fund

"Wherever You Are Is the Western Front" is the slogan which the Earn and Give club has adopted. Anna, one wiry thirteen-year-old daughter of New York's East side, who was one of the first and youngest members to join the campaign at a New York settlement house, had to have it explained to her that instead of western front meaning fight and fight meaning fists, the western front means work and work means save in order to give.

The girl who joins the Earn and Give club will discover that in conjunction with her working and saving in order that her club will furnish its quota of the money that is going to help the girls like herself in France and Belgium, she will also find numerous ways in the community to help the war that she had never dreamed of. She will see that all the fruit pits and stones that can be saved from her own dining table and from those of her neighbors, are dropped into the little red barrel at the corner, in order that the carbon which the seeds contain can be used in making charcoal for the American soldiers' gas masks. She will save all the tin foil that she sees for the Red Cross. She will help collect clothing for the French and Belgium orphans and perhaps send them some of her own.

School girls in India, children from squalid, dingy homes, with absolutely no spending money, gave last year to Belgian and Armenian relief when they themselves were not getting enough to eat. They gave up their meat once a week for the Belgians, though they only had it twice a week themselves, and for the Armenians they set aside the handful of fresh grain that otherwise each girl would have ground in her own little stone mill. Both contributions, from all the girls in one missionary's school, amounted only to $5 a month. "But it was a tremendous sacrifice," their teacher writes, "although a joyous one. It actually meant less bread each day, and once a week a meal of dry bread and water. This was done by 80 girls from the meanest homes in the world—children between the ages of five and fifteen."

Four hundred thousand girls in 47 states have become Patriotic Leaguers since America declared war. If as many school girls and working girls from all classes pledge to earn and give, the united war fund campaigners will have $2,000,000 of their $170,500,000.

THE SECOND LINE OF DEFENSE

From the Mississippi valley to the flaming front in Flanders is not as far today as the distance from Paris to Berlin The Atlantic ocean is not as wide as the River Somme The girl in the munition factory in the ... West is very close to her brother in the front-line trenches If he ... falters, if one untrue fuse slips ... the careful scrutiny of the inspector the lives of American soldiers pay the price.

It is as necessary to keep the girl who makes the shells physically fit and high of courage as the man who fires the gun.

The glory and excitement of war are for the man in khaki. Grinding, monotonous labor far away from the flying flags and martial music is the portion of the girl who makes munitions.

One and a half million women and girls have marched into the service of the United States government, to take the places of the men who have been called to the colors. With every draft and with the opening of every munition cantonment the number is multiplied. These girls work long hours and the work is hard and monotonous. Furthermore, they work at high nervous tension. On the skill of their fingers and the accuracy of their eyes depends the lives of many soldiers, the winning or losing of many battles.

"I can't sleep at night because I'm so afraid I may have passed on something that was not quite true," said one young girl not yet in her twenties, who inspected hundreds of torpedoes every day.

Unless something can make this girl forget at night, and find some rest, her hand will lose its cunning.

"Nights and Sundays," said another, "I walk and walk, and I never go the same route twice until I have worn out all the others, and yet I can't forget that perhaps some time, somehow, during the day something may have gone through that was not quite right."

"I was just on the edge of going back home," said another "I couldn't stand it. Then the recreation leader asked me if I played basket ball, and I told her I was too old. I'm twenty-eight. She insisted that I just try throwing the ball, and now I'm captain of the basket ball team. I play tennis, and can 'set up' and 'wig-wag,' and they're going to make me forewoman of the room. That would have frightened me to death once. But everything is different now, that we have our War Service club."

The war department had seen the need of occupations for out-of-work hours if the employees were to work at their greatest efficiency, and through the ordnance department asked the Young Women's Christian Association for recreation leaders, to line up the girls and direct their free-time pleasures.

The government reminded the Y. W. C. A. that as an organization it always had had an interest in the right housing of girls, in the right feeding of girls, and in the right education of girls, and that the intelligent care of these girls in the munitions factories was one of the essentials in the winning of the war. The government could house and feed them. It could put up recreation buildings, but when this was done it was as helpless as the father of a motherless girl. The government is a composite man. He didn't know what a girl should do when the six o'clock factory whistle blew. He only knew she needed looking after and he called to the one woman's organization that for half a century had made a study of the needs of girls. Vaguely, he had an idea that she should be encouraged to play, that she needed wholesome recreation, and some one, wise and sympathetic as a careful mother, to guide her social activities.

The Blue Triangle sent its play lady to salute and go to work. Workers are asked for in recreation buildings of all the 22 federal industrial reservations or munition cantonments which have been opened this summer in several of the states. These reservations sprung up out of the very fields in a few weeks. They are employing thousands of workers. Many of these women have come from far distant homes. The government provided dormitories and mess barracks. In some places it is putting up recreation buildings. Where such a building is not provided by the government, the Y. W. C. A. will furnish it, using one already standing when available, and building when that is necessary. All these buildings, whether government or association-owned, will operate under the sign of the Blue Triangle. They will have big living rooms, assembly rooms for entertainments, club rooms, and gymnasiums. The Blue Triangle will furnish a program of service work, educational classes, games and entertainments. Military and signal corps drills will be in charge of soldiers.

In Washington, the members of the Business Women's council, a Blue Triangle league of the Y. W. C. A., made up of girl government employees, drill twice a week under an army officer, and between five and six o'clock on these days long lines of motorcars are parked to watch the drill.

Wherever possible the recreation equipment includes a field somewhere for outdoor sports.

War clubs are a part of the plan and membership in these involves a pledge to serve to the best of the girl's ability in the ranks of the Woman's Industrial Army—the "second line of defense"—and a promise of loyalty by ... in every possible way the spirit of service.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

MAURICE LEBLANC

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

(CHAPTER EIGHTEEN—Continued)

The cab flew through Passy, crossed the Seine and reached the Issy-les-Moulineaux aviation ground in 10 minutes.

None of the aeroplanes was out, for there was a stiff breeze blowing. Don Luis ran to the sheds. The owners' names were written over the doors.

"Davanne," he muttered. "That's the man I want."

The door of the shed was open. A short, stoutish man, with a long red face, was smoking a cigaret and watching some mechanics working at a monoplane. The little man was Davanne himself, the famous airman.

Don Luis took him aside, and, knowing from the papers the sort of man that he was, opened the conversation so as to surprise him from the start.

"Monsieur," he said unfolding his map of France, "I want to catch up some one who has carried off the woman I love and is making for Nantes by motor. The abduction took place at midnight. It is now about 8 o'clock. Suppose that the motor, which is just a hired taxi with a driver who has no inducement to break his neck, does an average of 20 miles an hour, including stoppages—in 12 hours' time—that is to say, at 12 o'clock our man will have covered 240 miles and reached a spot between Angers and Nantes, at this point on the map."

"Les Ponts-de-Drive," agreed Davanne, who was quietly listening.

"Very well. Suppose, on the other hand, that an aeroplane were to start from Issy-les-Moulineaux at 8 o'clock in the morning and travel at the rate of 60 miles an hour, without stopping—in four hours' time—that is to say, at 12 o'clock—it would reach Les Ponts-de-Drive at the exact moment as the motor. Am I right?"

"Perfectly."

"In that case if we agree, all is well. Does your machine carry a passenger?"

"Sometimes she does."

"Will start at once. What are your terms?"

"It depends. Who are you?"

"Arsene Lupin."

"The devil you are!" exclaimed Davanne, a little taken aback. "I am Arsene Lupin. You must know the best part of what has happened from reading about it in the papers. Well, Florence Lavasseur was kidnaped last night. I am to save her. What's your price?"

"Nothing."

"That's too much!"

"Perhaps, but the adventure amuses me. It will be an advertisement."

"Very well. But your silence is necessary until tomorrow. I'll buy it. Here's 20,000 francs."

Ten minutes later Don Luis was dressed in an airman's suit, cap, and goggles; and an airplane rose to a height of 2,500 feet to avoid the air currents, flew above the Seine and darted due west across France.

Versailles, Maintenon, Chartres.

Don Luis had never been up in an airplane. France had acclaimed the conquest of the air while he was fighting with the Boxers and in the plains of the Sahara. Nevertheless, sensitive though he was to new impressions—and what more exciting impression could he have than this?—he did not experience the heavenly delight of the man who for the first time soars above the earth. What monopolized his thoughts, strained his nerves, and excited his whole being to an exquisite degree was the as yet impossible but inevitable sight of the motor which they were pursuing.

Amid the tremendous swarm of things beneath them, amid the unexpected din of the wings and the engine, in the immensity of the sky, in the infinity of the horizon, his eyes sought nothing but that, and his ears admitted no other sound than the hum of the invisible car. His were the mighty and brutal sensations of the hunter chasing his game. He was the bird of prey whom the distraught quarry has no chance of escaping.

Nogent-le-Rotrou, Le Perte-Bernard, Le Mans. . . .

The two companions did not exchange a single word. Before him Perenna saw Davanne's broad back and powerful neck and shoulders. But, by bending his head a little, he saw the boundless space beneath him; and nothing interested him but the white ribbon of road that ran from town to town and from village to village, at times quite straight, as though a hand had stretched it, and at others lazily winding, broken by a river or a church.

On this ribbon, at some place always closer and closer, were Florence and her abductor!

He never doubted it! The yellow taxi was continuing its patient and plucky little effort. Mile after mile, through plains and villages, fields and forests, it was making Angers, with Les Ponts-de-Drive after, and, right at the end of the ribbon, the unattainable goal: Nantes, Saint-Nazaire, the steamer ready to start, and victory for the scoundrel. . . .

He laughed at the idea. As if there could be a question of any victory, the victory of the falcon over its prey, the victory of the flying bird over the game that runs afoot! Not for a second did he entertain the thought that the enemy might have slunk away by taking another road.

There are some certainties that are equivalent to facts. And this one was so great that it seemed to him that his adversaries were obliged to comply with it. The car was traveling along the road to Nantes. It would cover an average of 20 miles an hour. And as he himself was travelling at the rate of 60 miles, the encounter would take place at the spot named, Les Ponts-de-Drive, and the hour named, 12 o'clock.

A cluster of houses, a huge castle, towers, steeples: Angers. . . .

Don Luis asked Davanne the time. It was 10 minutes to 12.

Already Angers was a vanished vision. Once more the open country, broken up with many colored fields. Through it all, a road.

And, on that road, a yellow motor.

The yellow motor! The brute's motor! The motor with Florence Levasseur!

Don Luis's joy contained no surprise. He knew so well that this was bound to happen!

Davanne turned round and cried:

"That's the one, isn't it?"

"Yes, go straight for them."

The airship dipped through space and caught up the car almost at once. Then Davanne slowed his engine and kept at six hundred feet above the car and a little way behind.

From here they made out all the details. The driver was seated on the left. He wore a gray cap with a black peak. It was one of the deep yellow taxis of the Compagnies des Cometes. It was the taxi which they were pursuing. And Florence was inside with her abductor.

"At last," thought Don Luis, "I have them!"

They flew for some time, keeping the same distance.

Davanne waited for a signal which Don Luis was in no hurry to give. He was revelling in the sensation of his power, with a force made up of mingled pride, hatred, and cruelty. He was indeed the eagle hovering overhead with its talons itching to rend live flesh. Escaped from the cage in which he had been imprisoned, released from the bonds that fastened him, he had come all the way at full flight and was ready to swoop upon the helpless prey.

He lifted himself in his seat and gave Davanne his instructions:

"Be careful," he said, "not to brush too close by them. They might put a bullet into us."

Another minute passed.

Suddenly they saw that, half a miles ahead, the road divided in two, three, thus forming a very wide open space which was still further extended by two triangular patches of grass where the three roads met.

"Now!" asked Davanne, turning to Don Luis.

The surrounding country was deserted.

"Off you go!" cried Don Luis.

The airplane seemed to shoot down suddenly, as though driven by an irresistible force, which sent it flying like an arrow toward the mark. It passed at 300 feet above the car, and then, all at once, checking its career, choosing the spot at which it meant to hit the target, calmly, silently, like a night bird, steering clear of the trees and sign posts, it alighted softly on the grass of the cross roads.

Don Luis sprang out and ran toward the motor, which was coming along at a rapid pace. He stood in the middle of the road, leveled his two revolvers, and shouted:

"Stop, or I fire!"

The terrified driver put on both brakes. The car pulled up.

Don Luis rushed to one of the doors.

There was no one in the car.

CHAPTER XIX.

"The Snare is Laid. Beware, Lupin!"

The power that had impelled Don Luis to battle and victory was so intense that it suffered, so to speak, no check. Disappointment, rage, humiliation, torture, were all swallowed up in an immediate desire for action and information, together with a longing to continue the chase. The rest was but an incident of no importance, which would soon be very simply explained.

The petrified taxi driver was gazing wildly at the peasants coming from the distant farms, attracted by the sound of the airplane. Don Luis took him by the throat and put the barrel of his revolver to the man's temple:

"Tell me what you know—or you're a dead man."

And when the unhappy wretch began to stammer out entreaties:

"It's no use moaning, no use hoping for assistance. . . . Those people won't get here in time. So there's only one way of saving yourself: speak! Last night a gentleman came to Versailles from Paris in a taxi, left it and took yours: is that it?"

"Yes."

"The gentleman had a lady with him?"

"Yes."

"And he engaged you to take him to Nantes?"

"Yes."

"But he changed his mind on the way and told you to put him down?"

"Yes."

"Where?"

"Before we got to Mans, in a little road on the right, with a sort of coach house, looking like a shed, a hundred yards down it. They both got out there."

"And you went on?"

"He paid me to."

"How much?"

"Five hundred francs. And there was another fare waiting at Nantes that I was to pick up and bring back to Paris for a thousand francs more."

"Do you believe in that other fare?"

"No. I think he wanted to put people off the scent by sending them after me to Nantes while he branched off. Still, I had my money."

"And, when you left them, weren't you curious to see what happened?"

"No."

"Take care! A movement of my finger and I blow out your brains. Speak!"

"Well, yes, then. I went back on foot, behind a bank covered with trees. The man had opened the coach house and was starting a small limousine car. The lady did not want to get in. They argued pretty fiercely. He threatened and begged by turns. But I could not hear what they said. She seemed very tired. He gave her a glass of water, which he drew from a tap in the wall. Then she consented. He closed the door on her and took his seat at the wheel."

"A glass of water!" cried Don Luis. "Are you sure he put nothing else into the glass?"

The driver seemed surprised at the question and then answered:

"Yes, I think he did. He took something from his pocket."

"Without the lady's knowledge?"

"Yes, she didn't see."

Don Luis mastered his horror. After all it was impossible that the villain had poisoned Florence in that way, at that place, without anything to warrant so great a hurry. No, it was more likely that he had employed a narcotic, a drug of some sort which would dull Florence's brain and make her incapable of noticing by what new roads and through what towns he was taking her.

"And then," he repeated, "she decided to step in?"

"Yes; and he shut the door and got into the driver's seat. I went away then."

"Before knowing which direction they took?"

"Yes."

"Did you suspect on the way that they thought that they were being followed?"

"Certainly. He did nothing but put his head out of the window."

"Did the lady cry out at all?"

"No."

"Would you know him again if you saw him?"

"No, I'm sure I shouldn't. At Versailles it was dark. And this morning I was too far away. Besides, it's curious, but the first time he struck me as very tall, and this morning, on the contrary, he looked quite a short man, as though bent in two. I can't understand it at all."

Don Luis reflected. It seemed to him that he had asked all the necessary questions. Moreover, a gig drawn by a quick trotting horse was approaching the cross-roads. There were two others behind it. And the groups of peasants were now quite near. He must finish the business.

He said to the chauffeur:

"I can see by your face that you intend to talk about me. Don't do that, my man, it would be foolish of you. Here's a thousand franc note for you. Only, if you blab, I'll make you repent it. That's all I have to say to you."

He turned to Davanne, whose machine was beginning to block the traffic, and asked:

"Can we start?"

"Whenever you like. Where are we going?"

Paying no attention to the movements of the people coming from every side, Don Luis unfolded his map of France and spread it out before him. He experienced a few seconds of anxiety at seeing the complicated tangle of roads and picturing the infinite number of places to which the villain might carry Florence. But he pulled himself together. He did not allow himself to hesitate. He refused even to reflect.

He was determined to find out, and to find out everything, at once, without clues, without useless consideration, simply by the marvelous intuition which invariably guided him at any crisis in his life.

And his self respect also required that he should give Davanne his answer without delay, and that the disappearance of those whom he was pursuing should not seem to embarrass him. With his eyes glued to the map he placed one finger on Paris and another on Le Mans and, even before he had asked himself why the scoundrel had chosen that Paris-Le Mans-Angers route, he knew the answer to the question.

The name of a town had struck him and made the truth appear like a flash of lightning. Alencon! Then and there, by the light of his memory, he penetrated the mystery.

He repeated:

"Where are we going? Back again, bearing to the left."

"Any particular place?"

"Alencon."

"All right," said Davanne. "Lend a hand, some of you. I can make an easy start from that field just there."

Don Luis and a few others helped him and the preparations were soon made. Davenne tested his engine. Everything was in perfect order.

At that moment a powerful racing car, with a siren yelling like a vicious animal, came tearing along the Angers road and promptly stopped. Three men got out and rushed up to the driver. Don Luis recognized them. They were Weber, the deputy chief, and the men who had taken him to the lockup the night before, sent by the Prefect of Police to follow up the scoundrel's tracks.

They had a brief interchange of words with the cab driver, which seemed to put them out; and they kept on gesticulating and plying him with fresh questions while looking at their watches and consulting their road maps.

Don Luis went up to them. He was unrecognizable, with his head wrapped in his aviation cap and his face concealed by his goggles. Changing his voice:

"The birds have flown, Mr. Deputy Chief," he said.

Weber looked at him in utter amazement.

Don Luis groaned.

ITALY ASKS MORE HELP FROM AMERICA

Not Quite Sure Yankee Statesmen Fully Understand Problems of That County.

Rome.—Mario Borea, writing in the Secolo of Milan, remarks how seriously Italy looks at the American political and military problem.

"We greet the first contingents on our front with joy," he writes, "but the question is whether the starry republic will be merely represented in Italy or whether its army will be of such proportions as to give effective assistance to our fighters.

"The situation on our front certainly is not stationary. A new Austrian offensive this year is not probable, it is possible. That would be consonant with the tactics followed by the enemy, who might have projected a new combined Austro-German offensive, as in last October.

"We cannot know how long the French will succeed in keeping all the German strength on the western front engaged. If their pressure should diminish Germany probably would send a number of divisions to attempt with the Austrians to wipe out the record of defeat suffered in France by a victory over us. That would improve their morale and help them close the score of 1918 less disastrously.

"We hope this simple hypothesis will be realized. In any case it is necessary to examine the military situation for next year. If the allies, as is probable, should continue to maintain the initiative we also should hearten ourselves. The war should not end with the liberation of our invaded territories. In any case every one can see how we should be assisted and be able to count on the cooperation of a material number of allied troops.

"For obvious reasons we cannot count on the English or the French, who are too busy elsewhere, and for that reason we turn to the Americans, who have large forces at their disposal.

"The Americans have 3,000,000 men under arms and with the new law which extends the age limits for the draft 12,000,000 of men will soon be at the disposal of the government in Washington.

"There is a delicate point involved. I do not know what attitude the government of Italy and the army commanders have taken in regard to such a cooperation of an adequate number of Americans on our front. If the government and commanders are favorable, it remains to be seen what is thought of it on the other side of the Atlantic.

"We know the theory of the American general staff, which is the same as that of the French general staff, that the war so to speak, must be won on the western front, but this is not considered the greatest difficulty by American public opinion. A Washington cable to the London Times says:

"The United States is a democracy in which the opinion of the government in the long run is that of the people.

"This was proved to us last year when war war declared. The American general staff opposed sending troops to France in less than a year, to the end that the men could be instructed. However, the newspapers repudiated the theory and began a vigorous campaign, which so influenced American opinion that in the space of two months the first American contingent, under the command of General Pershing, landed on the soil of France.

"The difficulty, if there be any, would rest with the American people. What do the Americans think about sending a large army to Italy? Probably they have not formed an exact opinion. We have a few enthusiastic friends in the United States who understand the justice of our cause, and we have detractors who arouse suspicion about our war aims, but the great mass of the American people is ill informed, or not informed at all and is indifferent to what concerns Italy.

"That does not surprise. The fault is ours. The government of Italy should declare itself at one with President Wilson about the aims of the war. It should not leave the slightest doubt about our policy concerning the nationalities oppressed by Austria. The American soldiers who come to our front should be made to know for what cause they are to fight and die. In that way we can have American public opinion with us, and what we desire—the effective assistance of their forces on our front."

GERMAN SYNDICATE GETS LORRAINE MINES

Amsterdam (by mail)—The immense coal and iron mines and smelting works owned by Baron De Wendel in Lorraine have been sold to a German syndicate for the normal equivalent of $65,000,000 on the ground that they were chiefly owned by French citizens. The process by which this great property was transferred from French to German ownership is called "compulsory liquidation."

Baron De Wendel, reputed to be one of the richest men in Europe, was chief owner of the Lorraine coal and iron fields. His possessions in German Lorraine have long excited the cupidity of the German capitalists. The potential ore supply in this field alone has been estimated at $1,900,000,000.

The property was divided by the Germans in two groups. The iron fields were sold to a steel combine for 60,000,000 marks. The smelting works and coal mines were purchased for 210,000,000 marks by a syndicate headed by Councillor Vonraumer. The state reserved the right to participation to the extent of 51 per cent in the purchase of the properties.

The Frankfort Zeitung, in reporting the sale says the prices were "reasonable," indicating that the German steel, iron and coal magnate made good bargains.

FOURTH GOODWIN DIVORCE.

From the New York Review.

Marjorie Moreland has filed a suit for divorce against Nat C. Goodwin in the supreme court of Kings county, and the case has been quietly going on without attracting any publicity. This is the fourth divorce of the famous matrimonial comedian, and it is reported that he is getting ready to play the role of a bridegroom again with his leading lady as the happy bride. Miss Moreland and Goodwin have been separated for some time. Max D. Steuer, Miss Moreland's attorney, declined to give out any details of the action.

His Logic.

Villager—I'm just 100 years old.

Tourist—Well, I doubt if you'll see another 100.

SOMETHING IN HIS SURE

Quality That May Have a Good Deal to Do With American Soldiers' Fighting Ability.

"Many letters from the soldiers abroad appear from time to time in the old home paper," said Uncle Rod Tarpy. "Frequently they are a trifle shaky in composition, but writes that France is sure a fine country, and that the two-wheel cars sure look funny, that hels papa's rheumatism is bothering and it was sure too bad that sis broke her leg, and says mamma mustn't worry, because he is sure coming all right, and for everybody to write often, for he sure gets lonesome to hear from home—and so on, all boyish and commonplace, but very 'sure.'

"Then presently the news comes that Private Emory Tinker has been awarded a distinguished service cross because, 'seeing six Germans about to make a prisoner of his corporal and advanced on the Germans, killing all of them to bring back his corporal to our lines.' And we wonder if he 'sure' of himself isn't what makes our Yankee lad invincible"—Kansas City Star.

The Spirit That Counts.

Harmon Marsh was telling of a letter received from an old chum in the East, an official in one of Uncle Sam's shipyards. Almost every day from five to fourteen trainloads of soldiers pass the plant, and they stick their heads out of the car windows and cheer when they see the big steel hulls and hear the rattle of the riveters.

One day a train stopped a moment in front of the yard and one of the men yelled at them: "We're building these ships to bring you back from France." At once came the reply: "We're with bringing us back; give us a ship to take us over."

Leek Lovelier Than Lily.

Vegetables are not usually regarded a subject for eloquence. But Sir Charles Wakefield certainly attained some fine flights recently on the presentation of a basket of fruit and vegetables to the lord mayor of London. The master of the Gardeners' company first declared that the possession of an allotment was an almost certain test of good citizenship, and growing alliterative in his enthusiasm, said he saw more beauty in the potato than in a pansy, more loveliness in a leek than in a lily, more honor in cultivating the humble cabbage than in causing the cultured carnation to futher displays of pride. It is to be noted, however, that the declension to which Sir Charles acted as spokesman presented the lady mayoress with a bunch of orchids and not of leeks such as Sir Charles statements might have led the lady to expect.

GREAT SALVAGE WORK BEING DONE IN FRANCE

Army Is Closely Followed By Another Army Which Picks Up Everything of Value.

American Supply Headquarters, Tours, France (by mail): Two carloads of hair brushes abandoned by American soldiers in camps were among the wreckage of battle brought to the great salvage depot of the American army here. This was only one little item in the grist of debris and litter from the fighting zone which has been carefully gathered up and sent here for restoration.

Five thousand persons are employed in renovating and repairing this wreckage. The material thus saved and restored to use is said amounted in value last month to $2,000,000.

In the big battle around Chateau-Thierry as our fighting men went over the top, they were followed closely by detachments of noncombatant troops to grope amid the wreckage and debris and save it from complete abandonment and loss. Each detachment comprised 29 enlisted men and an officer. They had trucks and derricks and all the paraphernalia for gathering broken down cars, rifles, cartridge belts, helmets, clothing and the vast stores of abandoned army material left in the track of a contest and to send it back to the salvage depot here.

Strange things have come out of this war but none stranger than this gigantic salvage plant where everything from crippled guns and cannon to old army shoes and caps is saved from total loss and turned back to some useful end at the front. At first people looked at it as a freak. There was nothing like it in the civil war or the more recent Boer war. It started on a small scale with 50 hands.

Make Monster Saving.

But now, after a few months it is a monster industry with huge buildings and towering stacks. It will save the government $35,000,000 the first year, and it may reach $50,000,000. This is no freak. It is cold hard saving of millions of dollars at a time when material is scarce and shipping difficult. It is the anti waste campaign brought to its highest development by a huge government undertaking.

Going over the plant there was an opportunity to see the remarkable details of this salvage. The wreckage of the battlefield is only one of the sources of this salvage explained our escort, but it is the greatest source. As men springs into action they throw aside everything not absolutely essential. There is besides the litter of the actual fighting, broken and abandoned goods of every conceivable nature.

It is not only what is left by our own troops but what is left by the enemy, often great stocks of guns, ammunition, bayonets and every kind of fighting material.

Even when there is no battle, the mere shift of a division of troops leaves an enormous stock of abandoned goods. Moved on short orders, the men pick up a few fighting essentials—guns, blankets emergency rations and leave the rest behind, books, extra cloths, shoes etc. The men arrive from America with an undue amount of clothing. It is trimmed down at the first training camp, again it is trimmed down as they go to the front, and each new trimming of thousands of men means another huge stock for salvage.

Like Great Factory.

In the main building, a quarter of a mile long there was a roar of a vast and diversified industry, with over 4,000 women workers and a thousand men with long batteries of sewing machines, shoe machines, rubber and harness machines such as one sees in the great factory districts with the same huge installation of engines, boilers, disinfecting plants, laundries, and the whirr of big metal machines for making over the many branches of ordnance.

Hundreds of women were sorting the uniforms and underclothing just come from the salvage processes. There were some 200,000 blouses on these towering shelves, and as many more of all the other articles of soldier wear. They were in bundles, looking very fresh and clean, quite like the stock of a well equipped clothing establishment. The women were arranging the garments in three classes.

Class A—Garments in good order practically the same as new, to be sent back to the front as part of the supply for fighting troops.

Class B—Garments partly worn out but fully repaired, to be sent to the base ports on the coast, for labor troops and stevedores.

Class C—Garments much worn but in a fair state of preservation, to be sent to the prison camps for German prisoners.

This was significant of what the German prisoners were getting, not the best, to be sure, and not the same goods as our own men but worn goods in a fair state of preservation. It seemed to be an answer to the outcry that the German prisoners were getting the same as our men.

One could follow the stages of the huge stacks of hob-nail army shoes from the time they arrived, covered with the mud and grime of the trenches and the battlefield through process after process of disinfection cleaning, repairing grading until they finally emerged in stocks of substantial footwear. Like the garments, these were classed to go back to the fighting troops, or to the stevedores, or to the German prisoners.

Infinite Variety of Things.

It was the same with the infinite variety of army equipment going through the salvage process, rubber boots and arctics, shelter tents, harness for artillery, saddles, bridles, stirrups. All of it was on a prodigious scale, 50,000 garments a day, 1,000 pairs of rubber boots a day at the army price of $2.65 a pair. The salvage of all kinds of rubber articles was 99 per cent, or almost a complete saving of everything received.

More than $1,000,000 worth of clothing was saved last month, and the magnitude of the work as a whole can be judged from these figures of the output: Shoes, $325,120; clothing, $1,307,026; harness and leather, $57,000; rubber, $90,000; canvas and webbing, $35,000.

There are some curious things gathered up in this litter of the camps and battlefields, for example, three fireless cookers. Enough books and magazines are left behind to stock several libraries. Pictures and knick-knacks with which the tents are decorated before the rush comes, are abundant. Family pictures and belongings of a personal character are carefully preserved in little bags to be returned to their owner or his family if that is possible.

Besides restoring articles for use, every scrap of wool cloth, leather, metal, hat bands, is saved to be turned into some other form of useful article, or is sold. The sale of junk, tin cans and scraps last month netted 18,400 francs.

Women workers are chiefly French and Belgian many of them refugees from [illegible] districts so that the work [illegible] they get [illegible]

7 francs a day working from 7 to 11:30 and from 1:30 to 6. The wages paid in month were 11,400 francs. But all the cost of wages and new material was less than 10 per cent of the value of the articles produced for army uses, totaling $2,500,000 for the month—a tribute to the ingenuity which has produced this unique establishment of war economy.

Spain's New Economic Policy.

From the New York Times.

The Spanish minister of public works has outlined the following steps which the present government hopes to take in order to set in motion the work of Spain's economic reconstitution:

(1) Nationalization of the trunk railways and changes in legislation in regard to the secondary railways.

(2) Repolarization of concessions granted for the exploitation of the large water courses.

(3) Extensive budgeting for public works and the allocation of the sums which parliament may vote.

(4) A modification of the regulations in regard to mining.

(5) Creation of an agricultural credit organization.

(6) Organization of an agronomic service and the work of reafforestation and.

(7) The creation of an organization which will forthwith prepare the economic life of Spain both for the period of transition between war and peace and for the lines of policy which will have to be followed after the war.

The projects already presented to the cortes in the present session relate to the electrification of Pajares Pass the Villabino Reinosa, the drainage of swamps and marshes, preservation of woods and potash salts.

According to naval advices, the minister stated that all his plans tend in the direction of an increased intervention of the state and of an intense economic nationalism which he considers to be absolutely indispensable in order that Spain may not be at the end of the war economically invaded and financially despoiled. The report continues: "It has been proved that the present railway companies are not financially able to execute the urgent and necessary works for the development of the national railway system in a form adequate for the future requirements of Spain, and the minister therefore, regards it as a matter of fundamental importance for the organization of the country's economic life that the problem of the railways should be solved. The minister further stated that until this problem is solved Spain will not be able to increase its military power however much is spent on military services, nor will any proper benefit be obtained from the assistance given to the siderurgical and metallurgical industries. The intensification of the national railway system would open up a wide field for the mining industry and would make it possible to work in Spain the ore now exported as raw material.

"The minister considers that concessions both for mines and for water power which the state may grant must be limited to private individuals and to enterprises which are domiciled in Spain. He is not in favor of rejecting the aid of foreign capital, but is of the opinion that steps should be taken to render it unnecessary."

BRITISH SEAPLANE SINKS HUN BOAT

Englishman In Another Air Craft Tells of Chase and Its End.

A British naval air force base in England—(by mail)—The destruction of a German destroyer by a British sea plane is graphically told by Capt. Paul Bowsher, who observed the unusual occurrence from the cockpit of a fast British bombing plane.

He was flying off the Belgian coast when he saw two British machines in front of him.

"Suddenly," he writes, "the front machine turned to the right and began to fly towards the coast. Its occupants had evidently seen something of importance. Looking below, I saw a few miles from the Zeebrugge mole, six little shapes which seemed stationary on the grey sea.

"They were German destroyers which were in reality steaming at top speed toward the coast. Gradually the seaplanes grew nearer and nearer, and soon were but a few miles from the land.

"Near the front machine appeared a small black ball of smoke. Another appeared, and another, and I could hear the sharp crack of bursting shells.

"Now, however, they were almost over the destroyers, which were beginning to zig-zag as the danger of the coming attack was realized.

"I saw six black cylinders drop spinning from the front machine. Near the destroyers appeared the white smoke and spray of a bomb. Another followed, and another. Then on one of the destroyers a great red flash appeared, and the center of the boat was left clouded in smoke. Its attacker had scored one direct hit.

"I shouted excitedly to the pilot as one of the destroyers dropped out of line and made swiftly for its mortally wounded consort.

"The airplanes returned to report. A patrol returning a few hours later states they had seen five German destroyers returning toward Ostend. By then, the sixth, torn and shattered, lay with many another twisted and rusted companion, under the sea."

BLINDED SOLDIERS TO POLISH MARBLE

Amsterdam (by mail)—Marble polishing is said to be an ideal occupation for warblinded soldiers in Germany. A first test made at Kiel showed that the keen sense of touch developed by the blind workers enabled them to detect at once the slightest uneveness or imperfection on a marble plate. Now the big Rhenish marble works at Dusseldorf-Rath employ several blind polishers, who have become experts at their trade, and receive skilled workmen's pay. German employers in the marble business have decided to give blind soldiers preference in labor engagements.

SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Goshen, Ind., U. S. A.

How Acid-Stomach Wrecks Health of Millions

Many people make the mistake of thinking that acid-stomach—superacidity, as the doctors call it—merely means an occasional attack of indigestion, bloat, heartburn, belching, sour, gassy stomach, or some other such minor ailment quickly remedied—or will cure itself—and leave no serious after effects. As a matter of fact superacidity is responsible for a long train of serious ailments that cause awful suffering and sometimes baffle the best medical skill. It is a well established fact that many cases of chronic stomach trouble, anemia, stomatitis, gastritis, rheumatism, gout, lumbago, cirrhosis of the liver, auto-intoxication, dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach, intestinal ulcer, cancer of the stomach, and frequently valvular heart trouble and heart failure, can be traced directly to an acid-stomach.

This is not at all surprising when you consider that even the acid formed in the mouth from fermentation of bits of food lodged in the teeth—an acid that is actually tasteless—is yet powerful enough to eat through the hard enamel of the teeth and decay them. Is it any wonder, then, that an excess amount of acid in the stomach causes just as much misery, undermines the strength and wrecks the health and happiness of so many people? Is it not a fact, within the range of your own observation, that nine people out of ten are victims of acid-stomach?

If you ever hope to be well and strong you must get rid of that excess acid. Nothing is gained by taking medicines which merely stimulate and give one a false sense of strength and that leave the excess acid still in the stomach. You must depend upon your food for your strength — and unless you keep your stomach free from excess acid, pure, sweet and strong, it cannot properly digest food; your whole body suffers.

What you want is relief — yes — and here is the way—absolutely guaranteed—you take no chance. It's been tested tens of thousands of times with universal success. Go to your druggist and get just one package of MATONIC, a wonderful preparation that will literally wipe the excess acidity out of your stomach. The results obtained are nothing short of marvelous. Almost instantly it relieves that painful, puffed up feeling after eating, belching, heart burn, sour stomach, etc. Makes the stomach feel cool and comfortable.

If you need this help it's your own fault if you suffer another day.

MATONIC is absolutely guaranteed, so get a big 50c box from your druggist. If it does not help you your money will be refunded. If your druggist does not keep MATONIC, send your name and address to the Matonic Remedy Company, 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., and they will at once mail you a 50c box and you can send them the money for it after you receive it.

EMIL KNOKE DIES SUDDENLY AT GARNER

Emil Knoke, eleven year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Knoke of Garner, died suddenly last Saturday afternoon as he was playing with some of his little friends. The lad was affected with a weak heart and excitement or fright would effect him. It seems he became frightened at a shetland pony and the excitement caused his early death. Mr. and Mrs. Knoke have the sympathies of the entire community in their bereavement.

The "Flu" epidemic is a thing of the past in Klemme now and we are all wide open and a sailing. Saturday morning the health officers lifted the quarantine and all places were again open to the public. Church was held Sunday in the various churches of Klemme and Monday school was again begun.

W. J. Barz, of Garner, was a Klemme caller Monday.

Boys, we want to warn you not to set any traps as the season does not open until the 15th of this month. There is a heavy penalty if this law is violated. You must also carry a hunting license in order to trap fur bearing animals. Cut out that trapping until the law says you can.

HARRY MEINDERTS SHOT AT MESERVEY

Harry Meinderts, son of Mrs. H. H. Meinderts, was shot and almost instantly killed last week on Hallowe'en night. It seems a group of boys were passing by a blacksmith shop when the window was thrown open and the man within shot point blank at the boys with a shot gun, instantly killing young Meinderts. The action of the blacksmith was entirely uncalled for, as the boys had not touched a thing. He was taken to Mason City before the authorities and the case is being fully investigated. It is a sad affair and Mrs. Meinderts has the sympathy of the Klemme people in her great grief. Harry was well known here.

800 WOMEN NEEDED BY SALVATION ARMY

Commander Evangeline Booth Says War Relief Work Must Be Extended.

Commander Evangeline Booth, leader of the Salvation Army in the United States, has been suddenly called upon to furnish 800 additional war work women for France. The request is contained in a report just received by her from Col. William A. Barker of the Salvationist forces, whom she sent to France over a year ago to establish hutment and general war relief work with the American troops.

"We will do all we can to fill this demand," said Commander Booth when discussing the approaching United War Work Campaign, "and the need itself should impress the American public all the more with the absolute necessity for sustaining and enlarging the war relief work of the seven organizations, besides the noble Red Cross, now merged for a drive for funds. Each is a vital cog in a vast machine for human relief, and each is indispensible, serving its particular elements in its own way.

"The Salvation Army was born in hardship, reared in privation and trained to every phase of human misery and how to cope with it. Perhaps that accounts in some degree for the success our work has attained and for which we are thankful.

"We are of the common people, and we toil on a practical basis. We learned the lesson of how to do it in the Boer war, when we stood at the side of Britain's troops and weathered it out to the end. We have been tried by fire, and the mothers and fathers of America, as in other countries, trust the Salvation Army to do the thing they would like to do for their men if they but had the chance.

"With 1,210 trained workers at the front, operating from 420 huts and dugouts, the Salvation Army is doing, has done and will continue to do its best for the cause of humanity and Liberty."

CURE FOR BLUES NEAR THE CAMPS

Community Service Takes Place of Mother, Friends and Home for Soldiers.

Ten young officers of the Student Army Training Corps of the University of Detroit recently applied for a furnished house and a housekeeper who would not be a servant, but, as one young officer expressed it, "the sort of woman to whom the boys can call out 'Hello, mother!' when they come in the front door."

Homesickness is the malady for which War Camp Community Service supplies innumerable cures.

"We've got your number," says the W. C. C. S. to the homesick boy from camp with leisure to spend in any one of the three hundred towns scattered over the country. While he's wondering what on earth he'll do with himself when he gets there, not knowing a soul in town and with a limited percentage of his "thirty per" in his pocket, along comes a friendly printed card from the local branch of his own lodge announcing a reception that night especially for soldier members. By the same mail the Methodist church sends an announcement of all its meetings, addressed to him, with This Means You printed at the bottom. How did they know he was a Methodist?

He had forgotten about the little "Personal Card" he made out at the adjutant's request during his first day in camp when it was only one of the endless details in the round of dentists and doctors and general confusion. The W. C. C. S. had not only his number, but his name and address, his home town, the name of the school he'd gone to and a good bit about the things he was fondest of doing—each fact written into a little blank on the card especially for it.

"No American May Refuse," Cardinal Gibbons Says

James Cardinal Gibbons, the leading Catholic churchman in America, has issued a strong appeal in support of the United War Work Campaign.

"It is an American campaign," he said. "Its appeal is one that no American may refuse. America's answer will be another triumphant announcement that we are in this war as one people and as one nation to see it through to victory Into the splendid work of sustaining the morale of our fighting men the great social organizations of America have thrown themselves. The American people will raise the sum they ask—generously and gladly."

CATHOLIC BOYS JOIN WAR WORK CAMPAIGN

Girls, Too, Will Stand With Them Behind Every Fighter at the Front.

To put behind every Catholic fighter in France the support of one boy or girl in every parish throughout the United States is the plan of the National Catholic War Council for backing the Victory Boys' and Victory Girls' "Earn and Give" Division of the United Work War Campaign to raise $170,500,000 "for the boys over there" during the week of November 11-18.

Through diocesan, county and parish organizations, the rallying of one youngster for every man who has gone to war in every community is already under way. By their own earnings, and not by contributions, it is expected that these sturdy little sponsors for the boys abroad will each raise at least five dollars for the joint welfare work of the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., National Catholic War Council, including the Knights of Columbus, War Camp Community Service, Jewish Welfare Board, American Library Association and Salvation Army.

Boys and girls in every Catholic parish throughout the United States are already being picked to represent each fighting man who has left their church for the front. In every home that flies a service flag little brothers and sisters, sons and daughters are eagerly volunteering to look out for the share of their family fighter in the huge joint welfare campaign for all the boys abroad.

BOOKS FOR SOLDIERS SUPPLIED BY A. L. A.

English Camp Shows the Good Work of That Organization for Our Boys.

Something like 13,500 pieces of stationery are distributed daily among 4,000 enlisted men by Uriah B. Brubaker of Iola, Kas., as librarian at the Y. M. C. A. writing tent, Woodley Rest Camp of the American Expeditionary Forces in southern England. The number of troops at this camp varies from 3,000 to 9,000.

This single detail indicates why it is necessary for the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., National Catholic War Council and K. of C., War Camp Community Service, Jewish Welfare Board and Salvation Army have to furnish 125,000,000 sheets a month for soldiers' letters.

Hundreds of books are taken out in this small camp, books furnished by the American Library Association and handled by the Y. M. C. A. Most of the demands are for a good class of fiction. Thirty American newspapers are received there daily. One hundred and fifty magazines are in use daily and 400 pieces of athletic equipment furnished by the "Y" are put to good use.

To Die in the Last Ditch.

The saying to Die in the Last Ditch, may be attributed to William of Orange. When Buckingham urged the inevitable destruction which hung over the united provinces and asked him whether he did not see that the commonwealth was ruined: "There is one certain means," replied the prince, "by which I can be sure never to see my country's ruin—I will die in the last ditch."

Remember there will be a dance at the Idle Hour every Wednesday night again.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

An English officer at Cambrai had his hand torn off by one of the enemy's infernal traps, says a special dispatch to the Temps. Seeing a piano abandoned in the middle of a street, he struck a chord, and an explosion followed, which ripped off his hand. A grenade had been placed in connection with the keys. The Temps correspondent warns returning inhabitants of Cambrai to be careful in correcting any lack of symmetry they may find in their homes, to beware of straightening pictures, replacing door panels which they find loosened, removing nails, and of touching objects they may find in the courtyard, cellar or garden. Such action, he says, may explode an infernal machine.

A dispatch from Panama says that, speaking for Latin-America at a Liberty loan meeting, Ernesto T. Lefevre, secretary for foreign affairs, said: "The peoples of Latin-America are so convinced that the United States is an unselfish and altruistic republic that, from Patagonia to Mexico, all are proud of the victories won by the American armies on the shell torn fields of Europe. Whatever may have occurred in the past in Panama's wave of cordial and sincere friendship is today sweeping our territory from one end to the other. Our hearts and souls are with the soldiers in France."

Because of the scarcity of yarn, Washington asks Red Cross workers not to make direct distribution to drafted men of knitted articles made from materials provided by the Red Cross. Distribution will be made to the men in the camps and abroad. The practice of providing comfort kits for men before they go overseas has been discontinued by the Red Cross at the request of General Pershing. The kits will be distributed to the men after they arrive in Europe.

"We men of German descent have a special reckoning to make with kaiserism," says Otto Kahn. "The whole world has been wronged and hurt by Prussianized Germany, as it was never wronged and hurt before. Our spiritual inheritance has been stolen from us by impious hands and flung into the gutter. Our blood has been dishonored. We have been bitterly shamed by our very kith and kin. Our names, which came down to us from our fathers, have been defiled."

"Peace discussions have taken none of the fighting spirit out of the allies," says a correspondent. "All the soldiers are keen for keeping hot after the Huns. I saw a stream of 'walking wounded' going to the rear, and asked one grinning British private where he was hurt. 'I'm not wounded,' he said. 'I'm on leave.' I asked what he was doing there, and he explained that his leave began that day, but he got special permission to fight."

Sixteen industries have been added by the war industries board to the list of those which must curtail production to save fuel, labor, capital, material and transportation for essential war work. The products affected include electric fans, safes and vaults, pottery, padlocks, builders' hardware, sporting arms and ammunition, cash registers, talking machines, needles, silk fabrics, bottles, and glass jars.

Recall to the active list of Maj. Gen. William C. Gorgas, former surgeon general of the army, and his assignment to active duty in the same rank of the medical corps, was announced by Secretary Baker. General Gorgas will complete the inspection of medical facilities in France and England upon which he is now engaged.

The American commission for Syrian and Armenian relief has received word that in some places in those countries half the population is incapacitated by the influenza epidemic. The British military authorities have requested the American committee to establish headquarters in Mesopotamia.

The Chinese southern military government has formally declared war on the government of President Hsu Shih Chang, because Hsu Shih Chang accepted a bogus parliament election, thus recognizing the new parliament and refusing to respect the existing provisional constitution, says a Canton dispatch.

The first courier from General Pershing carrying the hospital records of the expeditionary forces, for slightly wounded has arrived. It contains 16,000 names, among them a number injured in accidents behind the lines. The names of all slightly injured up to the time of the sending of the lists are included.

"The war is not over. This is no time to slacken effort or to fail to do our part here at home. To keep up and to increase the pressure on the retreating Germans is the only certain way to win," says Secretary of State Lansing.

Douglas Fairbanks, who flew from Washington to New York as first class mail to get $1,000,000 for the loan got it of Pliny Fisk. Mr. Fisk's father sold $170,000,000 worth of bonds for the government during the civil war.

The semi-official North German Gazette says: "President Wilson's reply has partly carried the discussion further and partly extended it. A frank counter utterance by the German government therefore is necessary."

In the pocket of the blouse of an American doughboy, Private Treptow, who was killed the day the Yankees crossed the Ourcq, doctors found a diary, on the first page of which the soldier had written:

"Few persons are able to get a true conception of problems after the war," says Secretary McAdoo. "The problems which are to come will be vastly different from their appearance at this time."

A battle flag, sent by the Young Italy associations of New York to American troops on the Italian front, was presented to the Yanks last week.

DETECTIVE PLACED IN A BAD LIGHT

Man Who Gained Fame In Ax Murder Cases Appears to Be Losing Friends.

Red Oak, Ia., Nov. 1.—The report which certain elements in Montgomery county had for Detective J. N. Wilkerson, of the Burns agency, following the Villisca murder sensation, was shaken at Red Oak, when Ross Moore, "character witness" subpoenaed by Wilkerson, refused to aid the detective.

Wilkerson, who is under indictment in Wapello county on the charge of "conspiracy to commit adultery," arranged for the taking of six depositions at Red Oak to be used at the Wilkerson trial at Ottumwa some time in November.

Wilkerson summoned six persons to depose as to his good character and Ross Moore—brother of the murdered Joe Moore—was at the head of the list.

Attorney General Havner, who will prosecute the case at Ottumwa, was present to assist in taking the depositions.

Moore testified that the character of Wilkerson was "good," after which Attorney General Havner took the witness in charge for cross examination. One question only was required to upset Moore and plunged Wilkerson into a rage.

"Ross," said the attorney general, "now that you have testified that the character of Wilkerson is good, I want to ask if I should show you the petition of Minnie G. Wilkerson filed in Tarrant county, Texas, against J. N. Wilkerson, her husband, alleging that 'although the plaintiff was in every respect a dutiful wife and true to her marital vows and always treated him with kindness and consideration, the said defendant was on divers occasions untrue to his marital vows and treated plaintiff with extreme cruelty and cursed and abused her on many occasions, threatened her with physical violence and succeeded by his cruel treatment in wrecking her mind, health and spirit; that the defendant absented himself from home for long periods without accounting to plaintiff for his whereabouts or contributing to the support of herself and children; that defendant was living during such period in adultery with a notorious woman and his conduct and his relations with such woman were ever a humiliation, chagrin and shame upon the plaintiff and her children,' and if I should then show you the decree of the court signed by the presiding judge at the trial in which both the plaintiff and the defendant, J. N. Wilkerson, were present, and the court declaring that the allegations of the plaintiff's petition were true and sustained by the evidence would you believe the court record, Ross Moore, or the testimony of J. N. Wilkerson?"

And Ross Moore answered, "I would believe the court record."

As Attorney General Havner placed the certified copies of the Texas court records in Moore's hands, Wilkerson, white with anger, told Notary Public C. H. Frame, who with District Court Reporter Jesse Camp, was taking the evidence, that he did not want the depositions.

"I do," responded Havner, and the testimony which Wilkerson expected, would be of such value to him will be a part of the evidence which he will have to face at Ottumwa.

Attorney General Havener, in his cross examination of Moore, also produced the affidavit of Archibald C. Sweet serving a life sentence for murder at Leavenworth, alleging that Wilkerson visited the jail at Dodge City before his conviction, urging him to assist in laying the murder of Nellie Byers to different prominent citizens, promising to secure his (Sweet's) acquittal and to divide the offered reward.

For the first time in his long and sensational career as an actor on the Montgomery county stage, Wilkerson was Saturday without a following. The crowd which had followed in his steps, and championed his cause, had completely dwindled away.

WORKMEN TO BENEFIT BY THE RULING

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 1.—In a decision just handed down State Industrial Commissioner A. B. Funk holds that death from disease may result from an injury received in the course of employment and in such instances relatives of the deceased have the right to recover under the workmen's compensation act.

The case in point is that of N. Swenzel a former employe of the Des Moines Bridge and Iron works, who died recently of spinal meningitis. Commissioner Funk has just awarded compensation to Swenzel's daughter to the amount of $7.41 per week for a period of 300 weeks.

Swenzel was accidentally struck on the head with a hammer which slipped out of the hand of a fellow workman. He continued at his work for two days, but was taken ill his sickness developing into spinal meningitis, from which he died. The industrial commissioner held in the suit brought by his daughter to recover compensation that the weight of probability was that the blow from the hammer was the initial cause of the death and made the award accordingly.

PAIR SENT TO PEN; GUILTY OF ADULTERY

Le Mars, Ia., Nov. 1.—Mrs. Lilly Lawrence and Frank L. Parker, who have been living at Hinton for some time past, were arrested last week and arraigned before Justice C. M. Smith, on a charge of adultery. They waived a preliminary hearing before the justice and were taken before Judge Bradley in the district court.

They pleaded guilty to the charge and Mrs. Lawrence was sentenced to three years at the woman's reformatory at Rockwell City and Parker was sentenced to three years at Fort Madison. The sentences are under the indeterminiate sentence law.

It is stated the pair have been living at Hinton for the past four months. The information was sworn out by Richard Lawrence of this city, the husband of the woman.

Mrs. Lawrence was convicted of lewdness, after a sensational trial in LeMars five years ago and served a term at Anamosa.

Parker's home is given as Round Lake, Minn.

SEEK TO ENJOIN REMSEN DRUGGIST

LeMars, Ia., Oct. 30.—A petition has been filed in the district court in the case of the State vs. F. G. Meinert, of Remsen. John Hammond, of Des Moines, is the complaining witness and the case is an outgrowth of the raid made on the Meinert drug store in Remsen last week.

The plaintiff seeks an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling and handling intoxicating liquor and also for an injunction against the premises and that the injunction be made permanent.

BUENA VISTA BOYS HARD HIT BY "FLU"

Eleven Soldiers From That County Its Victims—Two Had Just Arrived Overseas.

Storm Lake, Ia., Oct. 31.—Two young men, who left Storm Lake with the July 25 contingent for Camp Dodge, have died overseas since their arrival. They are Private Leslie Greenfield and Private Olaf Olson, of this county. Both young men expired of pneumonia following influenza. With the death of these two young men the county's casualty list totals 16. Eleven of the number died of influenza.

CAMP DODGE SOLDIERS WERE WELL CARED FOR

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 31.—During the epidemic of Spanish influenza at Camp Dodge Chairman Lafayette Young, of the state council of national defense, detailed Dr. O. J. Fay, a member of the council, and one of the eminent surgeons and physicians of the state, to make an inspection of conditions at the big cantonment for the council. Dr. Fay has just made his report.

"I am satisfied," declared Dr. Fay in his report, "after this personal investigation that you can safely assure the fathers and mothers who lost their sons as the result of the epidemic that every possible measure was taken to insure their comfort and the best medical treatment known was administered in an effort to save their lives, and that while some of the patients were compelled to suffer discomforts temporarily, I feel satisfied that it cannot be truthfully said that a single soldier met his death because of any lack of care or treatment."

Dr. Fay explained that with normal hospital room for less than 2,000 patients and with some 9,000 cases of influenza within 15 days it became necessary to convert about 100 barracks into emergency hospitals in which influenza cases alone were housed, all cases developing pneumonia or otherwise serious conditions being immediately transferred to the base hospital.

FRIGHT CAUSES DEATH OF CROSSING FLAGMAN

Waterloo, Ia., Oct. 31.—Fright over a near tragedy at the Park avenue crossing of the Rock Island railroad is supposed to have caused the death of Jackson Brody, crossing flagman.

Brody fell to the ground when he saw a passing locomotive strike the front of an automobile. Witnesses say Brody frantically waived a caution to the driver, who heedlessly drove on. Hiding his eyes to avoid seeing what he thought would be a tragedy, the aged flagman fell to the ground, the victim of a sudden attack of heart disease. The police ambulance rushed the dying man to a hospital, but he was dead on arrival there. The accident to the automobile was slight. No one was injured.

KENYON SAYS HUNS MUST SURRENDER OUTRIGHT

Fort Dodge, Ia., Oct. 31.—In his reply to the American Defense society asking for his views on peace Senator William S. Kenyon stated that unconditional surrender are the only terms on which he would consider peace. The peace society, of which Elihu Root is president and Alton B. Parker vice president, supports only 100 per cent congressional candidates, and as any peace treaty must be ratified by the Senate the attitude of senators on this subject is important.

Senator Kenyon further stated that German militarists must be tried and convicted on the evidence of their crimes and the evidence saved as a historical record for every ship that submarines have destroyed. German labor must rebuild another for every Belgian and French town destroyed. Not until these and many other things are done can the world breathe easy.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 31.—The commander in chief of the American expeditionary forces in the name of the president, has awarded the Distinguished Service Cross to the following soldier for the act of extraordinary heroism described:

During the advance of his regiment in the Forest De Fere by his voluntary, authorized and untiring efforts in carrying wounded, both by day and by night, under the most severe and dangerous circumstances, and especially when the town of Sergy was under bombardment, July 31, 1918. Home address—John E. Pease, R. F. D. No. 2, Shenandoah, Ia.

KILLS WOMAN AND COMMITS SUICIDE

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 31.—Mrs. Jennie Athey, 42 years old, a chambermaid at the Antlers hotel, 212 Fourth street, was shot twice and almost instantly killed in a bathroom of the hotel by Pearl A. Cregor, an ironworker employed by the Des Moines Bridge & Iron Company, who fired the third bullet into his own brain and fell dying at the woman's side.

Thomas Wagner, proprietor of the hotel, and several other persons who were in the office, heard screams of "Help! Murder!" followed quickly by three shots. When they reached the bathroom both Mrs. Athey and Cregor were unconscious and expiring.

No motive for the double shooting except a possible quarrel between the two, who had been keeping company for some time, could be suggested by the people at the hotel.

DUCK HUNTER IS ACCIDENTALLY KILLED

Mason City, Ia., Oct. 31.—Henry Hoeft, 37 years old, was accidentally killed while hunting ducks in marshes north of Garner. In crawling through a barbed wire fence his shotgun was accidentally discharged, the shot entering his abdomen, causing death within half an hour. He leaves a wife and three children.

UNIFORM PRICES TO SOLDIER BOYS

Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus and Salvation Army Get Big Concessions.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 28.—All goods on sale to men of the A. E. F. by the Y. M. C. A. in France will after November 1 be sold at the same prices charged by the quartermaster's stores. This announcement was made at headquarters of the United War Work campaign today, following receipt of a cable from Paris stating this arrangement, which the Y. M. C. A. has been trying several months to make with army authorities, had been granted by General Pershing.

This means that certain brands of cigarets which sell for 15 cents in this country will cost soldiers in France only 9 and a fraction cents, and that smoking tobacco which is 5 cents a bag over here will sell for 4 and a fraction cents over there. Price of many articles will still be larger on the other side than this, but under the arrangement prices will be uniform throughout France.

"Hitherto, because the quartermaster is charged no freight on his shipments, while the Y. M. C. A. have had to pay very heavy freight charges, prices have varied considerable and the impression has sometimes gone out that the canteen was conducted at a profit in France. On the contrary it has been conducted at a loss aggregating hundreds of thousands of dollars.

General Pershing also has arranged that the canteen be extended to the huts of the Salvation Army and Knights of Columbus. Thus all three organizations will become in a sense, agents of the quartermaster's department, which will supply goods to be sold, keep prices uniform and arrange for part at least of the transportation.

Dr. John R. Mott, director general of the United War Work campaign, in commenting on the cable said:

"This clears up a point on which officers of the Y. M. C. A. have been at work many months, and which has led to widespread misunderstanding.

"The canteen business was undertaken by the Y. M. C. A. originally at the request of General Pershing and from the very beginning the aim has been to sell everything at cost.

"Cost in America is one thing, however, and cost in France at the end of a long ocean journey, another. Prices were higher than the boys have been accustomed to pay in this country, they were higher in remote towns in France than at the seashore. Everywhere they were higher than the quartermaster's prices for the quartermaster buys his goods from the government commandeered factories on this side, is charged with no freight and sells in France at the same price which he paid here. No private organization could possibly meet such competition. Now all competition is removed. Every organization in France will have the same policy as to articles to be given away in the front line trenches and in battles and every organization will be provided by the government with its goods and will buy at the same price which it pays to the government.

In addition to what it can buy from headquarters, the Y. M. C. A. will continue to buy and import many things from home which the boys want but the government will so far as possible give necessary cargo space without cost, thus making it possible to let the boys have articles at cost.

"General Pershing, in making these arrangements, took occasion to express again his appreciation of the tremendous service which the Y. M. C. A. canteen has rendered to the A. E. F. Without its help life would have been very monotonous, indeed, in little French towns where our boys are billeted, many of them without a single store."

IOWA WILL FURNISH 14,704 MORE MEN

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 28.—Adjutant General Lasher has received a tentative call for 14,704 Iowa men of the September 12 registration to be sent to camps for training during the months of November and December. Before these men are sent all men remaining from the previous registrations who have not entered the service will be called. This means that practically 19,000 men at least from Iowa will be called during the next two months.

Men 19 and 20 years of age and from 31 to 36 will be included in this tentative call, which is for 12 per cent of the registrants of those ages. It is designated a tentative call for the reason that the provost marshal is unable to arrange all of the details with reports on September 12 registration from many states incomplete. It is possible the number may be increased. The definite time for calling out the men and the camps to which they are to be assigned will be determined later.

It is expected that the call for 3,900 men to go to southern camps in the five day period starting October 21, but which was postponed because of the influenza, will be put into effect soon. The call for 500 mechanics to take special training at Ames, who were to have gone October 15, will also be put into effect soon, it is thought. The state adjutant general's office has wired Washington that Ames will be ready to receive these men after November 1.

Adjutant General Lasher replied to General Crowder that he cannot give a date when Iowa can commence to furnish these men because certain boards do not obey orders and give a daily Class 1 report showing the number of men of the September 12 registration available for general military duty.

PRISONERS ESCAPE FROM O'BRIEN COUNTY JAIL

Primghar, Ia., Oct. 28.—Two young men, Kenneth Ervin and Earl Halfrich, who were lodged in jail here charged with stealing an automobile near Sutherland, broke jail about 3 a. m., stole an Overland car from the garage of Charles Hinz, who lives near the jail, and made a successful getaway. A bootlegger named Henry Beck, who was also incarcerated, followed them out and hunted up the sheriff, who started after them. The car was found abandoned at Clear Lake, S. D., but the boys have not yet been apprehended. They are said to have escaped from the South Dakota reform school prior to their escapade here, and they are also wanted in Cherokee for forging a check.

REFORM SCHOOL INMATES DEAD

Anamosa, Ia., Oct. 28.—The reformatory officials are still battling with the influenza, which secured a grip on the prison population, causing much illness and many deaths. Since the first of last week there have been 14 deaths. Illness among the guards depleted the force and the limited hospital facilities increased the burden of the siege. Medical aid was called in from other institutions, but it is felt that the worst is now over. With the crest of the epidemic passed it is believed that from now on the work of stamping out the influenza will gradually show results.

HUNGARY SHAKES OFF FRIEND AUSTRIA AND PLANS INDEPENDENC

Copenhagen, Oct. 29.—Arch Duke Joseph has issued a proclamation stating that Emperor Charles has charged him with the task of securing the complete independence of Hungary, a dispatch from Budapest says.

Amsterdam, Oct. 29.—Prof. Heinrich Lammasch has succeeded Baron von Hussarek as Austrian premier, it was announced in a dispatch from Vienna today.

Copenhagen, Oct. 29.—Hungary has definitely severed and formed an independent anti-dynastic state under the leadership of Count Karolyi, in cooperation with the Czechs and Jugo Slavs, according to a Vienna dispatch to the Politiken.

Karolyi, who was elected head of the national council was given an ovation upon his arrival in Budapest.

He told the crowds, which numbered thousands that Emperor Karl, has refused his program for a greater degree of separation between Austria and Hungary, wherefore an independent state is necessary.

Commenting on the Austrian note German liberal newspapers say there is no use to complain and that Austria's action was no surprise to Germany.

"We must regard Austria as definitely out of the war," is the concensus of German press comment.

"It is upon Austria's bureaucrats, who sent the ultimatum to Serbia, that the responsibility for the war rests the heaviest. Austria's disappearance will end the war."

Turkey Proposes a Separate Peace.

Copenhagen, Oct. 29.—Constantinople has proposed a separate peace for Turkey, according to information received here today.

It is stated that the proposal was made independently by the por

GERMANY'S FATE WITH VERSAILLES

Conference Beginning Today Will Determine Whether War or Dictated Peace Shall Follow Deliberations.

MUST SUBMIT TO ALLIES

Austria-Hungary and Turkey Will Be Included In the Deliberations For the Peace Program For Terms.

BY ROBERT J. BENDER.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Copenhagen, Oct. 30.—The federal council has approved the bill amending the German constitution, as passed by the reichstag, according to a Berlin dispatch received here today.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 29.—World events are rapidly shaping to make "unconditional surrender" the only terms for the central powers.

As one after another of the Teuton vassals crumbles before the strength of the nations allied against them, the stronger grows the feeling everywhere that only unqualified surrender should be the mandate of the Versailles conference meeting today to formulate an armistice program.

Soon or later Germany will be brought to these terms. If she does not field, officials here declare, she may be able to fight on for years within her own borders. Should she capitulate peace will ensue.

Meantime America and her associates in the war are driving ahead with their planes for a complete victory.

Sue for Separate Peace.

Austria has sued for a separate peace. Turkey is reported to have done likewise. The oppressed nationalities of Austria—the Czecho-Slovaks, Jugo-Slavs and Bohemians—have demanded peace and their independence. Austria has sent word to President Wilson that she abides by his determination to give these separate nations what they want.

"It is believed by diplomats here that Austria will be forced to turn over her railroads, as Bulgaria was, to permit allied use of them in transporting troops and supplies for possible use in an attack on Germany's eastern front."

Hungary has completed a bloodless revolution and established herself as a separate state, according to further advices today. Demoralization has struck the allies of Germany. Only the kaiser's empire now appears to block the path of peace.

The Versailles conference is making the momentous decisions which will determine the fate of Germany.

The Austrian note reached the Swedish legation today. Minister Ekengren planned to deliver it soon to the state department.

Armistice Looks Probable.

It may be stated authoritatively that President Wilson believes his program for armistice will be accepted by the conference.

It may be implied then that the conference will tell the German he must leave his heavy artillery where it stands on all fronts, though he may take home his side arms; he must evacuate all occupied territory, including Russia and Rumania. He must submit to allied control of German aircraft and important munition plants for the time at least, and he must expect the allies to occupy strategic points in Germany, including strongholds in Alsace-Lorraine, so that there will be no double dealing at the peace table.

Applies to Dual Monarchy.

The same terms will apply to the armistice with Austria-Hungary. President Wilson is expected to forward immediately the Austrian appeal for peace to the Versailles conference so that the whole question of terms for Germany, Austria and Turkey may be discussed at the same time.

Acceptance by the Teuton powers of these terms will mean an end to hostilities.

The president is represented today by men in his confidence as believing the Germans will knuckle now to a peace dictated by the allies.

AUSTRIAN ARMY IN BAD SHAP

Unless Hapsburg Plea For Armistice Is Granted Surrende In Field May Result Expert Says.

BY J. W. T. MASON,
United Press War Expert.

New York, Oct. 30.—The Aust Hungarian army is beginning to cru ble before the British and Italian attacks along the Piave, according t if the Hapsburg plea for armistice is not granted an unconditional surrender in the field may be the result.

The allied advance across the Pi has carried the Anglo-Italians h way to the Livenza river. The stre forms the midway Austro-Hungar defense toward the famous Tagliame positions. Beyond these there is clear sweep to the Italian frontier.

If Austro-Hungary remains in war but a little longer it should req no insuperable effort on the part of allies to push the battle line well i the enemy's country once more.

It is difficult to see how the Vien government can count on much longer the loyalty of a large part of the tro facing the British and Italians. Wh so many of the state forming Hapsburg empire are themselves pa ly or wholly independent it would quire only slight urging to start mutinous movement in the army.

Thereafter Italy might refuse to co sider any terms of surrender at all would dictate her own peace to Aust Hungarian soil. This possibility undoubtedly is strongly influencing the Vienna statesmen to pl with President Wilson for an immedi armistice. It means that Austro-Hu gary wants American intercession save the Hapsburg empire from u destruction. If America do Hapsburgers' end is not far off.

Their trial probably will be held during November.

I Have a Rendezvous With Death.

I have a rendezvous with Death
At some disputed barricade,
When Spring comes back with rustling shade
And apple blossoms fill the air
I have a rendezvous with Death
When Spring brings back blue days and fair

It may be he shall take my hand
And lead me into his dark land
And close my eyes and quench my breath—
It may be I shall pass him still
I have a rendezvous with Death
On some scarred slope of battered hill,
When Spring comes round again this year
And the first meadow flowers appear

God knows 'twere better to be deep
Pillowed in silk and scented down
Where love throbs out in blissful sleep
Pulse nigh to pulse and breath to breath,
Where hushed awakenings are dear . . .
But I've a rendezvous with Death
At midnight in some flaming town
When Spring trips north again this year,
And I to my pledged word am true
I shall not fail that rendezvous

JAPAN'S CHIEF GOAL AT PEACE CONFAB

Member of Jap Parliament Gives His Views In Magazine Article

Tokio (by mail) Japan's chief goal at the peace conference should be to obtain an open door for immigration to Australia, India, Canada and the United States writes E Iyehara member of parliament in Japan and the Japanese a popular fortnightly magazine of Tokio Iyehara was a member of the parliamentary commission which visited America early this year

"In England the league of nations theory is finding strong support" Iyehara writes A league cannot be realized when Britain which possesses so much of the earth adopts an exclusive policy in her own territory Should all the natural resources in British possessions be monopolized permanently by their own nationals it would be improbable that the non-British nations would pursue a militaristic aggressive policy against her

"America is fighting to safeguard the independence and rights of the small nations, it claims This must mean that the small nations are to be given the right developing their own destiny without molestation or interference It is not calculated to guarantee the independence and rights of small nations for strong powers to monopolize the benefits accruing from their vast natural resources

"Again, the policy of confining a large number of people within their own territory of limited dimensions, such as Japan does not tend to assist the civilization of the world nor is such a policy calculated to bring about the peace of the world

"It is clear in these circumstances that Japan's advocacy of the open door principle will meet with no dissent from Britain or America, even though it may be recognized that the immediate enforcement of this principle is attended with many difficulties

"While claiming the open door in territories bordering the Pacific, Japan ought to insist that America grant pendence to the Philippines. America's suspicions to Japan have been the obstacle to her granting this independence, acting in concert with Great Britain and America, may induce the latter to comply with Japan's proposal

"Japan also must insist that Hawaii be made a neutral zone The independence of the Philippines and the neutrality of Hawaii are not questions which are important for their own sake, but Japan must contrive for their realization as a means to give effect to America's principle of safeguarding the independence and rights of small nations, and also as the first step in the direction of enforcing the open door principle in regard to immigration

"Japan's efforts to carry this great principle at the peace conference may pave the way for establishment of a great international ideal, even though her efforts are not crowned with immediate success Moreover, her claims will be received with universal sympathy and support by the Asiatic peoples, and thus the foundation will be laid for Japan's assumption of the leadership of Asia."

Death Is Common.

So many men are lying down that one more death cuts little grass, we lose some bulwark of the town and hardly pause to say Alas! It is an awkward time to croak while war is kicking up its din, no man can leave a trail of smoke, these death-struck days, by cashing in Today we lost our merchant prince, the owner of the Blue Front store, has been our Big Man ever since he landed here, in '84 If he in times of peace had died, the village would have lost its breath, and groups of people would have cried, "You love a shining mark, O death!" And we'd have talked for days and weeks, about his merit or his flaw, and looked on men as dreary freaks who did not speak his name with awe. A silken banner we would fling halfmasted o'er the city hall, and we'd have hired a band to spring the justly famous march in "Saul" Ah, me, what is one merchant prince, when dead men strew the blood stained globe? Who can the proper grief evince, or paw around and tear his robe? In his deep grave we'll lay him down, with naught of pomp or circumstance, and then we'll hustle back to town, to hear the latest news from France.

BOY SCOUTS WILL REFOREST ITALY

Decrease of Coal Supply Due to War Has Caused Burning of Wood

BY HENRY WOOD.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Rome (by mail) To the boy scouts of Italy has just been intrusted the nation wide propaganda for reforestation

Results the boys may obtain probably will count as one of the most effective services ever rendered to a state by this organization which has attained fully as great proportions in Italy as has in the United States

The boy scouts of Italy, beginning at once will not only give their own help in the actual work of reforestation but will inculcate it as one of the cardinal principles of their organization

While reforestation long has been one of the vital problems facing Italy, it has become doubly important as a result of the past two years of war Italy has no coal supply and her railways factories and industries generally are dependent upon coal fields of England and America

Decreased importation of coal caused by war created a coal shortage in Italy that was one of the important factors contributing to Italy's military disaster last fall The shortage, which was at its acutest point, immediately following the Italian retreat threatened to entail even still greater military disasters, and to prevent this the Italian government has recourse to its forests for sufficient fuel to keep the railways and munition factories going.

Olive wood was chosen as the best wood fuel for railways, and hundreds of thousands of Italian olive trees have been cut down Burning of the olive wood resulted in ruin of hundreds of locomotives and burning of thousands of acres of crops along the railways, but it tided over the situation until the allies arranged for larger imports

Italy still is receiving hundreds of thousands of tons of coal less than her minimum needs, and as a consequence she is obliged to continue obliteration of her forests with the certainty that in the end she must suffer from it all of the evils that have been sustained in China, the United States and other countries by the denuding of the forests

Every railway station in Italy is a center of great deposits of firewood which Italy is holding for emergencies should her coal supply again be diminished Hundreds of thousands of soldiers are cutting down wood and hauling it to railway centers

COST OF LIVING HAS INCREASED IN EUROPE

London (by mail.)—Latest figures gathered from neutral, allied and enemy sources show big increasese in the cost of living in Europe since July, 1914

According to figures Italy heads the list, but rationing there extends only to sugar and bread (with macaroni, rice and maize flour)

These conditions are not comparable with these in the central empires, where almost every food is rationed in very limited amounts and where in some cases the rationed quantities cannot be obtained The cost of living for those who can manage to give exhorbitant prices for illicit food must be incredibly great

Following is a table showing how the war has increased food costs in Europe

Italy, February, 1918—153 per cent.
Norway, March, 1918—137 per cent
Sweden, March, 1918—134 per cent.
Germany, November, 1917—125 per cent.
Great Britain, June, 1918—108 per cent.
France, December, 1917—100 per cent.
Switzerland, December, 1917—96 per cent
France (Paris), January, 1918—91 per cent.
Holland, March, 1918—82 per cent.
Denmark, February, 1918—73 per cent

RICH MAN AT HOME; NOT SO IN ARMY

With the American Army in France, (by mail)—He was a private, and he looked the part. But he hesitated when some war workers who wanted to establish a billet in some ruins offered him and his bunkie $2 apiece to help sweep out the place. He wasn't busy just then.

Finally he followed the example of his bunkie and accepted the job.

"If anybody'd offered me money to sweep out a house over in the States, I'd have turned up my nose," he told his friend "You see I own a couple factories over there, and got a pretty good fortune beside that. But over here when you can't write a check and get it cashed, you'd do most anything for a couple of dollars for it is about the end of the month, and you haven't drawn your $30 per for two months. War sure makes a fellow democratic.

A B C OF WAR TAXATION.

From the New York Tribune.

Most people, most congressmen, and perhaps even Mr Claude Kitchin, think of war taxation in much the same terms as they think of ordinary peace time taxation That is, their thought is very largely to graduate the tax according to the ability to pay In the case of Mr Kitchin and a great number of others, there is, besides this, an unconcealed willingness to limit wealth and level profits for social reasons But that is another matter In point of fact, raising the needful money may come to be the least important part of war time taxes Levying taxes, as everybody knows may have two functions, a plain assessment for the needs of the government, or at the same time, a deliberate intent to accomplish quite other ends sometimes commercial, sometimes punitive Example of punitive taxes are those on oleomargarine, on state bank notes and the like The tax on state bank notes, for example, is so heavy as simply to put this form of currency out of existence

Now, in war time this extra or economic function of taxation is a very large function Rightly used, it may be of enormous benefit This function is to discourage the wild extravagance and high living which a war of any duration invariably brings on. It is not, as many think, just a plain business matter. A tax of $1,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 does not merely take that amount from the public pocket and reduce the public spending by this sum Its effect is enormously greater The effect is on the mind. It is, as we are coming to say, psychological Everybody knows how deeply paying heavy taxes can passion the human soul It cuts very deeply. We feel poor?

Mere high prices have no such effect In three years the cost of living in this country has very nearly doubled. Has this brought any considerable decrease in the actual consumption of food and clothing motor cars, movies and all the like? It has not It has had exactly the opposite effect. It has increased consumption Everybody is flush.

A direct tax of $5,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 on the main necessities of popular consumption would easily reduce the nation's unnecessary consumption of goods by, we should judge, two or three times this amount If the treasury were to take $100 out of every $1,000 of everybody's income it would go further toward producing a thrifty nation than any other measure that could be devised It would be irksome. But it would cut down the after burden of the war enormously

CHILE LOOKS FORWARD TO COMMERCIAL WAR

Santiago, Chile, (by mail)—Chilean business men are much concerned over the prospects of a commercial war in South America at the conclusion of the present conflict and have petitioned the national government to adopt protective measures which will prevent "dumping" in Chilean markets.

The petition was made by the Camara Industrial de Chile which corresponds to industries as chambers of commerce do to commerce. The "camara" asserts in its petition that Chilean manufacturers will have to use high priced labor and imported raw materials and will be unable to compete against "dumping" methods which had begun to be a menace to Chilean industries even before the war.

The chamber informs the government that the coming comercial war will be carried on by the big manufacturing nations by fixing export prices so low that even after freight and expenses are paid, the goods can be sold in Chile and other South American republics at what they cost to manufacture, while hig hprices at home will compensate for the loss. Such methods, asserts the chamber, will ruin Chilean industries.

The chamber has suggested that the government adopt the method which it says has been tried in Canada and New Zealand, whereby a surtax above normal duties is imposed on all goods based on the difference between the price quoted for the imported goods and the sale price of th same goods in th country of origin.

The suggestion of the Chilean chamber is receiving widespread newspaper comment in all the other South American republics, where it is being urged that the example be followed.

The Result.

From the Outlook

An English clergyman, according to the Presbyterian Advance, was grieved to find his services for men poorly attended. He expressed his regret to the verger "I really think they ought to come," he said, sadly "That's just what I've said to them over an' over again," said the verger, consolingly. "I says to 'em, 'Look at me.' I says, 'look at me' I goes to all them services,' I says, 'an' wot arm does they do me?'"

A London court fined one firm $100 and costs for having enticed a workman to leave another company and enter its employment, by offering higher wages.

AMERICAN AIRMEN ACTUALLY DO THINGS

Their Ever Increasing Numbers Enables Them to Make Themselves Felt

With American Aviators in France (by mail) American aviation in France has gone ahead rapidly of late. Men who a few months ago were still in civilian life in the United States have been trained and formed into ever increasing pursuit squadrillas to hunt the enemy American bombing aviators are now almost daily harrassing the military and railway establishments of the Germans. Every day almost brings the news of fresh victories in the air

The Germans certainly have not the masters of the air often claimed by them where the Americans are concerned With the steady increase in the United States air forces in France the enemy is due for increasing defeat—if past performances count for anything

The work of several pursuit squadrillas is controlled from an "operations office" located at a flying field not far from the front At rude wooden tables sit enlisted men engaged always in making new maps that shall show just where the enemy is where his airdromes are located, tables of past performances wind charts and the like The officer in charge is a youthful lieutenant wise with air here.

In the corner is a field telephone operated by an officer who can speak French

Sooner or later the inevitable warning arrives.

"Enemy machine observed over ——— at 4,000 meters, headed south," it may say

The young lieutenant refers to a big map on his desk, locates the point mentioned in the warning and telephones the warning to a squadrilla with orders to go aloft and hunt out the enemy plane

Three, five, seven minutes later the lieutenant's telephone rings again, and he turns to his visitor with the reassuring words, "Three Nieuports have gone after him" Then he explains

"Whenever it is possible we send out for defensive purposes one more machine than there are enemy airplanes reported That is we send two for one, three for two four for three, etc That is not always possible, however Many new pursuit squadrons are in the making and occasionally a lone flier must go out against one German He is as frequently successful as when groups have gone up together."

The warning is repeated many times daily A similar proceeding is going on on the German side of the line, for the American aviators, like the British and French, are the aggressors and persistently carry the fighting into German held territory

ITALIAN SUCCESSES CAUSE GERMAN HATE

Rome, (by mail)—Nobody need be surprised at the hatred shown by Germans for Italians in their treatment of prisoners of war In order to quiet the discontent in Austria resulting from famine, the war lords ordered Vienna to press the advance in Italy at all costs and force the capitulation of Venice, but the Italians proved to be the masters. They drove the Germans beyond the Piave with heavy losses. They drove them to the mountains and pushed them back all along the line

The German war lords ordered their Turko-Bulgarian vassals to cross Albania, but the Italians stopped them in another massacre and repulsed them with heavy losses and several miles of territory.

When the Italians drove the Austrians beyond the Piave in June the war lords thought they could quiet public opinion in Germany and Austria by an advance on the western front and a blow at Rheims. Again they were blocked and unable to pass, because the Italians protected Rheims, flanked by French, British and American troops The hand of fate had chosen the Italian army to defend Rheims

Thus, three times in the last three months, the Germans saw their plans frustrated and reduced to nothing by the Italians

The Italian army has thousands of soldiers on every front where fighting goes on They are defending Rheims and fighting beside the Americans in Picardy Other thousands are advancing with the British in Palestine. More than 250,000 have crossed the Adriatic and thrown the German hordes back

Nobody can marvel therefore, that the Germans hate us with a deadly hatred Italy is no small part of the entente.

"My last meal in Berlin (January, 1918), says Dr. Davis, "consisted of one sardine, three thin slices of cold smoked salmon, soup which was hardly more than salt water, two small boiled potatoes and a substitute for corn starch pudding The check for this elaborate table d hote meal amounted to $4.50

The annual loss of life among food animals in stock yards in Chicago is, Cattle, 1,790, horses 3,138, swine 9,330, and sheep, 3,124.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS ARE WONDER OF ALL

Their General Makeup and Great Numbers Surprise to Europeans.

London (by mail)—"American soldiers seem to grow in the night so that each morning there are more of them than before," writes a British soldier in France to his relatives in England. "Americans are the topics of conversation everywhere," he continues. "The villages are full of them

"Their automobile trucks are on all the roads and their columns of infantry are everywhere. We are beginning to know the songs they sing and the phrases they use.

"To many of us they were a complete mystery at first We had heard of America only as a distant country Then suddenly they were in France—tall, well trained men with a genius for making friends and adapting themselves to new conditions. We watched them with curiosity at first, surprised to find how like they were to other men

"Then, before we had quite recovered from the first pleasant surprise, they were fighting—making a reputation in a trade where the test is not easy They came up from their villages singing and filtered into the trenches, more and more of them each day The papers began to talk about their fighting, but we thought 'Surely they cannot be doing much yet.' And then all at once we began to see it for ourselves, and we were of the opinion straightway that the papers had not grasped the wonder of the facts.

"They were so keen and so fresh, those first Americans. And every day others as keen and fresh are going up to the line, and every day their places are being taken in the villages by yet others. What would the Germans say if they really knew all this one wonders

"They are merry and light hearted, but underneath they are taking this business very seriously, and some of their talk shows it. That's the way to take one's fighting, you know—neither too much in earnest, which is morbid, nor too much as a job, which is foolish. The wise man is he who neither overrates himself nor underrates danger The Americans are wise men.

"The peasants like them, the old French mothers mother them. They have an instinct which gives them a realization of the homesickness which must sometimes come to these men. When years have gone by, and it is possible to see the war in perspective, it may be possible to give full value to what those women have done.

"Meanwhile, as I was saying, the Americans go on arriving and spreading all over France."

School children of Somerset, Eng., are liberated three afternoons a week to pick blackberries for the government.

WAR WORK

American women nurses are installed eight miles in the rear of the fighting lines "over there." Right here at home many women should learn nursing to take care of the sick or, in emergencies, the wounded. You can learn a great deal by obtaining the "Medical Adviser" a book of 1,000 pages, bound in cloth, containing chapters on First Aid, Bandaging, Anatomy, Hygiene, Sex Problems, Mother and Babe. 200 prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases; profusely illustrated by wood cuts and colored plates. Ask your druggist or send 50c. to Publisher, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

If a woman is nervous or has dizzy spells, suffers from awful pains at regular or irregular intervals she should turn to a tonic made up of herbs, and without alcohol, which makes weak women strong and sick women well. It is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which can be procured at any drug store, in either liquid or tablets. If you wish to obtain a ten-cent trial package, send to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel Buffalo, N. Y.

The restorative power of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription speedily causes womanly troubles to disappear—assists the organs to properly perform their natural functions, overcomes irregularities, removes pain and misery at certain times and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women. Then, for the liver and bowels nothing is so good as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

Frenchman Invented Zeppelin.

How many people are aware that Count Zeppelin was not the real inventor of the Zeppelin? As a matter of fact, a Frenchman, Maurice Chevreaux, conceived the idea, and it was from his plans that the first monster airship was able to fly. Chevreux, who was a naval engineer, has recently died; since the commencement of the war he had practically lived the life of a hermit; some say because of his grief at being the innocent cause of placing in the hands of the hated enemy such a terrible machine of war. He resided for some years in Germany, and was employed in the Zeppelin workshops, and while so engaged designed the six-cylinder motor, by which Count Zeppelin was able to eventually triumph over the difficulty of making a dirigible airship that would keep up for hours in the air.

FRANCE PROTECTS HER POOR FARMERS

LENDS MONEY TO THOSE WHOSE FARMS WERE DEVASTATED BY THE INVADING HUNS AND SAVES HORSES FROM THE ARMY.

France has come to the rescue of her farmers. Every bit of French soil must be cultivated as never before. To increase production the French government is making great effort to help the farmer, according to information sent the United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems at Burlington, Iowa.

As our own farm loan board is doing, provision is being made there to enable the farmers to get money and equipment with which to cultivate the abandoned lands of France. According to the present decree, preference is being given to farmers who lived originally in the invaded regions. To such borrowers the amount may be doubled. Loans may be renewed at the end of the season, but each farmer must report the results of his season's production.

The farmers of France are being safeguarded in another respect, and that is in the requisitioning of their horses for army use. Requisitioning committees are instructed to take only a certain proportion of the animals of each farmer and not to take these until after the harvest, unless it is absolutely necessary. Not all the horses are to be taken at once, and if a farmer has but one horse he is not to be deprived of it.

USE THE LIGHTER CUTS

Food Administration Asks Conservation of the Beef Supply of the Country.

Following a conference between packers and the food administration, attended by officers of the army, navy and marine corps, maximum prices are announced at which beef will be alloted for September delivery—excepting on the Pacific coast—for the army, navy and allies.

The following bases are f. o. b. Chicago, per 100 pounds, for steers of quality and grade satisfactory to the authorized inspectors, chilled and unwrapped. These prices average substantially the same as for the month of August.

475 to 575 pounds	$21.00
575 to 700 pounds	22.65
700 to 850 pounds	23.55

The average weight of cattle marketed this year, it was brought out, is 30 pounds lighter than last, 40 pounds lighter than in 1916 and 60 pounds below the 1915 average. This is due in part to excessive marketing of immature cattle owing to drought conditions.

To utilize cattle below 475 pounds in weight, the minimum now being supplied on army specifications, housewives and proprietors of public eating places are asked by the food administration to buy cuts from lighter weight stock.

SEVEN WHYS WE ARE SHORT.

1. Our great war program has reduced our sugar-carrying fleet.
2. The sugar requirements of our overseas army are very large.
3. Our own sugar crop is less than we expected.
4. The small island, Cuba, must feed the world with sugar.
5. We have diverted 50,000 tons of sugar shipping in order that Belgium should have food.
6. Germans have destroyed sugar-beet fields and factories in northern France and Italy.
7. More than 50,000,000 pounds of sugar have been sunk off our shores by German submarines.

The Lost Canteen.

A soldier in one of the regiments which left for a training camp went off without an important item of his equipment. It happened this way. The parading column had come to a halt, and a thirsty man in the line asked for a drink. A man in the crowd grabbed the sufferer's canteen and ran to have it filled. Before he got back the order had been given to move on, and the owner of the canteen was many blocks away in the column ahead.

"Gee," said the man with the canteen, "and I don't even know what company he is in."

Examination of the canteen revealed no mark of identification whatever.

Somebody's Dollars Will Do It— I Wonder if They'll Be Yours

By Bruce Barton

I WILL tell you what will happen some night this winter in France. Some night when its cold and dark. There will be a rustling through the front line trench, where our boys stand guard. And a heavy ladened Secretary will make his way along.

In his hands will be great steaming pots: in his pocket chocolate and cigarettes.

From one man to another he will go, passing a cup full of hot coffee to hands that tremble with the cold; bringing the comfort of a bit of sweet and a smoke.

Men will hail him cheerily, slapping him on the back; and when he has gone things will be a little easier in that trench because he has passed that way.

How much will it cost to make that trip, do you suppose? Counting the pittance that the Secretary is paid, and the cost of the chocolate and the cigarettes and all?

Five dollars? Twenty-five dollars? I do not know.

But whether it is five dollars or twenty-five, I'd like to think that it is my five or twenty-five—wouldn't you? That some night when it's cold and lonesome, my money and yours might send a Secretary out along that front line trench. Let's make up our minds that we are going to pay for a score of those trips. A score of the nights this winter shall be our nights —nights when the boys greet joyously the chocolate and cigarettes that our money provided; and are happier because our representative has passed.

United War Work Campaign — For the Boys in the Service

SERVICE THAT WINS THE SOLDIER HEART

Fred Lockley, Y. M. C. A., Tells of the Gratitude of the Boys at the Front.

"One of the discoveries men are making over here," Fred Lockley, of the Y. M. C. A. and of Portland, Oregon, writes from London, "is that more pleasure can be had out of giving than getting. Many a man who has spent money freely in the old days to buy pleasure is finding that he gets more pleasure over here by the spending of one's self in the service of others.

"A few months ago I went out with a fellow Y. M. C. A. secretary to hunt up out-of-the-way detachments of troops. A stable guard here, a machine gun company there, a platoon somewhere else. We carried our goods in an automobile. We had plenty of writing paper and envelopes for free distribution, and chocolate, cookies, chewing tobacco and smoking tobacco, cigarettes, razor blades, tooth paste and things of that kind for sale. American war service workers were busy everywhere. We found Salvation Army lassies making doughnuts for the boys and K. of C. secretaries giving help. Books furnished by the American Library Association were to be seen on all sides.

"Hearing firing at a distance, we drove down the road and found a score or so of men at machine gun practice. The officer gave the men half an hour recess to buy goods.

"At another place we came in sight of a lieutenant drilling a platoon. I said to the lieutenant: 'How soon before you dismiss the company? We have Y. M. C. A. goods for sale.'

"He said: 'Right now. Sergeant, dismiss the company!'

"And ten seconds later the company was in line waiting to buy goods from our traveling 'Y.' Grateful is no name for it. The men can't do enough to show their gratitude."

MERCY MUNITIONS NEEDED IN TRENCHES

Lieut. Coningsby Dawson, Fighting Author, Makes Stirring Appeal for Y. W. C. A.

Lieut. Coningsby Dawson, who wrote "Carry On," says of the war work which the Y. W. C. A. is doing: "You at home cannot fight with your lives, but you can fight with your mercy. The Y. W. C. A. is offering you just this chance. It garrisons the women's support trenches, which lie behind the men's. It asks you to supply them with munitions of mercy that they may be passed on to us. We need such supplies badly. Give generously that we may the sooner defeat the Hun."

What Lieut. Dawson says of the Y. W. C. A. he might have said of all the national organizations which are coming together for the biggest financial campaign that organizations have ever headed. All the $170,500,000 to be raised by the seven great national organizations the week of November 11 will be used to garrison and supply the support trenches behind the lines. They are the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the National Catholic War Council, Jewish Welfare Board, American Library Association, War Camps Community Service, and Salvation Army.

American girls in various uniforms mingle strangely with picturesque Brittany costumes in France. The American Y. W. C. A. has a hostess house in Brittany where the Signal Corps women live and a hut where the nurses spend their free time. Both these centers are fitted with many of the comforts and conveniences of home.

"At a tea given at the nurses' hut one Saturday afternoon," writes Miss Mabel Warner, of Salina, Kansas, Y. W. C. A. worker there, "there was an odd gathering—one admiral, a bishop, a Presbyterian minister, a Roman Catholic priest, a doctor, an ensign, one civilian and myself."

First Victory Boy's Work.

"Say, I'm wise to you, all right," a Western Union messenger boy whispered to one of the directors of the United War Work Campaign in the New York headquarters. The director's desk had only just been moved in and the work of the big drive had hardly begun.

"I'm onto your stunt," the boy went on as he swung a grimy fist over the desk; "you're goin' to give us fellows that ain't old enough to go to war a chance to earn an' give to back up a fighter an' help win the war. Listen; I'm in on this."

The crumpled $5 bill he dropped on the desk made him the first of "a million boys behind a million fighters who are to be lined up as Victory Boys during the week of the drive.

There will be a division of Victory Girls, too, and every boy and every girl enrolled will have to earn every dollar he or she gives to the war work fund.

DANDRUFF MAKES HAIR FALL OUT

A small bottle of "Danderine" keeps hair thick, strong, beautiful.

Mind! Try this! Doubles beauty of your hair in a few moments.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you can not find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine for a few cents at any drug store or toilet counter, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine.—Adv.

The Hee-Haw Man.

The other day an Indianapolis mother, whose older children sing "Long Boy" with much zeal, happened to have her youngest daughter with her when she passed William Herschell, the writer of the song. She immediately called the little maid's attention to him. "There's the man who wrote the Long Boy song, dear," she told her, and then proceeded to repeat the chorus so that the youngster would remember the identity of the author.

The little girl remembered. That night she told her father of her trip uptown. "And oh, daddy," she finished, "I saw the hee-haw man and his mule wasn't with him."

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

CHAPTER NINETEEN—Continued.)

"Yes, flown. Our friend from the Ile Saint Louis is an artful dodger, you know. My lord's in his third motor. After the yellow car of which you heard at Versailles last night, he took another at Le Mans—destination unknown."

The deputy chief opened his eyes in amazement. Who was this person who was mentioning facts that had been telephoned to police headquarters only at 2 o'clock that morning? He gasped:

"But who are you, Monsieur?"

"What? Don't you know me? What's the good of making appointments with people? You strain every nerve to be punctual, and then they ask you who you are! Come, Weber, confess that you're doing it to annoy me. Must you gaze on my features in broad daylight? Here goes!"

He raised his mask.

"Arsene Lupin!" spluttered the detective.

"At your service, young fellow: on foot, in the saddle, and in mid air. That's where I'm going now. Good-bye."

And so great was Weber's astonishment at seeing Arsene Lupin, whom he had taken to the lockup 12 hours before, standing in front of him, free, at 240 miles from Paris, that Don Luis, as he went back to Davanne, thought:

"What a crusher! I've knocked him out in one round. There's no hurry. The referee will count 10 at least three times before Weber can say 'Mother!'"

Davanne was ready. Don Luis climbed into the monoplane. The peasants pushed at the wheels. The machine started.

"North-northeast." Don Luis ordered. "Ninety miles an hour. Ten thousand francs."

"We've the wind against us," said Davanne.

"Five thousand francs extra for the wind," shouted Don Luis.

He admitted no obstacle in his haste to reach Damigni. He now understood the whole thing and, harking back to the very beginning, he was surprised that his mind had never perceived the connection between the two skeletons hanging in the barn and the series of crimes resulting from the Mornington inheritance. Stranger still, how was it that the almost certain murder of Langernault, Hippolyte Fauville's old friend, had not afforded him all the clues which it contained? The crux of the sinister plot lay in that.

Who could have intercepted, on Fauville's behalf, the letters of accusation which Fauville was supposed to write to his old friend Langernault, except some one in the village or some one who had lived in the village?

And now everything was clear. It was the nameless scoundrel who started his career of crime by killing old Langernault and then the Dedessuslamare couple. The method was the same as later on: it was not direct murder, but anonymous murder, murder by suggestion. Like Mornington the American, like Fauville the engineer, like Marie, like Gaston Sauverand, old Langernault had been craftily done away with and the Dedessuslamare couple driven to commit suicide in the barn.

It was from there that the tiger had come to Paris, where later he was to find Fauville and Cosmo Mornington and plot the tragic affair of the inheritance.

And it was there that he was now returning. There was no doubt about that. To begin with, the fact that he had administered a narcotic to Florence constituted an indisputable proof. Was he not obliged to put Florence to sleep in order to prevent her from recognizing the landscape of Alencon and Damigni, or the Old Castle, which she had explored with Gaston Sauverand?

On the other hand, the Le Mans-Angers-Nantes route, which had been taken to put the police on a false track, meant only an extra hour or two, at most, for any one motoring to Alencon. Lastly, that coach house near a big town, that limousine waiting, ready charged with petrol, showed that the villain, when he intended to visit his retreat, took the precaution of stopping at Le Mans, in order to go from there, 43 in his limousine, to Langernault's deserted estate.

He would therefore reach his lair at 10 o'clock that morning. And he would arrive there with Florence Levasseur dead asleep! The question forced itself upon him, the terrible persistent question—what did he mean to do with Florence Levasseur?

"Faster! Faster!" cried Don Luis.

Now that he knew the scoundrel's haunt, the man's scheme became hideously evident to him. Feeling himself hunted down, lost, an object of hatred and terror to Florence, whose eyes were now opened to the true state of things, what plan could he have in mind except his invariable plan of murder?

"Faster!" cried Don Luis. "We're making no headway. Go faster, can't you?"

Florence murdered! Perhaps the crime was not yet accomplished. No, it could not be! Killing takes time. It is preceded by words, by the offer of a bargain by threats, by entreaties, by a wholly unspeakable scene. But the thing was being prepared. Florence was going to die!

Florence was going to die by the hand of the brute who loved her. For he loved her. Don Luis had an intuition of that monstrous love; and he was bound to believe that such a love could only end in torture and bloodshed.

Sable . . . Sille-le-Guillaume. . . .

The earth sped beneath them. The trees and houses glided by like shadows.

And then Alencon.

It was hardly more than a quarter to two when they landed in a meadow between the town and Damagni. Don Luis made inquiries. A number of motor cars had passed along the road to Damigni, including a small limousine driven by a gentleman who turned down a cross road. And this cross road led to the woods at the back of Langernault's estate, the old castle.

Don Luis's conviction was so firm that, after taking leave of Davanne, he helped him to start on his homeward flight. He had no further need of him. He needed nobody. The final duel was at hand.

He ran along, guided by the tracks of the tires in the dust, and followed the crossroad. To his great surprise this road went nowhere near the wall behind the barn from which he had jumped a few weeks before. After clearing the woods, Don Luis came out into a large untilled space where the road turned back toward the estate and ended at an old two-winged gate protected with iron sheets and bars.

The limousine had gone in that way.

"And I must get in this way too," thought Don Luis. "I must get in at all costs and immediately, without wasting time in looking for an opening or a handy tree."

Now the wall was thirteen feet high at this spot. Don Luis got in. How he managed it, by what superhuman effort, he himself could not have said after he had done it.

Somehow or other, by hanging on to invisible projections, by digging a knife which he had borrowed from Davanne into the interstices between the stones, he managed it.

And when he was on the other side he discovered the tracks of the tires running to the left, toward a part of the grounds which he did not know, more undulating than the other and broken up with little hills and ruined buildings covered with thick curtains of ivy.

Deserted though the rest of the park was, this portion seemed much more uncivilized, in spite of the ragged remains of box and laurel hedges that stood here and there amidst the nettles and brambles, and the luxuriant swarm of tall wild flowers, valerian, mullein, hemlock, foxglove, and angelica.

Suddenly, on turning the corner of an old hedge of clipped yews, Don Luis saw the limousine, which had been left, or, rather, hidden there in a hollow. The door was open. The disorder of the inside of the car, the rug hanging over the footboard, a broken window, a cushion on the floor, all bore witness to a struggle. The scoundrel had no doubt taken advantage of the fact that Florence was asleep to tie her up; and on arriving, when he tried to take her out of the car, Florence must have clutched at everything that offered.

Don Luis at once verified the correctness of his theory. As he went along the very narrow, grass grown path that led up the slope, he saw that the grass was uniformly pressed down.

"Oh, the villain!" he thought. "The villain! He doesn't carry his victim, he drags her!"

If he had listened only to his instinct, he would have rushed to Florence's rescue. But his profound sense of what to do and what to avoid saved him from committing any such imprudence. At the first alarm, at the least sound, the tiger would have throttled his prey. To escape this hideous catastrophe, Don Luis must take him by surprise and then and there deprive him of his power of action. He controlled himself, therefore, and slowly and cautiously mounted the incline.

The path ran upward between heaps of stones and fallen buildings, and among clumps of shrubs overtopped by beeches and oaks. The place was evidently the site of the old feudal castle which had given the estate its name; and it was here, near the top, that the scoundrel had selected one of his retreats.

The trail continued over the trampled herbage. And Don Luis even caught sight of something shinging on the ground, in a tuft of grass. It was a ring, a tiny and very simple ring, consisting of a gold circlet and two small pears, which he had often noticed on Florence's finger. And the fact that caught his attention was that a blade of grass passed and repassed and passed a third time through the inside of the ring, like a ribbon that had been rolled round it deliberately.

"It's a clear signal," said Perenna to himself. "The villain probably stopped here to rest; and Florence, bound up, but with her fingers free, was able to leave this evidence of her passage."

So the girl still hoped. She expected assistance. And Don Luis reflected with emotion that it was perhaps to him that this last desperate appeal was addressed.

Fifty steps farther and this detail pointed to the rather curious fatigue experienced by the scoundrel—there was a second halt and a second clue, a flower, a field sage, which the poor little hand had picked and plucked of its petals. Next came the print of the five fingers dug into the ground, and next a cross drawn with a pebble. And in this way he was able to follow, minute by minute, all the successive stages of the horrible journey.

The last stopping place was near. The climb became steeper and rougher. The fallen stones occasioned more frequent obstacles. On the right the Gothic arches, the remains of a chapel, stood out against the blue sky. On the left was a strip of wall with a mantlepiece still clinging to it.

Twenty steps farther Don Luis stopped. He seemed to hear something.

He listened. He was not mistaken. The sound was repeated, and it was the sound of laughter. But such an awful laugh! A strident laugh, evil as the laughter of a devil, and so shrill! It was more like the laugh of a woman, of a mad woman.

Again silence. Then another noise, the noise of an implement striking the ground, then silence again.

And this was happening at a distance which Don Luis estimated at a hundred yards.

The path ended in three steps cut in the earth. At the top was a fairly large plateau, also encumbered with rubbish and ruins. In the center, opposite Don Luis, stood a screen of immense laurels planted in a semicircle. The marks of trodden grass led up to it.

Don Luis was a little surprised, for the screen presented an impenetrable outline. He walked on and found that there had once been a cutting, and that the branches had ended by meeting again. They were easy to push aside; and it was through here that the scoundrel must have passed. To all appearances he was there now, at the end of his journey, not far away, occupied in some sinister task.

Indeed the air was rent by a chuckle, so close by that Don Luis gave a start and felt as if the scoundrel were laughing before hand at his intervention. He remembered the words written in red ink:

"There's still time, Lupin. Retire from the contest, or not, it means your death, too. When you think that your object is attained, when your hand is raised against me and you utter a cry of triumph, at the same moment the ground will open beneath your feet. The place of your death is chosen. The snare is laid. Beware, Lupin!"

The whole letter passed through his brain, with its formidable threat. And he felt a shiver of fear. But no fear could stay the man that he was. He had already taken hold of the branches with his hands and was clearing a way for himself.

He stopped. A last bulwark of leaves hid him from sight. He pulled some of them aside at the level of his eyes.

And he saw . . . .

First of all, he saw Florence, alone at this moment, lying on the ground, bound, at thirty yards in front of him; and he at once perceived, to his intense delight, from certain movements of her head that she was still alive. He had come in time. Florence was not dead. She would not die. That was a certainty against which nothing could prevail. Florence would not die.

Then he examined the things around. To the right and left of where he stood the screen of laurels curved and embraced a sort of arena in which, among yews that had once been clipped into cones, lay capitals, columns, broken pieces of arches and vaults, obviously placed there to adorn the formal garden that had been laid out on the ruins of the ancient donjon-keep.

In the middle was a small circular space reached by two narrow paths, one of which presented the same traces of trodden grass and was a continuation of that by which Don Luis had come, while the other intersected the first at right angles and joined the two ends of the screen of shrubs.

Opposite was a confused heap of broken stones and natural rocks, cemented with clay, bound together by the roots of gnarled trees, the whole forming at the back of the picture a small, shallow grotto, full of crevices that admitted the light. The floor, which Don Luis could easily distinguish, consisted of three or four flagstones.

Florence Levasseur lay inside this grotto, bound hand and foot, looking like the victim of some mysterious sacrifice about to be performed on the altar of the grotto, in the amphitheater of this old garden closed by the wall of tall laurels and overlooked by a pile of ancestral ruins.

In spite of the distance, Don Luis was able to make out every detail of her pale face. Though convulsed with anguish, it still retained a certain serenity, an expression of waiting and even of expectancy, as if Florence, believing, until the last moment, in the possibility of a miracle, had not yet relinquished all hope of life.

Nevertheless, though she was not gagged, she did not call for help. Perhaps she thought that it was useless, and that the road which she had strewn with marks of her passing was more likely to bring assistance to her side than cries, which the villain would soon have stifled. Strange to say, it seemed to Don Luis as if the girl's eyes were obstinately fixed on the very spot where he was hiding. Possibly she suspected his presence. Possibly she foresaw his help.

Suddenly Don Luis clutched one one of his revolvers and half raised his arm, ready to take aim. The sacrificer, the butcher, had just appeared, not far from the altar on which the victim lay.

He came from between two rocks, of which a bush marked the intervening space, which apparently afforded but a very low outlet, for he still walked as though bent double, with his head bowed and his long arms swinging so low as to touch the ground.

He went to the grotto and gave his horrible chuckle:

"You're still there, I see," he said. "No sign of the rescuer? Perseus is a little late, I fear. He'd better hurry!"

The tone of his voice was so shrill that Don Luis heard every word, and so odd, so unhuman, that it gave him a feeling of physical discomfort. He gripped his revolver tightly, prepared to shoot at the first suspicious movement.

"He'd better hurry!" repeated the scoundrel, with a laugh. "If not, all will be over in five minutes. You see that I'm a man of method, eh, Florence, my darling?"

Patented Cage for Cashiers, Operated by Official's Foot, Is a Latest Invention.

The up-to-date bank cashier will not [illegible] to steal a match on the ordinary uses of the age if he has any hope of accomplishing his designs. Former Watson Arnold of Dawson, N. Y., has invented and patented an armor plate cage for bank cashiers, according to Popular Science Monthly.

"Hands up!" says the cashier to the robber, and is obeyed with the expected alacrity. Push button beneath official's foot surreptitiously releases a spring that causes steel doors and armor-plate to move into position and encase him.

Adjustable plates fitted over the openings in a teller's cage are connected by a system of cables and pulleys with some stationary member attached beneath the desk. When in use, a trigger engages set weights applied to the pulleys. The trigger is connected with the arm of a bell crank lever, the other arm of which is connected with a rod or cable that is again attached to the foot lever.

Get New Kidneys

The kidneys are the most overworked organs of the human body and when they fail in their work of filtering out and throwing off the poisons developed in the system, things begin to happen.

One of the first warnings is pain or weakness in the lower part of the back, highly colored urine; loss of appetite, indigestion; irritation, or even stone in the bladder. These symptoms indicate a condition that may lead to that dreaded and fatal malady, Bright's disease, for which there is said to be no cure.

Do not delay a minute. At the first indication of trouble in the kidneys, bladder or urinary organs start taking Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules, and save yourself before it is too late. Immediate treatment is necessary in kidney and bladder troubles. A delay is often fatal.

What would you consumers think of a wheel without spokes?

Swift & Company's business of getting fresh meat to you is a wheel, of which the packing plant is only the hub. Retail dealers are the rim—and Swift & Company Branch Houses are the spokes.

The hub wouldn't do the wheel much good and you wouldn't have much use for hub or rim if it weren't for the spokes that fit them all together to make a wheel of it.

Swift & Company Branch Houses are placed, after thorough investigation, in centers where they can be successfully operated and do the most good for the most people at the least possible cost.

Kissed By His Nurse

From the Indianapolis News

An Indianapolis officer writing from a hospital in France tells how a French officer pinned a war cross on his pajamas and how, without any warning, one of the nurses hurried to his bedside and planted "a nice rosy kiss on the ugly mug of yours truly" There is no reason to believe that is a love affair Doubtless it was a proxy kiss—it represented the feminine members of his family

Fiction nurses have been of one kind In the illustrations they were strangely beautiful Always their hands were cool and their uniforms fresh Some young millionaire had been picked up and carried to the hospital where the nurse fought for his life grim death stalking just behind the door His identity was not known but he was a man wide of shoulder and small of girth He had a flat back and his close cropped hair was inclined to be curly By and by he became rational The first thing he realized was the cooling touch of the nurse's hand on his feverish brow But why continue? He always married her and they lived happily ever after

Much has been heard about the splendid service of American nurses in France They have worked in dangerous territory and under conditions that would appall the average man They have had the courage to do what they went over there to do and they have made a grateful country their perpetual debtor There was so much discipline and so much need for haste about their work that romance has not had much chance Military etiquet does not provide that a kiss shall be given with each hot water bottle Yet there is nothing so soothing sometimes and nothing better calculated to take a patient's mind away from his aches and pains Perhaps the future will bring forth the fact from France that some of the nurses have been decorated for distinguished services because they knew when it was proper to kiss a patient and when it was needful to give him a dose of medicine

Need Higher Education.

From the Washington (D. C.) Post

"The Hun must be whipped at any cost, but I hope the young men of this country will return to college after the war is over," said Col. Marcel L. Bruckner, of Dallas, at congress hall "The necessity for higher education is well illustrated by a story which was told in the recent race between Governor Hobby and Ferguson for the governorship of Texas. Ferguson was opposed to the management of Texas university, and the campaign finally became a contest between those for or against higher education. A prominent lawyer who was supporting Ferguson, advocating larger appropriations for the little red schoolhouse suddenly switched When asked what occasioned the change he gave the following explanation

"'Down in Hill county there is a rural mail carrier whose chief occupation is playing poker, and he succeeded in breaking all the young sports along his route. Being a fair power player myself I concluded to break him Finding my victim, I asked him if he would like to play a little draw poker, and he was delighted. He produced a deck of cards, and I saw immediately each one was crudely marked on the back. For instance, he had a "K" for a king, a "Q" for a queen, a "J" for a jack, and so on. He dealt the hand, giving me a 10, jack, queen, king and 5 deuce. He gave himself three kings. The top card in the deck, which would come to me was marked with "A" I thought I had a cinch.

"'He opened the pot and I raised him, and this continued until I had all my money in I drew one card and he took two. I looked at his hand and then at mine "How do you spell eight?" I asked him He replied "Aight." Since then I have been strongly of the opinion that the people of this country needed higher education'"

LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE IF SICK, CROSS, FEVERISH

HURRY, MOTHER! REMOVE POISONS FROM LITTLE STOMACH, LIVER, BOWELS.

GIVE CALIFORNIA SYRUP OF FIGS AT ONCE IF BILIOUS OR CONSTIPATED.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels needs a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company" Refuse any other kind with contempt.—Adv.

Two modistes in a large city (they would have been known as dressmakers in towns of fewer than 20,000 inhabitants) were discussing a third modiste who had the nerve and presumption to try to break into the modiste game

"Why Mrs. DeChiffons will never make a successful modiste in the world," exclaimed one of the women. "She has no imagination."

"I fail to see why an imagination is a requisite for a modiste," said a gloomy looking man who had heard the conversation. "So little is left to it these days."

SPANISH INFLUENZA—WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT SHOULD BE TREATED

Nothing New—Simply the Old Grip or La Grippe That Was Epidemic in 1889-90, Only Then It Came From Russia by Way of France and This Time by Way of Spain

Go to Bed and Stay Quiet—Take a Laxative—Eat Plenty of Nourishing Food—Keep Up your Strength—Nature Is the Only "Cure"

ALWAYS CALL A DOCTOR

NO OCCASION FOR PANIC

Spanish influenza, which appeared in Spain in May, has all the appearances of grip, or la grippe, which has swept over the world in numerous epidemics as far back as history runs. Hippocrates refers to an epidemic in 412 B. C., which is regarded by many to have been influenza. Every century has had its attacks. Beginning with 1831 this country has had five epidemics, the last in 1889-90.

There is no occasion for panic—influenza itself has a very low percentage of fatalities—not over one death out of every 400 cases, according to the N. C. board of health. The chief danger lies in complications arising, attacking principally patients in a run-down condition—those who don't go to bed soon enough or those who get up too early.

THE SYMPTOMS

Grip, or influenza, as it is now called, usually begins with a chill, followed by aching, feverishness, and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucous membrane or lining of the air passages, nose, throat and bronchial tubes; there is usually a hard cough, especially bad at night; oftentimes a sore throat or tonsillitis, and frequently all the appearances of a severe head cold.

THE TREATMENT

Go to bed at the first symptoms, not only for your own sake, but to avoid spreading the disease to others—take a purgative, eat plenty of nourishing food, remain perfectly quiet and don't worry. Quinine, aspirin or Dover's Powders, etc., may be administered by the physician's directions to relieve the aching. But there is no cure or specific for influenza—the disease must run its course. Nature herself will throw off the attack if only you keep up your strength. The chief danger lies in the complications which may arise. Influenza so weakens the bodily resistance that there is danger of pneumonia or bronchitis developing, and sometimes inflammation of the middle ear, or heart affections. For these reasons it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns—stay in bed at least two days or more after the fever has left you, or if you are over 50 or not strong stay in bed four days or more, according to the severity of the attack.

EXTERNAL APPLICATIONS

In order to stimulate the lining of the air passages to throw off the grippe germs, to aid in loosening the phlegm and keeping the air passages open, thus making the breathing easier, Vick's VapoRub will be found effective. Hot, wet towels should be applied over the throat, chest and back between the shoulder blades to open the pores. Then VapoRub should be rubbed in over the parts until the skin is red, spread on thickly and cover with two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck, as the heat of the body liberates the ingredients in the form of vapors. These vapors, inhaled with each breath, carry the medication directly to the parts affected. At the same time VapoRub is absorbed through and stimulates the skin, attracting the blood to the surface, and thus aids in relieving the congestion within.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE

Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing or spitting. To avoid persons having colds—which means avoiding crowds—common drinking cups, roller towels, etc. Keep up your bodily strength by plenty of exercise in the open air, and good food. Above all, avoid colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them much better breeding places for the germs.

KEEP FREE FROM COLDS

Use Vick's VapoRub at the very first sign of a cold. For a head cold, melt a little VapoRub in a spoon and inhale the vapors, or better still, use VapoRub in a benzoin steam kettle. If this is not available, use an ordinary teakettle. Fill half-full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling and inhale the steam arising.

Note—Vick's VapoRub is the discovery of a North Carolina druggist, who found how to combine, in salve form, Menthol and Camphor with such volatile oils as Eucalyptus, Thyme, Cubebs, etc., so that when the salve is applied to the body heat, these ingredients are liberated in the form of vapors.

VapoRub is comparatively new in New York State and New England and a few Western states where it is just now being introduced, but in other sections of the country it is the standard home remedy in more than a million homes for all forms of cold troubles. Over six million jars were sold last year. VapoRub can be had in three sizes at all druggists. It is particularly recommended for children's croup and colds, since it is externally applied and therefore can be used as freely as desired without the slightest harmful effects.

Each number was highly applauded by the audience.

The next number on the program was the hanging and burning of the Kaiser in effigy. The performance brought forth ringing cheers from the crowd and some of the remarks made about the Kaiser are not in the dictionary. Next the Crown Prince took the same trip to Hades via the rope route soaked plentifully with kerosene to get him there quicker.

The band boys were "Johnny-on-the-spot" with more music and led the procession to the hill west of town where good sports had labored nearly all morning gathering fuel for a big bon-fire, needless to say they had a heap as high as a house and the blaze it made was hot enough to scorch the Kaiser's whiskers in Berlin, or wherever the scoundrel is by this time

Back to town went the crowd, more music by the band boys, and then a great part of the people went to the dance hall where everybody danced free, for the older people a square dance was given and say, how some of those old boys could shake their feet wasn't slow and would put the younger class to shame. The dancers left for home about mid-night for the day had been long and full of excitement and all were tired.

Taken in all everything went off like clock work and the day began at the break of a glorious and beautiful day, not at all cold and a better evening could not have been chosen even by the weather man—all was in our favor for the greatest event in the history of the United States.

Here's to Our Boys who won the War for World Freedom, and may that Freedom be a peace everlasting and a blessing to the world. The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin, and all his associates, may they receive the extreme punishments of Hell for murder, devastation and deviltry they have wrought, DOWN WITH THEM AND THEIR METHODS FOREVER.

The emblem of LIBERTY shall now and forever rule over the world and crush the power which we have been fighting, CRUSH it that it can never rise again.

THE KAISER MAKES HIS WILL

Realizing End Is Near; He Makes His Will Revoking All Previous Wills

IN THE NAME OF GOTT, AMEN.

I take the name of Gott again in vain. I have violated every rule of Gott, but the people must be fooled. I, Wilhelm, the greatest Murderer the world has ever known; fearing that all my low, underhanded and vile schemes will not protect me now that the Yanks are on the job, and feeling that they are going to make this world an unsafe place for me, I make and declare this to be my last Will and Testament:

FIRST—My first wish and desire now that the Bolsheviki is getting it in the neckski; is to will Russia to my silly sons; so they can get Cannon Fodder there for future wars, but I fear President Wilson will recind this clause, and give Russia to her people. I hate this, because I hate democracy

SECOND—I give and bequeath to France all of her land and Alsace and Lorraine, not that I love France so much, but I cannot stand the million voices of her seventy-five, that have waked me in my sleep, and bother me by day. They have spoken so loud, and often, that I must heed their cry. I do not like to do this, but I cannot resist the temptation now to return stolen property.

THIRD—I give and bequeath to Belgium her land and ruined homes. It is my wish, however, that I be not made to pay for all the damage done, for I had to satisfy my fiendish soldiers who destroyed, because they were ordered to do so. I trust the good Allies who I have hated so much will not make me pay for the destruction, for I love to be cruel, but hate to pay for it.

FOURTH—I give and bequeath to Italy, peace and quiet for her Domains, for her gallant Soldiers did not treat my brave and kind men tenderly and as I do not want my refined Huns and their Austrian brothers contaminated by Italy's brave men, I generously give up all claim to her territory.

FIFTH—To Great Britain I leave the air and sea, as my attempts to control both were so hard and trying on my brave men, that I have decided out of the bigness of my heart to let her have her gallant Navy, her Airplanes and her Sea Coast unmolested by my will.

SIXTH—To America and the Yanks I will and direct that they have free passage home, the sooner the better for the "Dear Fatherland," for of all the nations that have destroyed the Peace and Quiet of my old age, the Yanks have done more than their share. My love for them is so great, and they have been so kind in their dealings with my Prussian Guards, and other cracked Regiments, I will that they all be bought a free ticket home at once.

SEVENTH—I give to my good, kind friend, Satan, who stood by me in all the four years of Warfare, and guided my every move, the famous Hindenburg Line; if I am still the possessor of the same at the time of my death, as my brave men driven by their brave Officers report to me that since the Tommies, Canadians, Australians, French, Belgians and Yanks have started to explore Von's possessions, it would make a good addition to Hell.

EIGHTH—I will that my body be buried in ten thousand fathoms of water. Not that I love the watery grave given to so many innocent women and children by my venomous submarines, but so that the world will not be able to find my body and heap millions of curses upon it until the end of the Universe.

NINTH—I appoint and nominate Prince Maximillian to be my executor, to carry out this, my last Will, and pull the peace chestnuts out of the fire. If he should fall in and be burned to death, then I appoint anyone who is willing to risk his life to save the Fatherland for my most brilliant and unsuccessful son, the Crown Prince.

(Signed) H. I. M. WILHELM.

LEVI RIDDER HAS SMASH-UP

Car Plunges For Ditch After Hitting Culvert

Lee Ridder had quite a sensational experience Monday afternoon as he was returning from Goodell with the rest of the Klemme Boosters. He was driving his Buick roadster and had picked up a little race with one of the other fellows or was trying to catch up with one of the speedy ones ahead when he hit a rather high culvert, going at a fast clip which threw the car into the ditch, plowing a furrow for about twelve feet and clipping off a fence post before it stopped. Neither Ridder or George Musefelt who was riding with him were even scratched, but the car received a broken ax in front and a few bad dents and bends, but not beyond repair. Both the boys hung to the car and were still hanging on when it stopped. It was a lucky accident in that no one was hurt and also the car not badly damaged.

HARDING VICTORY CELEBRATED BY ENTHUSIASTIC KLEMME SUPPORTERS

Torches And Banners And Big Parade

Harding carried the state for Governor by about thirteen thousand majority and when the returns came in last Thursday of his victory over Porter the local Harding supporters at once decided on a celebration. Locally the vote went 116 for Porter and 53 for Harding but this local defeat did not dampen the ardor of the Harding men of Klemme.

Shortly after supper the Harding Boosters went out on the street all fifty-three of them and some besides, all carry... torches and distinctive banners and signs. The parade went up both sides of Main Street and on each corner a Harding yell was given. A few of the side streets were also taken in during the parade. A big bon-fire was set going on the street and the Harding boosters gave yells and a "war dance" around the same.

The whole affair went off in a smooth manner and no ill feeling was caused to anyone. All was taken in a good natured manner by the Porter men and good fellowship prevailed

GIVEN PARTY, BUT DOES NOT GO TO WAR

Leslie Hartbeck enjoyed a little party Monday evening at the expense of his many friends. Leslie was to leave with a number of other Hancock county boys for Camp Wednesday of this week. The call was cancelled on Tuesday and Leslie figures he is just ahead a whole lot of good eats and a fine time, all of which he received at the party by his friends.

WOMAN'S NERVES MADE STRONG

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Winona, Minn.—"I suffered for more than a year from nervousness, and was so bad I could not rest at night—would lie awake and get so nervous I would have to get up and walk around and in the morning would be all tired out. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and thought I would try it. My nervousness soon left me. I sleep well and feel fine in the morning and able to do my work. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make weak nerves strong."—Mrs. ALBERT SULTZE, 603 Olmstead St., Winona, Minn.

How often do we hear the expression among women, "I am so nervous, I cannot sleep," or "it seems as though I should fly." Such women should profit by Mrs. Sultze's experience and give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial.

For forty years it has been overcoming such serious conditions as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, dizziness, and nervous prostration of women, and is now considered the standard remedy for such ailments.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

(CHAPTER NINETEEN—Continued.)

He picked up something from the ground. It was a stick shaped like a crutch. He put it under his left arm and, still bent in two, began to walk like a man who has not the strength to stand erect. Then suddenly and with no apparent cause to explain his change of attitude, he drew himself up and used his crutch as he would a cane. He then walked round the outside of the grotto, making a careful inspection, the meaning of which escaped Don Luis for the time.

He was of a good height in this position; and Don Luis easily understood why the driver of the yellow taxi, who had seen him under two such different aspects, was unable to say whether he was tall or very short.

But his legs, slack and unsteady, gave way beneath him, as if any prolonged exertion were beyond his power. He relapsed into his first attitude.

The man was a cripple, smitten with some disease that affected his powers of locomotion. He was excessively thin. Don Luis also saw his pallid face, his cavernous cheeks: the face of a sufferer from consumption, a bloodless face.

When he had finished his inspection, he came up to Florence and said:

"Though you've been very good, baby, and haven't screamed so far, we'd better take our precautions and remove any possibility of a surprise by giving you a nice little gag to wear, don't you think?

He stooped over her and wound a large handkerchief round the lower part of her face. Then, bending still farther down, he began to speak to her in a very low voice, talking almost into her ear. But wild bursts of laughter, horrible to hear interrupted this whispering.

Feeling the imminence of the danger, dreading some movement on the wretch's part, a sudden murderous attack, the prompt prick of a poisoned needle, Don Luis had leveled his revolver and, confident of his skill, waited events.

What was happening over there? What were the words spoken? What infamous bargain was the villain proposing to Florence? At what shameful price could she obtain her release?

The cripple stepped back angrily, shouting in furious accents:

"But don't you understand that you are done for? Now that I have nothing more to fear, now that you have been silly enough to come with me and place yourself in my power, what hope have you left? To move me, perhaps: is that it? Because I'm burning with passion, you imagine——? Oh, you never made a greater mistake, my pet! I don't care a fig if you do die. Once dead, you cease to count.

"What else? Perhaps you consider that, being crippled, I shall not have the strength to kill you? But there's no question of my killing you, Florence. Have you ever known me kill people? Never! I'm much too big a coward. I should be frightened, I should shake all over. No, no Florence, I can't touch you, and yet——

"Here, look what's going to happen, see for yourself. I tell you the thing's managed in my own style. . . . And, whatever you do, don't be afraid. It's only a preliminary warning."

He had moved away and, helping himself with his hands, holding on to the branches of a tree, he climbed up the first layers of rock that formed the grotto on the right. Here he knelt down. There was a small pickaxe lying beside him. He took it and gave three blows to the nearest heap of stones. They came tumbling down in front of the grotto.

Don Luis sprung from his hiding place with a roar of terror. He had suddenly realized the position: The grotto, the accumulation of boulders, the piles of granite, everything was so placed that its equilibrium could be shattered at any moment, and that Florence ran the risk of being buried under the rubbish. It was not a question, therefore, of slaying the villain, but of saving Florence on the spot.

He was halfway across in two or three seconds. But there, in one of those mental flashes which are even quicker than the maddest rush, he became aware that the tracks of trampled grass did not cross the central circus and that the scoundrel had gone round it. Why? That was one of the questions which instinct, ever suspicious, puts, but which reason has not the time to answer. Don Luis went straight ahead. And he had no sooner set foot on the place than the catastrophe occured.

It all happened with incredible suddenness, as though he had tried to walk on space and found himself hurdled into it. The ground gave way beneath him. The clods of grass separated, and he fell.

He fell down a hole which was none other than the mouth of a well four feet wide at most, the curb of which had been cut down level with the ground. Only this was what took place as he was running very fast, his impetus flung him against the opposite wall in such a way that his forearms lay on the outer ledge and his hands were able to clutch at the roots of plants.

So great was his strength that he might just have been able to drag himself up by his wrists. But responding to the attack, the scoundrel had at once hurried to meet his assailant and was now standing at ten paces from Don Luis, threatening him with his revolver.

"Don't move!" he cried, "or I'll smash you!"

Don Luis was thus reduced to helplessness, at the risk of receiving the enemy's fire.

Their eyes met for a few seconds. The cripple's were burning with fever, like the eyes of a sick man.

Crawling along, watching Don Luis's slightest movement, he came and squatted beside the wall. The revolver was levelled in his outstretched hand. And his infernal chuckle rang out again:

"Lupin! Lupin! That's done it! Lupin's dive!

What a mug you must be! I warned you, you know, warned you in blood red ink. Remember my words. 'The place of your death is chosen. The snare is laid. Beware, Lupin!' And here you are! So you're not in prison? You warded off that stroke, you rogue, you! Fortunately, I foresaw events and took my precautions. What do you say to it? What do you think of my little scheme? I said to myself. All the police will come rushing at my heels. But there's only one who's capable of catching me, and that's Lupin. So we'll show him the way, we'll lead him on the leash all along a little path scraped clean by the victim's victims' bodies.

"And then a few landmarks, scattered here and there. First, the fair damsel's ring, with a blade of grass twisted round it; farther on a flower without its petals, farther on the marks of five fingers in the ground next, the sign of the cross. No mistaking them, was there? Once you thought me fool enough to give Florence time to play Hop-o'-Thumb's game, it was bound to lead you straight to the mouth of the well, to the clods of turf which I dabbed across it last month, in anticipation of this windfall.

"Remember. 'The snare is laid.' And a snare after my own style, Lupin, one of the best! Oh, I love getting rid of people with their kind assistance. We work together like friends and partners. You've caught the notion, haven't you?

"I don't do my own job. The others do it for me, hanging themselves or giving themselves careless injections unless they prefer the mouth of a well, as you see I to do. My poor old chap, what a sticky mess you're in! I never saw such a face, never, on my word! Florence, do look at the expression on your swain's mobile features!"

He broke off, seized with a fit of laughter that shook his outstretched arm, imparted the most savage look to his face, and set his legs jerking under his body like the legs of a dancing doll. His enemy was growing weaker before his eyes. Don Luis's fingers, which had first gripped the roots of the grass, were now vainly clutching the stones of the wall. And his shoulders were sinking lower and lower into the well.

"We've done it!" spluttered the villain, in the midst of his convulsions of merriment. "Lord, how good it is to laugh! Especially when one so seldom does. Yes, I'm a wet blanket, I am; a first rate man at a funeral! You've never seen me laugh, Florence, have you? But this time it's really too amusing. Lupin in his hole and Florence in her grotto; one dancing a jig above the abyss and the other at her last gasp under her mountain. What a sight!

"Come, Lupin, don't tire yourself! What's the use of those grimaces? You're not afraid of eternity, are you? A good man like you, the Don Quixote of modern times! Come, let yourself go. There's not even any water in the well to splash about in. No, it's just a nice little slide into infinity. You can't so much as hear the sound of a pebble when you drop it in; and just now I threw a piece of lighted paper down and lost sight of it in the dark. Brrrr! It sent a cold shiver down my back!

"Come, be a man. It'll only take a moment, and you've been through worse than that! . . . Good, you nearly did it then. You're making up your mind to it. . . . I say, Lupin! . . . Lupin! . . . Aren't you going to say good-bye? Not a smile, not a word of thanks? Au revoir, Lupin, au revoir——"

He ceased. He watched for the appalling end which he had so cleverly prepared and of which all the incidents were following close on one another in accordance with his inflexible will.

It did not take long. The shoulders had gone down; the chain; and then the mouth convulsed with the death grin; and then the yes, drunk with terror; and then the forehead and the hair, the whole head, in short, had disappeared.

The cripple sat gazing wildly, as though in ecstasy, motionless, with an expression of fierce delight, and without a word that could trouble the silence and interrupt his hatred.

At the edge of the abyss nothing remained but the hands, the obstinate, stubborn, desperate, heroic hands, the poor, helpless hands which alone still lived, and which gradually, retreating toward death, yielded and fell back and let go.

The hands had slipped. For a moment the fingers held on like claws. So natural was the effort which they made that it looked as if they did not even yet despair, unaided, of resuscitating and bringing back to the light of day the corpse already entombed in the darkness. And then they in their turn gave way. And then—and then, suddenly, there was nothing more to be seen and nothing more to be heard.

The cripple started to his feet, as though released by a spring, and yelled with delight:

"Oof! That's done it! Lupin in the bottomless pit! One more adventure finished! Oof!"

Turning in Florence's direction he once more danced his dance of death. He raised himself to his full height and then suddenly crouched down again, throwing about his legs like the grotesque, ragged limbs of a scarecrow. And he sang and whistled and belched forth insults and hideous blasphemies.

Then he came to the yawning mouth of the well and, standing some way off, as if still afraid to come nearer, he spat into it three times.

Nor was this enough for his hatred. There were some broken pieces of statuary on the ground. He took a carved head, rolled it along the grass, and sent it crashing down the well. A little farther away was a stack of old, rusty cannon balls. These also he rolled to the edge and pushed in. Five, ten, fifteen cannon balls went scooting down, one after the other, banging against the walls with a loud and sinister noise which the echo swelled into the angry roar of distant thunder.

"There, take that, Lupin! I'm sick of you, you dirty cad! That's for the spokes you put in my wheel, over that damned inheritance! . . . Here, take this, too! . . . And this! . . . And this! . . . Here's a chocolate for you in case you're hungry. . . . Do you want another? Here you are, old chap! catch!"

He staggered, seized with a sort of giddiness, and had to squat on his haunches. He was utterly spent. However, obeying a last convulsion, he still found strength to kneel down by the well, and leaning over the darkness, he stammered, breathlessly:

"Hi! I say! Corpse! Don't go knocking at the gate of hell at once! . . . The little girl's joining you in twenty minutes. . . . Yes, that's it, at four o'clock. . . . You know I'm punctual man and keep my appointments to the minute. She'll be with you at four o'clock exactly.

"By the way, I was almost forgetting: the inheritance—you know, Mornington's hundred millions—well, that's mine. Why, of course! You can't doubt that I took all my precautions! Florence will explain everything presently. . . . It's a very well thought out—you'll see—you'll see——"

He could not get out another word. The last syllables sounded more like hiccoughs. The sweat poured from his hair and his forehead, and he sank to the ground moaning like a dying man tortured by the last throes of death.

He remained like that for some minutes, with his head in his hands, shivering all over his body. He appeared to be suffering everywhere, in each anguished muscle, in each sick nerve. Then under the influence of a thought that seemed to make him act unconsciously, one of his hands crept spasmodically down his side, and, groping, uttering hoarse cries of pain, he managed to take from his pocket and put to his lips a phial out of which he greedily drank two or three mouthfuls.

He at once revived, as though he had swallowed warmth and strength. His eyes grew calmer, his mouth shaped itself into a horrible smile to Florence and said:

"Don't flatter yourself, pretty one; I'm not gone yet, and I've plenty of time to attend to you. And then, after that, there'll be no more worries, no more of that scheming and fighting that wears one out. A nice, quiet, uneventful life for me! . . . With a hundred millions one can afford to take life easy, eh, little girl? . . . Come on, I'm feeling much better!"

CHAPTER XX.

Florence's Secret.

It was time for the second act of the tragedy. Don Luis Perenn's death was to be followed by that of Florence. Like some monstrous butcher, the cripple passed from one to the other with no more compassion than if he were dealing with the oxen in a slaughter house.

Still weak in his limbs, he dragged himself to where the girl lay, took a cigaret from a gunmetal case, and, with a final touch of cruelty, said:

"When this cigaret is quite burnt out, Florence, it will be your turn. Keep your eyes on it. It represents the last minutes of your life reduced to ashes. Keep your eyes on it, Florence, and think.

"I want you to understand this: all the owners of the estate, and old Langernault in particular, have always considered that the heap of rocks and stones overhanging your head was bound to fall to pieces sooner or later. And I myself, for years, with untiring patience, believing in a favorable opportunity, have amused myself by making it crumble away still more, by undermining it with the rain water, in short, by working at it in such a way that, upon my word, I can't make out how the thing keeps standing at all. Or, rather, I do understand.

"The few strokes with the pickaxe which I gave it just now were merely intended for a warning. But I have only to give one more in the right place, and knock out a little brick wedged in between two lumps of stone, for the whole thing to tumble to the ground like a house of cards.

"A little brick, Florence," he chuckled, "a tiny little brick which chance placed there, between two blocks of stone, and has kept in position until now. Out comes the brick, down come the blocks, and there's your catastrophe!"

ONE OF MANY AFFIDAVITS

"For several years I was afflicted with a Simple (or external) Goiter. It was a large swelling and annoyed me very much besides depriving me of my rest, many times causing me to sit up in bed suddenly at night and gasp for breath. It also caused me to suffer a great deal with palpitation of the heart. I took three treatments of Dr. Warner's Goiter Remedy and every vestige of the Goiter is gone. In fact I have almost forgotten I ever had a goiter. To those afflicted as I was, I would say: By all means use Dr. Warner's Remedy—the sooner the better. Do not be afraid the medicine will also benefit your general health; at least it benefited mine and did the same for several of my friends who used the treatments." Signed, Miss Lottie Jonas, 66 W. [illegible]

PERSHING DETERMINED TO PROTECT HIS MEN

Headquarters American Expeditionary Forces, [illegible] General Pershing's order forbids the use of all alcoholic beverages except light wines and beers by soldiers and instituting various forms of athletic and whole some amusements to prevent immorality has brought him most gratifying favorable comment from American official sources which have been [illegible] for the betterment of the men in the field. Almost immediate disciplinary effect has been the salutary effect.

Efforts are being made to keep every American soldier who is not actually under fire or in the trenches occupied with instruction, recreation or useful subjects. Work, drill, baseball, football, wrestling, boxing, foot races and other forms of sport, athletic games, musical entertainments and clean picture shows.

The determination of the American commander to secure a rigid enforcement of his anti-drunkenness and anti-immorality regulation was indicated in a letter written by General Pershing to visiting representatives to a British-American conference on the subject, in which he said:

"The gravest responsibility rests on us to whom the parents of our soldiers have entrusted their sons to the army, and we fail if we neglect any effort to safeguard them in every way. We have the common ground of humanity, we have the well considered decisions of the best scientific minds on both sides and from the fact that in this war of nations in arms the soldier is merely a citizen on war service, we have all the elements which will force co-operation between military and civil authorities."

Leniency by courts martial in dealing with cases arising from non-observance of the order General Pershing stated, will not be tolerated and to insure this the said records of all courts martial will be carefully examined and any lax courts and officers strictly accountable.

GIVES IRON CROSS FOR AMERICAN CIGARET

A British Port dispatch says German prisoners captured in the recent fighting who have arrived here show a surprising depreciation of the once coveted iron cross. One of them traded his decoration for a cigaret and an American officer who accompanied the captives from France said several of them spoke slightingly of the war token bestowed upon them by Emperor William.

A marked change in the demeanor of the new prisoners was also noticeable. Instead of the arrogant and almost insolent manner which characterized their predecessors, when the Germans were sweeping everything before them, the latest contingent seems humble and crestfallen. Almost every officer and one in 10 of the men wore the ribbon of the iron cross.

The tobacco famine which exists among the prisoners makes it easy for American soldiers to collect souvenirs. The Germans will part with almost any of their belongings for a package of cigarets.

American troops are leaving here for France daily with bands playing and flags flying.

VENEZUELANS BECOME BASEBALL ENTHUSIASTS

New York.—According to the latest reports from Venezuela baseball beats bull fighting. From the American point of view there is nothing remarkable in such a statement. We always knew it did. But Pitcher Mutis, of the Borinquen Stars, the Porto Rican baseball club that recently visited Venezuela for a series of games, says that the sentiment has got hold in the South American republic where for centuries "la corrida de toros" has been the national sport. People there still go afternoons to the the "Toreador" give the deadly thrust to his victim but a greater number attend the morning baseball game and their enthusiasm at the "juago de pelota" is more intense and continuous. They bawl at the players and at each other, convincing proof that the fan has appeared in the South American republic. As players, the natives have not reached the Porto Rican standards, they are rather weak fielders and batters. But throw! Ave Maria! how they can throw. According to Mutis, Walter Johnson and Tris Speaker would sit up and take notice if they saw the "Venezolanos" "tirando la pelota."

So great is the desire of the people of Caracas to learn the American game that Mutis and one or two of his companions were persuaded to remain after the series to teach enthusiasts how to play it. It looks as if the pitchers of the future may come from Caracas or Maracaibo instead of the Texas league.

CAMOUFLAGE IS ART OF MODERN WARFARE

Word Comes From French Slang—How It Came to Be Used at This Time.

Behind the British Lines in France, my mother's prize believe forest stands along the edge of the road at the entrance to the American camouflage station here. It looks as natural as the real woods along the fighting front, with the shiny silver bark of beeches, the rough, jagged trunks of the old apple trees and the sprouting tops of the dwarf willows.

Yet, every tree in the camouflage forest has a steel core within which an observer peers forth to watch the movements of an enemy or a machine gun is located to sweep forth from its hidden recess. They are only one of the many strange devices to deceive and mystify the enemy which this American camouflage station is sending forth to the fighting army.

Camouflage is one of the distinctly new products of the war, even in the name which was used for the first time by General de Castelnau, Chief of staff of General Joffre. The word is not good French, but comes from the argot or French slang, the verb camoufler being used by French police to indicate any disguise used to capture criminals. For Example, a detective camouflages himself by dressing as a coachman.

Early in the war the famous portrait painter, Giron de Slvela conceived the idea of disguising batteries and buildings by painting them in fantastic patterns blending with the landscape. He laid the plan before General de Castelnau who, struck with the practical value of the plan, exclaimed "Camouflage." And from that time the words grew and with it grew into a tremendous magnitude this art of misleading the enemy.

The American army has been quick to make a full use of the strange new weapon of warfare and the camouflage plant is one of the most complete in existence with a working force of nearly 1,000 and a staff including many of the well known mural artists and decorators and sculptors of America, all of them engaged in producing these curious devices by which military art deceives the enemy.

One of the officers, Captain Homer Saint Gaudens is a son of the American sculptor Saint Gaudens. Another, Major Tracy, is a prominent architect who did much of the work on the Lincoln memorial. Lieutenant Barry Faulkner is an American mural artist and Lieutenant Sherry Fry an American sculptor in Paris. Sergeant Leslie Thrasher and F. Earl Christy and Corporal Dyer are well known American illustrators. Walt Lee is a cartoonist and Sergeant Murphy is an American mural decorator whose work is well known in England.

But there must be something more than stage properties in the productions of these artists. They must be practical and suited to the uses of warfare, and it is the part of Colonel Bennion, head of the camouflage station to keep these artistic productions within practical limits. The colonel is an engineer officer with West Point training, and when any camouflage is adopted for American army uses, it has the double merit of being the product of American artistic skill and at the same time an eminently practical device from the standpoint of military engineering.

TEST OFFICERS WHO ARE TO SEE SERVICE

Fort Bliss, Tex.—"How do you expect to take any prisoners in France if you are slow as a five-ton truck?" sang out one artillery lieutenant to another.

"You'll have to stop at the first broad ditch because you can't jump—and Belgium is full of canals," retorted another.

The officers of an artillery unit were going through efficiency tests before their colonel, under the supervision of the regimental physical director. Each was required to run 100 yards with a full kit, jump ditches, "dig in," hurdle barbed wire entanglements and perform other feats. During the trials the officers railed at each other good naturedly.

Several of the officers with waist lines more or less like that of Falstaff, the Shakesperian fighter, could not negotiate the 100-yard dash in the required 14 seconds and a few failed in the required high jump of four feet. The tests are being given officers and men alike here.

HOW TO USE VICK'S VAPORUB IN TREATING SPANISH INFLUENZA

The Influenza Germs Attack the Lining of the Air Passages. When VapoRub Is Applied Over Throat and Chest, the Medicated Vapors Loosen the Phlegm, Open the Air Passages and Stimulate the Mucous Membrane to Throw Off the Germs.

In Addition, VapoRub is Absorbed Through and Stimulates the Skin, Attracting the Blood to the Surface and Thus Aids in Reducing the Congestion Within.

CALL A PHYSICIAN — GO TO BED — STAY QUIET — DONT WORRY

There is No Occasion for Panic—Influenza Itself Has a Very Low Percentage of Fatalities. Not Over One Death Out of Every Four Hundred Cases According to the N. C. Board of Health. The Chief Danger Lies in Complications Arising, Attacking Principally Patients in a Run-Down Condition—Those Who Don't Go to Bed Soon Enough, or Those Who Get Up Too Early.

Spanish Influenza, which appeared in Spain in May, has all the appearance of grip or la grippe, which has swept over the world in numerous epidemics as far back as history runs. Hippocrates refers to an epidemic in 412 B. C. which is regarded by many to have been influenza. Every century has had its attacks. Beginning with 1831, this country has had five epidemics, the last in 1889-1890.

THE SYMPTOMS.

Grippe, or influenza, as it is now called, usually begins with a chill, followed by aching, feverishness and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucous membrane, or lining of the air passages—nose, throat and bronchial tubes; there is usually a hard cough, especially bad at night, and frequently all the appearances of a severe head cold.

THE TREATMENT.

Go to bed at the first symptoms, not only for your own sake, but to avoid spreading the disease to others—take a purgative, eat plenty of nourishing food, remain perfectly quiet and don't worry. Quinine, aspirin or Dover's Powder, etc., may be administered by the physician's directions to relieve the aching. But there is no cure or specific for influenza—the disease must run its course. Nature herself will throw off the attack if only you keep up your strength. The chief danger lies in the complications which may arise. Influenza so weakens the bodily resistance that there is danger of pneumonia or bronchitis developing and sometimes inflammation of the middle ear, or heart affections. For these reasons, it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns—stay in bed at least two days, or more after the fever has left you, or if you are over 50 or not strong, stay in bed four days or more, according to the severity of the attack.

EXTERNAL APPLICATIONS.

In order to stimulate the lining of the air passages to throw off the grippe germs, to aid in loosening the phlegm and keeping the air passages open, thus making the breathing easier, Vick's VapoRub will be found effective. Hot, wet towels should be applied over the throat, chest and back between the shoulder blades to open the pores. Then Vick's should be rubbed in over the parts until the skin is red, spread on thickly and cover with two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck, as the heat of the body liberates the ingredients in the form of vapors. These vapors, inhaled with each breath carry the medication directly to the parts affected. At the same time, VapoRub is absorbed through and stimulates the skin attracting the blood to the surface and thus aids in relieving the congestion within.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE.

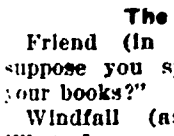
Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing or spitting. So avoid persons having colds — which means avoiding crowds — common drinking cups, roller towels, etc. Keep up your bodily strength by plenty of exercise in the open air and good food.

KEEP FREE FROM COLDS.

Above all keep free from colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them much better breeding places for the germs.

Use Vick's VapoRub at the very first sign of a cold. For a head cold, melt a little in a spoon and inhale the vapors, or better still, use VapoRub in a benzoin steam kettle. If this is not available, use an ordinary tea-kettle. Fill half-full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling—inhale the steam arising.

Vick's VapoRub can be had in three sizes—20c, 60c, $1.20—at all druggists.



WORMS

"Wormy," that's what's the matter of 'em. Stomach and intestinal worms. Nearly as bad as distemper. Cost you too much to feed 'em. Look bad—are bad. Don't physic 'em to death. Spohn's Compound will remove the worms, improve the appetite, and tone 'em up all round and don't "physic." Acts on glands and blood. Full directions with each bottle, and sold by all druggists.

SAFE, GENTLE REMEDY CLEANSES YOUR KIDNEYS

For centuries GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been a standard household remedy for kidney, liver, bladder and stomach trouble, and all diseases connected with the urinary organs. The kidneys and bladder are the most important organs of the body. They are the filters, the purifiers of your blood. If the poisons which enter your system through the blood and stomach are not entirely thrown out by the kidneys and bladder, you are doomed.

Weariness, sleeplessness, nervousness, despondency, backache, stomach trouble, headache, pain in loins and lower abdomen, gall stones, gravel, difficulty when urinating, cloudy and bloody urine, rheumatism, sciatica and lumbago, all warn you to look after your kidneys and bladder. All these indicate some weakness of the kidneys or other organs or that the enemy microbes which are always present in your system have attacked your weak spots. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are what you need.

They are not a "patent medicine," nor a "new discovery." For 200 years they have been a standard household remedy. They are the pure, original imported Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used, and are perfectly harmless. The healing, soothing oil soaks into the cells and lining of the kidneys and through the bladder, driving out the poisonous germs. New life, fresh strength and health will come as you continue the treatment. When completely restored to your usual vigor, continue taking a capsule or two each day; they will keep you in condition and prevent a return of the disease.

Do not delay a minute. Delays are especially dangerous in kidney and bladder trouble. All druggists sell GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. They will refund the money if not as represented. They are prepared in correct quantity and convenient form, are easy to take and are positively guaranteed to give prompt relief. In three sizes, sealed packages. PLEDGE CARDS ARE REVIVED FOR IOWA

EVERY WOMAN HAS A CHANCE TO ENROLL WITH THE ARMY FOR FOOD CONSERVATION IN THIS STATE.

Although more than 500,000 women signed food pledge cards when the United States food administration put on a campaign to that end in this state last fall, reports to United States Food Administrator J. F. Deems at Burlington are to the effect that Iowa women are eager to renew their allegiance to the cause of food conservation, and many who were not reached in the former campaign are anxious for a chance to join the army of food pledgers and to display in their windows the golden emblem of the food administration which signing the pledge to conserve food gains for them.

Administrator Deems has sent out a letter to the chairmen of the women's committee of his organization in which he outlines a plan to give every woman a chance to sign the pledge cards.

He says:

"We are interested in having each Iowa housewife sign the food pledge and get into the game of conservation. It is one of the principal duties which housewives have to perform during the war. It has been suggested by one of the county chairmen of the women's committee that these pledge cards might be deposited at certain central points and all persons who failed to sign before be given the opportunity of signing now if they so desire.

"Conservation is still one of the vital points of our national war program. This is especially so at this time in view of the sugar situation. We urge, therefore, that you undertake to handle the pledge cards in the manner described above in order to give all those who failed to sign before an opportunity to obtain them now.

"The food administration window cards are available in quantities and should you desire to further distribute these emblems of service among the housewives in your county we will be glad indeed to forward you such quantity as you deem desirable or necessary. A food administration emblem card should appear in the window of every housewife who is giving voluntary service to the food administration and through it to the nation in the conservation of sugar and wheat."

WAS PUT OUT OF BUSINESS

Restaurant Keeper Finds It Impossible to Defy the Food Administration.

Joseph Woods, a restaurant keeper of 513 Main street, Little Falls, N. Y., has gone out of business because he refused to square himself with the United States food administration. He will not be permitted to open another place until he meets his obligations to the food administration and gives assurances that he will obey its laws.

Woods was found guilty of violating the food rules, and after a hearing he requested that he be permitted to contribute $25 to the Red Cross rather than have his place closed for one week. This was accepted. After paying $5 he declined to make further payment and assumed a very hostile attitude toward the food administration officials who had his case in charge. An unfair order was then issued against him, preventing him from buying any more supplies. He then closed his place and left Little Falls.

An order has been issued from Washington that no license be issued to Woods nor will he be able to buy food supplies until he makes amends.

SHORTAGE OF FEED SERIOUS

France Suffers Severely From the High Prices and Scarcity of Fodder.

Shortage of animal feeds in France, though frequently announced in the foreign crop reports, is perhaps most clearly reflected by the prices prevailing in the forage markets. There are three qualities of fodder. The prices quoted prevailed in midsummer and are for the second or medium quality.

First-quality fodder averages from $2 to $8 more per ton, and third-quality the same amount less:

Wheat straw .....$78 per ton
Hay ..... 84 per ton
Lucerne (alfalfa) ..... 88 per ton

Shortages of transport makes deliveries of all feeds uncertain, and in some markets there is practically no business.

SEVEN WAYS WE CAN SAVE.

1. Use fresh fruits without sugar.
2. Cook dried fruits without additional sugar; they already contain sugar.
3. Can more fruit without sugar; put up fewer jams and jellies.
4. Use less sugar in tea and coffee; you will soon learn to like it better.
5. Avoid such sugar luxuries as candy, cakes, chewing gum, sweet drinks and sodas.
6. Use honey, maple sugar and sirups and other sweeteners when available.
7. Cut out all desserts or other dishes that require much sugar.

Give your neighbor a lift—this war is a single front under a single command—what is anybody's trouble is everybody's trouble.

THE BOYS AT THE FRONT WATCHING LIBERTY LOAN

By Lieut. George Sauvage, Fighting Priest of the French Army, Who Fought in the Trenches More Than Three Years.

France did not want war. She did everything that she could in honor do to prevent war, but war was forced upon her by Germany.

For four years France has waged this war with her whole soul and now America has come into the struggle with all her power in man and material resources.

We are now sure that we can win this war. We have for the last few months witnessed the turning of the tide in favor of the allies, but we should not, however, be led away by our recent successes.

Let the people at home understand that they, as well as the men on the fighting line, have to take their share in the struggle. This war is not a war of soldiers alone, it is a war of nations. The front is not "over there" only, it is everywhere.

The men over there are doing their share. They are giving their lives. Let the people at home understand that the only business today is to win the war.

Let nobody be deceived as to the duration of the war, or conclude from our recent successes that the end is near. We shall win. We are at a turning point. But the end is yet far away. It is my conviction—and all soldiers who have been two or three years at the front, will tell you the same thing, that this war may last two or three years more. Woe to us, if, by false optimism or weakness in our determination, we should come to slacken in our efforts. Our mistakes should have to be corrected with the blood of our boys.

The boys at the front are watching this Liberty loan. They shall judge by the amount subscribed of the interest the people at home, in the state, in the county, or town are taking in their efforts and in their sacrifices. They know that when the order comes to attack it is their duty to go and to give their lives if necessary, and they are willing to do it. But they feel, too, that when the call comes from the president to the people at home to give the money necessary for the prosecution of the war, it is the duty of everyone to give all that he can and that the people at home should be willing to do it. It is their share—and how small when compared to that of the fighting man—in the struggle.

Let the men at the front know and feel that the people at home are heart and soul with them in this war; that the people at home are ready to make every effort and every sacrifice as long as will be necessary to win that complete and decisive victory which shall secure for all nations freedom and lasting peace.

STEADIER HOG MARKETS PLANNED

Hog Producers and Packers Confer With Representatives of the Food Administration and Agricultural Department and Adopt New Plan of Regulation.

In accordance with the policy of the Food Administration since its foundation to consult representative men in the agricultural industry on occasions of importance to special branches of the industry, on October 24 there was convened in Washington a meeting of the Live Stock Subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board and the special members representing the swine industry to consider the situation in the hog market

The conference lasted for three days, and during this time met with the executive committee of the fifty packing firms participating in foreign orders for pork products and with the members of the Food Administration directing foreign pork purchases.

The conclusions of the conference were as follows.

The entire marketing situation has so changed since the September joint conference as to necessitate an entire alteration in the plans of price stabilization The current peace talk has alarmed the holders of corn, and there has been a price decline of from 25 cents to 40 cents per bushel. The fact that the accumulations of low priced corn in the Argentine and South Africa would, upon the advent of peace and liberated shipping, become available to the European market has created a great deal of apprehension on the part of corn holders. This decline has spread fear among swine growers that a similar reduction in the prices of hogs would naturally follow. Moreover, the lower range of corn prices would, if incorporated in a 13-to-1 ratio, obviously result in a continuously falling price for live hogs. In view of these changed conditions many swine producers anticipated lower prices and as a result rushed their hogs to market in large numbers, and this overshipment has added to and aggravated the decline.

The information of the Department of Agriculture indicates that the supply of hogs has increased about 8 per cent, while the highest unofficial estimate does not exceed 15 per cent. Increased production over last year On the other hand, the arrival of hogs during the last three weeks in the seven great markets has been 27 per cent. more than last year, during the corresponding period, demonstrating the unusually heavy marketing of the available supply. In the face of the excessive receipts some packers have not maintained the price agreed last month. On the other hand, many of the packers have paid over the price offered to them in an endeavor to maintain the agreed price. The result in any event has been a failure to maintain the October price basis determined upon at the September conference and undertaken by the packers. Another factor contributing to the break in prices during the month has been the influenza epidemic; it has sharply curtailed consumption of pork products and temporarily decreased the labor staff of the packers about 25 per cent.

The exports of 130,000,000 pounds of pork products for October compared with about 52,000,000 pounds in October a year ago, and the export orders placeable by the Food Administration for November, amount to 170,000,000 pounds as contrasted with the lesser exports of 98,000,000 for November, 1917. The increased demands of the allies are continuing, and are in themselves proof of the necessity for the large production for which the Food Administration asked. The increase in export demands appears to be amply sufficient to take up the increase in hog production, but unfavorable market conditions existing in October afford no fair index of the aggregate supply and demand.

It must be evident that the enormous shortage in fats in the Central Empires and neutral countries would immediately upon peace result in additional demands for pork products which, on top of the heavy shipments to the Allies, would tend materially to increase the American exports, inasmuch as no considerable reservoir of supplies exists outside of the United States. It seems probable that the present prospective supplies would be inadequate to meet this world demand with the return to peace. So far as it is possible to interpret this fact, it appears that there should be even a stronger demand for pork products after the war, and therefore any alarm of hog producers as to the effect of peace is unwarranted by the outlook.

In the light of these circumstances it is the conclusion of the conference that attempts to hold the price of hogs to the price of corn may work out to the disadvantage of pork producers. It is the conclusion that any interpretation of the formula should be a broad gauged policy applied over a long period. It is the opinion of the conference that in substitution of the previous plans of stabilization the Live Stock Subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board, together with the specially invited swine representatives, should accept the invitation of the Food Administration to join with the Administration and the packers in determining the prices at which controlled export orders are to be placed. This will be regularly done. The influence of these orders will be directed to the maintenance of the common object—namely, the stabilization of the price of live hogs so as to secure as far as it is possible fair returns to the producer and the insurance of an adequate future supply.

These foreign orders are placed upon the basis of cost of hogs to the packers.

As the result of long negotiations between this body and the Packers' Committee, representing the 45 to 50 packers participating in foreign orders, together with the Allied buyers, all under the Chairmanship of the Food Administration, the following undertaking has been given by the packers.

In view of the undertakings on the part of the Food Administration with regard to the co-ordinated purchases of pork products, covered in the attached, it is agreed that the packers participating in these orders will undertake not to purchase hogs for less than the following agreed minimums for the month of November, that is a daily minimum of $17.50 per hundred pounds on average of packers' droves, excluding throw-outs. "Throw-outs" to be defined as pigs under 130 pounds, stags, boars, thin sows and skips. Further that no hogs of any kind shall be bought, except throw-outs, at less than $16.50 per hundred pounds. The average of packers' droves to be construed as the average of the total sales in the market of all hogs for a given day. All the above to be based on Chicago.

We agree that a committee shall be appointed by the Food Administration to check the daily operations in the various markets with a view to supervision and demonstration of the carrying out of the above.

The ability of the packers to carry out this arrangement will depend on there being a normal marketing of hogs based upon the proportionate increase over the receipts of last year. The increase in production appears to be a maximum of about 15 per cent. and we can handle such an increase.

If the producers of hogs should, as they have in the past few weeks, prematurely market hogs in such increasing numbers over the above it is entirely beyond the ability of the packers to maintain these minimums, and therefore we must have the co-operation of the producer himself to maintain these results. It is a physical impossibility for the capacity of the packing houses to handle a similar over-flood of hogs and to find a market for the output. The packers are anxious to co-operate with the producers in maintaining a stabilization of price and to see that producers receive a fair price for their products.

(Signed) THOS. E. WILSON,
Chairman Packers' Committee.

The plan embodied above was adopted by the conference.

The Food Administrator has appointed a committee, comprising Mr. Thomas E. Wilson, chairman of the Packers' Committee; Mr. Everett Brown, president of the Chicago Livestock Exchange; Major Roy of the Food Administration, Mr. Louis D. Hall of the Bureau of Markets, to undertake the supervision of the execution of the plan in the various markets. Commission men are asked to co-operate in carrying out the plan embodied in the packers' agreement. It must be evident that offers by commission men to sell hogs below the minimum established above is not fair, either to the producer or the participating packers. Mr. Brown has undertaken on behalf of the commission men in the United States that they will loyally support the plan.

It is believed by the conference that this new plan, based as it is upon a positive minimum basis, will bring better results to the producer than average prices for the month. It does not limit top prices and should narrow the margins necessary to country buyers in more variable markets. It is believed that the plan should work out close to $18 average.

Swine producers of the country will contribute to their own interest by not flooding the market, for it must be evident that if an excessive over percentage of hogs is marketed in any one month price stabilization and control cannot succeed, and it is certain that producers themselves can contribute materially to the efforts of the conferences if they will do their marketing in as normal a way as possible.

The whole situation as existing at present demands a frank and explicit assurance from the conferees represented—namely, that every possible effort will be made to maintain a live hog price commensurate with swine production costs and reasonable selling values in execution of the declared policy of the Food Administration to use every agency in its control to secure justice to the farmer.

The stabilization methods adopted for November represent the best efforts of the conference, concurred in by the Food Administration and the Livestock Subcommittee of the Agricultural Advisory Board, together with special swine members and the representatives of the packers, to improve the present unsatisfactory situation, which has unfortunately resulted because of the injection of uncontrollable factors.

We ask the producer to co-operate with us in a most difficult task.

Don't wait to see how much your neighbor is going to subscribe to the Fighting Loan, but buy bonds to the utmost limit of your ability and set the pace for him. WHOLE NATION AT WAR; NOT ONLY SOLDIERS

By C. H. Martin, Major Gen. U. S. Army, Commanding Camp Grant, Illinois.

The Fourth Liberty Loan should again forcibly remind everybody that the whole nation is in the war, and not merely the men in uniform.

We are team-mates in a mighty game; a game which has been developing for centuries. The contending teams are Autocracy and Democracy, and life is the stake for which they are playing. We are now at the very climax of that age-long struggle.

Your part on the team requires a devotion and disinterested forgetfulness of self as complete and unflagging as you expect from the men in uniform. No one can do his duty on any team who measures his duty by any other standard than his entire abilities. It cannot be measured by comparisons with the performances of others.

Do not think that the front, only, is the war; the front is a part of the team. I like to think that it is a part of sufficient importance to engage your enthusiastic interest and support. The anxiety with which you wait for good news from the front is of the same variety as that which the front waits for good news from the back. Any especially good plays on any part of the team strengthens the heart of every member of the team.

It is your play now; oversubscribe this loan cheerfully and with enthusiasm

Get into the game.

THE GOLDEN SWORD

By William F. Kirk.

Columbia! The battle clouds are flung across the sky
And forms with uniforms for shrouds in staring meadows lie;
In staring, tortured meadows, where once God's daisies bloomed—
Where now the brave in one red grave are evermore entombed.
The Monster Mars has left the stars to bring a planet pain,
And in a cloak of blood and smoke Men thrusts at Man again!

Yet far above the hellish horde—the Hohenzollern kinds—
There gleams a great, a golden sword—a sword that burns and blinds!
The shining sword of knighthood—the weapon of a band
That sprang from fearless fathers on Plymouth's cheerless strand!
Well may the heads of terror stand upon the Prussian brow!
The Golden Sword of Yankeeland has left the scabbard now!

Its blade is truly tempered in fires of Sacrifice
By patriots brave who gladly gave and proudly paid the price.
Its hilt is set with precious gems—sweet Womanhood's supply—
The treasure-troves of Mother Love—a sweetheart's fond good-by.
Crouch, Monarch, in your hall of kings—the last of Monarchs' Halls!
The Golden Sword of Freedom swings! The last of monarchs falls!

The Golden Sword of Freedom! It points the way to light!
In dazzling rings it leaps and sings the doom of Mailed Might!
Bring on your gold, O Freemen! Shape well the glittering blade
The Only Lord will bless this Sword your sacrifice has made!
And down the ages yet-unborn the story shall be told How Freedom's sons destroyed the Huns with Freedom's Sword of Gold!

With our boys over there driving in the final wedge—fighting shoulder to shoulder with the heroes of Britain, of France, of Italy, of poor mutilated Belgium—with our wonderful American mothers and our valiant young American wives, over here, sending their loved boy-men, so loyally, so cheerfully—it's up to us, just the common-or-garden stay-at-homes, to make good, too! There is no discomfort too great to bear, no service that can't be asked of us, no sacrifice that we will not make. It is our right to be allowed our share in this world war.

Our boys have gone over there, bearing in their eager youths' faces and in their stout American fighting hearts America's promise to those poor war-wearied peoples. It is a promise that you and I and every man, woman and child in America must stand back of with all our hearts and souls, with all our worldly goods. There is not a human American today who is not fired with a passion of patriotism, with the keenest desire to serve—for the chance to prove his right to look those boys in the face when they get back. Just the contempt we have for the slacker, the profiteer of today—just that contempt will we have for ourselves, of tomorrow, if, in our souls we can find one chance to serve overlooked or one sacrifice not made. For, remember that our boys in that one moment of supreme selflessness—that "going over the top"—that second of conscious immolation on the altar of freedom, victory and peace—that willing surrender of their blood and body and brain—for just you and me—for our peace and safety—in that one moment has come a spiritual rebirth, a rejuvenation of soul, that will search our souls for kindred strength, and be

KLEMME, IOWA

Henri Pol, the famous old bird charmer of the Tuileries gardens in Paris died recently. Every afternoon for the last 40 years this veteran pensioned postal official attracted large crowds of visitors by his wonderful method of calling the sparrows that haunt the gardens and feeding them from his hand. Many birds instantly replied to the names he had given them, and circled around his head or perched on his shoulder. Children regarded Pol as a veritable wizard. The old charmer was more than 80 years of age.

IOWA PROHIBS TO GET BUSY SOON

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 7.—Prohibition workers will get busy soon.

It is announced that Capt. Richmond P. Hobson, Spanish American war veteran and hero of the Merrimac, is coming to Iowa under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon league and will make speeches in 20 different localities during the latter part of November and early December He will emphasize the necessity for prohibition during war times and will urge prohibition for the nation.

There is little question but the Iowa legislature will ratify the prohibitory amendment. There were very few "wets" among the candidates for election and "dry" workers, following primary day, predicted with confidence that the next legislature would ratify the national prohibitory amendment.

The woman suffrage amendment was passed by the last general assembly and must pass this next assembly before it can be submitted to a vote of the people. This fact checked up with the transmission of the United Press cablegram which passed by the censor in Paris, showed that there was sufficient time for the cablegram to have reached New York at noon, New York time, when it was received and passed by the naval censor in New York.

Russian Soviet Government In Bad at Berlin—Joffe Is Sent Home.

Copenhagen, Nov. 7.—The diplomatic break between Germany and the Russian soviet government, which developed yesterday, was foreshadowed by the Berlin newspapers a few days ago when they charged that the Russian embassy in Berlin was the central point for the distribution of seditious literature. They pointed out that more than 400 couriers had been employed by M Joffe, the Russian ambassador, during the short period he had been in Berlin

Ambassador Joffe categorically denied the charges, but the "accidental" discovery of a package of inflammatory handbills in the luggage of a bolshevist courier was held to demonstrate the falsity of M. Joffe's statement and was promptly followed by the breach in diplomatic relations M. Joffe has been given his passports

LANGUAGE QUESTION LOOMS BIG IN IOWA

Governor's Edict Met With Such Determined Opposition It Will Become Issue.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 8.—With Governor Harding's language proclamation forming the chief issue today by his opponents in the campaign which closed with the election yesterday, there is every indication that this foreign language matter in some form or other will come before the Thirty-eighth general assembly.

At the present time it is the one issue over which there appears to be the most feeling, and this attitude seems likely to continue at least for several months to come. That it will result in the drawing up of a bill which will seek to eliminate conditions which make it possible for foreign communities to exist in this state as groups living apart and unto themselves and maintaining a neutral attitude in all public matters there now seems little doubt.

Governor Harding and his backers here on the foreign language proclamation point out that the edict was not set forth merely against the use of foreign tongues, but against the spirit which prompts foreigners to form communities and live entirely unto themselves, enjoying all of the benefits of this country, particularly commercial benefits, without giving anything to their country or state or nation in return

It invariably happens that the issue which forges to the front in the fall election is the big issue in the legislative session which follows. Following the announcement of the results of the election, with the legislative makeup determined, proposed legislation for the next assembly will receive more or less attention. Patriotic measures are bound to occupy an important place

Not a few of them have come back seriously maimed for life.

Private Terance Black, of Company L, Keosauqua, who was with the party, has lost both of his legs. He was struck by a high explosive shell while doing outpost duty on the Campagne front last July. It was found necessary when taken to the hospital behind the lines to amputate both his legs. Black's companion at the time was Ralph Davis, of Council Bluffs, who was instantly killed when struck by a shell.

Sergeant Ferd Bushby, of Company B, Fairbanks, Ia., with the party which returned yesterday, lost his right arm, a thumb from his left hand and was further wounded in the right side, shoulder and leg while fighting near Chateau-Thierry. This was at the time that Company B men of the 168th were fighting against the crack Prussian guards to capture the town of Sergy. In the fighting the village changed hands nine times, but the Iowa men finally wrested it from the control of the Huns.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 7.—Farmers and Traders' bank of Leon, Ia., was robbed last night of hundreds of dollars in currency and Liberty bonds by an automobile bandit supposed to be "Dutch" Cross, notorious bank robber, who broke jail at Newton, Ia., last week, escaping in a stolen automobile. NATURALIZED GERMANS NOT WHOLLY GRATEFUL

Independence, Ia., Nov. 7.—Helm Bros., natives of Germany, naturalized citizens, owners of 440 acres in Byron and Madison townships, spent an hour or more in jail after failing to subscribe their alloted quota of $1,600 for fourth Liberty loan bonds. Finally they signed up for the full amount. They had been before the war council for an hour and a half session.

The Helms came to this country in 1900 and have acquired most of their property since. Figures submitted by them showed their wealth to be $63,777 They claimed they had taken $750 in bonds for the fourth loan; had taken $700 of former bonds; $295 in war savings stamps, and had given to the Red Cross and Y M. C. A. $2 to $5 each time and had bought corn to feed hogs for meat for the government last winter which they claim was a losing game.

BETTER WITH A GUN THAN WITH CARDS

Waterloo Ia., Nov. 7.—George E. Culling, held by the police without bond, is charged with holding up some poker players at an early hour Sunday morning.

The police record states that Culling and five others engaged in a game at a home in Cedar street. When Culling lost and the others raked in the jackpot, it is said, he became angry. He left for his room and returned with a revolver It is claimed he fired several bullets through the roof and floor and intimidated the players to the extent that two of them forked over $10 apiece.

One of the players raced away and summoned an officer. The gun and cartridges were discarded by Culling, it is claimed, but they were later recovered by the police.

The only "dollar-a-year" man in the fleet corporation is Charles M Schwab, director general of the organization, it is said

Lange, a naturalized German, who had been playing the fourth French horn. Italian and French members of the orchestra attacked Lange when, it is charged, he did not put enough enthusiasm into the playing of the national anthems of the allies. He was turned over to the federal authorities for investigation.

GERMANY TO PAY FOR SUNK AGENTINE SHIP

Buenos Aires (by mail)—Arbitrators have been appointed by the German and Argentina governments to decide upon the amount which the German government is to pay the owners of the Argentina ship, Monte Protegido, which was sunk by a German submarine in April of last year. The sinking was followed by anti-German riots in Buenos Aires. An indemnity of $340,000 has been demanded by the owners.

GERMAN ARMIES WERE FLEEING

On the Battle Front in Belgium, Nov. 8.—(night.)—A wireless dispatch was received this afternoon at the headquarters of General Beaurains from the Germans saying they had decided to abandon Ghent and asking the Belgians not to fire on the suburbs of the town where white flags are raised.

American troops from Ohio, under the command of General Farnsworth, played a great part in the relief of the city by an attack on the Eecke salient 16 miles southeast of Ghent, which was taken by storm yesterday.

Their losses were comparatively light.

Paris, Nov.—Along the entire front the pursuit of the retreating Germans was taken up again this morning, according to today's war office announcement.

The French have thrown calvary into the action on their right where the mounted troops are pushing in the direction of the Meuse.

CONTINUE PROGRESS.

London, Nov. 8.—British forces are continuing their progress along the Franco-Belgian battle line. Northeast of Valenciennes, according to Field Marshal Haig's report today, they have reached the outskirts of Quievrain and Crespin, close to the Belgian border.

FRENCH GAINS BIG.

With the French Armies in France, Nov. 8.—The French armies made another forward bound today of from five to seven miles all along their front from east of Guise to their junction with American forces west of the Meuse, pressing close on the rear guards left by the Germans who are in full retreat.

General Debeny's troops, tramping through mud and drenched by rain captured Nouvion and Regnaval forests. The booty taken over this front indicates that the enemy's retreat has been more precipitate than that of yesterday. Prisoners captured say that the retreat will continue for a distance of 15 or 20 miles further.

The march of General Gouraud's men toward the Meuse went on during the day with increased speed. After working all night under heavy shell and machine gun fire in the constructing of bridges for infantry and artillery over the Aisne and the Ardennes canal, they crossed the swollen stream in force and took up their advance this morning throwing back the rear guards, taking Rethel and advancing into the Rethel pocket for an average distance of six and a half miles and liberating 24 villages with the greater part of their inhabitants.

Germans Shell a Life Boat Again

Athens, Nov. 8.—A German submarine after having torpedoed a Greek sailing ship, is said to have fired on the crew when the men tried to escape from the sinking vessel, according to an official telegram received here from Crete. The life boat has been examined and found to be shattered by projectiles from the submarine's guns.

WOMEN ENGINEERS IN FRANCE.

From the Vancouver (B. C.) Province.

Word has been received that the First Engineer corps, composed entirely of women and trained to serve with the women's overseas hospitals gas units in France, has arrived safely.

The staff of women engineers is in charge of motor trucks, which are a part of the gas unit equipment. These trucks, some of which weigh three tons, carry apparatus for hot water baths and a trailer for disinfecting clothing.

Trucks and trailers will be driven by women. The hot water bath apparatus is sufficient for giving eight baths at one time and is carried on the truck and operated by women experts. The trailer contains an arrangement for disinfecting clothing while the baths are being given. Women engineers will heat the water and operate the disinfectors.

This is the first complete equipment of the sort to go to the front. The gas unit is under the supervision of the French government and is being financially maintained and equipped by suffragists.

SENATE BATTLE HOLDS ATTENTION

With Control of House Certain For Republicans, Interest Centers In Three States.

Washington, D. C., Nov 8.—With the House of Representatives republican and control of the Senate still in doubt, a tremendous overturn of political affairs is expected after March 4 next.

The passing from democratic to republican control of the House means that all the great House committee chairmanships will revert to the republicans.

Whether a similar change will take place also in the Senate appeared today to depend upon the final returns from three states—New Mexico, Idaho and Michigan.

Exclusive of these three states, the republicans today appeared to have 47 votes in the Senate to 46 for the democrats. The republicans must get two of the doubtful states to win the majority.

With five districts not yet heard from the republicans appear to have carried the House with 234 seats, 15 more than the 219 necessary for a majority.

Forcing the inevitable conflict in which the advantage will rest with congress, since it makes the Lowa the president's friends in congress may attempt to forestall the republicans by acting now. Control does not pass from democratic hands until March 4 next

NEW MEXICO SAFE

Albuquerque, N. M., Nov 8 Republicans today claimed reelection of A B. Fall to the United States Senate by 2,500 and election of B. C Hernandez to the lower House over G A Richardson, democratic congressional candidate by 1,000 majority. Indications in early returns point to the victory of Q. A. Larrazolo, republican, over Felix Garcia, democrat, for governor by 3,000.

Illinois Results.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—Probability of a republican gain of one congressman in Illinois was seen today when a fairly complete count showed Brooks republican, leading Representative Foster, democrat, by a small margin in the Twenty-third district. Country districts wiped out Foster's early lead in the count. With 20 precincts unreported, Brooks' lead was more than 400 votes.

In the event of Foster's defeat, Illinois will be represented in the next House by 22 republicans and five democrats.

Representative Rainey, democrat, has been re-elected in the Twentieth district by approximately 2,900 plurality. This was the only other doubtful district in the state.

FALL IS ELECTED

Albuquerque, N. M., Nov 8 With a few precincts missing returns today indicated the reelection of Albert B. Fall, republican, from New Mexico, to the United States Senate by approximately 1,900 plurality over his democratic opponent, Congressman William B. Walton.

Benigno Hernandez, former congressman, has been elected as congressman from the state by less than 1,000 plurality over Judge Granville A. Richardson, democrat.

Wilson May Attend the Peace Parley

America's Record In Great War Shown as President Is Urged to Attend Conference

Washington, D. C., Nov 8 — With the close of the great war at 8 o'clock this forenoon, America celebrated her greatest contribution to world's freedom.

Her's was the moral and moral help that turned the tide of the bloodiest war of history—and peace today marks this nation's 19th month to a day as a co-belligerent in the struggle. America's, too, were the fundamental principles upon which the armistice and peace, were based. And now, the greatest problem before the world, officials say, is to thresh out in conference a peace that will insure against future wars.

The scene of that conference will probably be either Brussels or Geneva.

It has been urged by foreign representatives and friends of President Wilson that he attend. They believe he will go. The Belgian minister officially today urged that the conclave be held at Brussels.

The country's entrance to the great war in April, 1917, sounded the doom of German hopes for the conquest of the world. The crumbling of the central powers was assured in view of the dramatic efforts put forth by this nation to bring a quick and complete victory. Here are some of the things America has accomplished in her 19 months at war:

Increased her army from 212,034, officers and men, to approximately 3,-700,000, officers and men.

Increased her navy from 82,738, officers and men, to approximately 350,000 officers and men.

Mutinous sailors mounted machine guns at vantage points aboard the war ships at Kiel to repel any attackers. They demand immediate peace.

Cavalry reinforcements coming up the roads from Wansbeck were fired on by the sailors. Two of the cavalrymen were killed.

The rebels have formed a naval soviet and have taken prisoner Admiral Soucheon, the governor of Kiel. Machine guns have been posted at various points about the city.

Release Admiral

The rebels later released Admiral Soucheon, on his promise to recognize their soviet, to abolish the salute and to release all rebels without punishment.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS IS NOW ASSURED

Washington, D. C., Nov. 8.—Organization of a league of nations has been agreed to by the Versailles conference, diplomats said here today.

That "freedom of the seas" will be placed in the keeping of the league is believed likely—though Great Britain is desirous of maintaining her naval supremacy at least until the effectiveness of the international organization is demonstrated.

The name "mahogany" is said to be applied commercially to more than 50 different woods. The demand now greatly exceeds the supply. It is not surprising that the real wood is so expensive when it is learned that it takes from 100 to 150 years for a mahogany tree to reach merchantable age.

No matter where the conference is held the American signal corps will according to present plans string wires to good cable points so that Washington may be in easy and rapid communication with the meeting.

GERMAN MORALE HARD HIT BY AIR FORCES

Hun Cities and Munition Plants Along the Rhine Objectives of Many Bombing Raids.

London, (by mail.) A belt of the Rhine valley roughly 250 miles long, from Cologne in the north to the Grand Duchy of Baden in the south, a region crowded with war industries and intersected by a railway system of vital strategic importance to the German army in France, is now a definite part of the war zone. This is one of the most striking and significant developments of the allied campaign and how big are its possibilities may be gauged by the vast damage, both physical and moral, already inflicted upon the enemy. It is the achievement of the Royal Air force.

Over that region in the last three months the airmen, operating day and night have made 249 raids, dropping 207 tons of bombs upon enemy railway centers, munitions works, poison gas factories, electrical and engineering plants, blast furnaces, airdromes, and other important military objectives.

The effects of these raids have been of incalculable benefit to the allies. One of the first was the compulsory withdrawal by the Germans of a large number of their airplanes from the fighting front for the defense of the Rhine.

But a greater gain has been the profound and widespread depression caused to the German people, the "home front," to use the phrase of Ludendorff. Captured letters from places as widely separated as Mannheim and Cologne testify to the terror and panic inspired by the raids among the civil population. Well to do families, in increasing numbers, are seeking the temporary security of the more distant inland towns. There are indications that the flight of the wealthy is causing intense resentment among the most part engaged in war industries, working population who being for the are exposed to almost nightly danger from the raiders.

But the terror of the German populace is not confined to the territory actually added to the war zone. It exists throughout the country, particularly in far distant Berlin where preparations already have been made to defend the city against raids.

A vast light railway system has been created in France, according to the British war cabinet report for 1917, involving the supply during last year of approximately 1,700 miles of track and the whole of the equipment. Exclusive of these light railway systems the total mileage of permanent railway track supplied complete to all the theaters of war was about 3,600 miles.

PROTESTS AGAINST MINE DESTRUCTION

Secretary Lansing Communicates With Government at Berlin Regarding Belgium Coal Fields.

Washington, Nov. 7.—Secretary Lansing made public today a message to the German government through the Swiss minister, protesting against the reported intention of the German authorities in Belgium to destroy coal mines upon evacuation. If the acts contemplated are carried out, the message says, it will confirm "the belief that the solemn assurances of the German government are not given in good faith."

The note, addressed to the Swiss minister, follows:

Text of Note.

"I have the honor to request that you will bring the following to the attention of the German government.

'In its note of October 20 the German government announces that the "German troops are under the strictest instructions to spare private property and to exercise care for the population to the best of their ability."

"Information has now reached the government of the United States to the effect that the German authorities in Belgium have given notice to the coal mining companies that all men and animals should be brought out of the pits, that all raw materials in the possession of the companies should be delivered to the Germans and that the mines will be destroyed at once.

"Acts so wanton and malicious involving as they do the destruction of a vital necessity to the civilian population of Belgium and the consequent suffering and loss of human life which will follow, cannot fail to impress the government and the people of the United States as wilfully cruel and inhuman. If these acts, in flagrant violation of the declaration of October 20, are perpetrated, it will confirm the belief that the solemn assurances of the German government are not given in good faith.

In the circumstances, the government of the United States to which the declaration of October 20 was made, enters an emphatic protest against the measures contemplated by the German authorities for whose conduct the government of Germany is wholly responsible."

GERMANY SAW THE DANGER OF ATTACK

Wireless Report Indicates Huns Saw Defeat Through Exposed Frontier, Was an Influence.

London, Nov. 7.—In reporting the coditions of the armistice laid down by the Italians to the Austrians, the German wireless service of November 4 added this comment:

"It is assumed that the conditions are not to be understood in such a way that enemy armies might use the freedom of movement for an attack on Germany."

This assumption, it may be said, is contrary to the truth. The intention of the allies is to use their freedom of movement of Austria to further at the earliest possible moment a converging attack on Germany through Bavaria. The towns of south Germany, such as Munich, Dresden and Leipsic, will be immediately exposed to aerial attack and Berlin is no great distance away from the frontier.

There is no disposition to attempt anticipating the intention of Marshal Foch, who has been appointed generalissimo for the purpose of coordinating an allied attack on Germany on the new southern front, but it may be pointed out that he will have at his disposal not merely the Italian army of 3,000,000 men, but the British and French forces in Italy, the French, British and Serbian forces in Serbia and Macedonia and the British forces released from Palestine and Mesopotamia. A high military authority points various alternative routes by which attacks mght be directed.

SMITH IS WINNER OVER GOV. WHITMAN

New York, Nov. 7.—With 43 districts missing and the soldier vote as yet uncounted, Alfred E. Smith, democrat, had a majority of 12,235 votes today over Gov. Charles S. Whitman, republican, in the gubernational contest, on the face of revised returns.

The soldier vote estimated at 15,000 was conceded by the republicans to favor Smith.

A BLIND WEDDING.

From the Los Angeles Times.

The bishop of London officiated at a blind wedding when he married Captain and Mrs. Ian Fraser last month. The captain had been blinded in the battle of the Somme and his entire guard of honor, 16 officers of the British army, were also blind. Yet the reports declare that there was a note of marked happiness, almost exaltation in the ceremony, and the bishop's brief sermon, in which he declared that "marriage is the most beautiful comradeship in the world," has been widely quoted.

HARDING HAS SLIGHT LEAD

Appears to Have Defeated Porter, Democratic Opponent, By Margin of Few Thousand.

PORTER HAD EARLY LEAD

Army Camps Heard From Give Bulk of Vote to Democrat—G. O. P. Candidates For Congress Elected.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 7.—Returns had here this afternoon show the following vote on governor: Harding, 75,277; Porter, 66,243.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 7.—Returns which are arriving slowly indicate Governor Harding has been reelected over Claude R. Porter, democratic aspirant, by a conservative majority of 5,000. From 783 out of 2,348 precincts, representative of all parts of Iowa Harding gets 67,435, and Porter, 59,181. Many strongholds of the democrats are yet to report but democratic state headquarters admitted this afternoon that these are unlikely to put Porter in the lead.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 7.—With 531 precincts, nearly one-fourth of the state reported, W. L. Harding and Claude Porter are running a neck and neck race for governor.

The state probably returned an entire republican delegation to congress.

In the 531 precincts, scattering, reported up to 9:30 o'clock today, Porter was leading Harding by a scant 200 votes.

A recount of newspaper returns will be necessary to establish whether Harding or Porter carried Polk county. Forty-five precincts out of 48 in Des Moines, on an informal count late last night, gave Porter a lead of three votes in the city.

Returns from five army camps, received at the state house early today, gave Porter a lead. The vote follows: Columbus Barracks, Ohio—Harding, 18, Porter 8. Camp Custer, Mich.,—Harding, 30, Porter, 99. Camp Devens, Mass.,—Harding, 43, Porter, 99. Camp Humphries, Va.—Harding, 17, Porter, 15. Camp Beauregard,—Harding 4, Porter, 1. The total—Harding, 113, Porter 222.

Claims of victory still are being made by both republicans and democratic camps. J. W. Reynolds, democratic state chairman, holds to his estimate made at midnight that the state is Porter's by 15,000. State chairman Rawson of the republicans is predicting a Harding victory by 5,000 to 10,000.

Democratic campaigners were inclined to admit this morning that they had lost in every congressional contest. Harry Hull was running strongly ahead of Major Nate Ely in the second district. His indicated plurality in the district is about 3,000.

Hirsch, democratic candidate against Charles Kennedy in the First district was given a strong vote in Burlington, but the remainder of the district seems to have beaten him by a small margin.

Remseyer is leading McCash in the Sixth in which the democrats had the most hope, by a margin that looked safe.

Sweet and Haugen, in the Third and Fourth districts, apparently are in no danger.

Fragmentary returns indicate that the republican officiary, with the exception of governor, will be returned to the state house. H. M. Havner's total will be considerably less than that of either Allen for secretary, Hoyt for treasurer, and Shaw for auditor.

A PROCLAMATION

By virtue of the authority in me vested and in harmony with patriotic movement to sustain the honor of Iowa by raising, at the earliest possible date, the remainder of the state's quota of War Savings Stamps, I hereby proclaim as

"War Savings Cash Sale Week,"—the period beginning Monday, November 25th, and closing on Saturday, November 30th. In conformity with the plans of the Iowa War Savings Committee, I hereby set aside Thursday, November 28th, as Thanksgiving Day on which every citizen of this state—man, woman, and child, shall go to the nearest polling place, and there for cash buy his or her fair share of the unsold remainder of the city's quota of stamps.

Iowa has achieved new honors in the Liberty Loan Campaign. To fail to raise the quota of War Savings Stamps fixed for Iowa by the Government, will bring lasting disgrace to our commonwealth and to us as individuals.

Iowa has great reason to be thankful this year. We should be thankful that the German barbarian has been kept from our shores. We should be thankful for the glories attained by our sons on the fields of France. We should be thankful that our fight for democracy is a winning fight. Let us then give evidence of our thanks by doing our share to support the armies that have made these things possible.

Fifteen million dollars in W. S. S. remain to be sold. It must be sold within the period designated. The Government expects each of us to do his share. The fact that we have just bought bonds does not relieve us from the necessity of buying stamps. The Government expects us to buy both. I know that the citizens of Klemme and vicinity will not fail to make this response.

Let us as a commonwealth show that we are prepared to meet every demand of the Government to shorten the war by winning it and, to sustain Iowa's honor by going to the polls Monday or Tuesday, November 25th or 26th, and buy our fair share of War Savings Stamps.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal.

Done at Klemme, Iowa, this 13th day of November, 1918.

Carry On!

Hogs of the Farmers of Iowa Are to Be Counted by Food Administrator Deems

A hog survey of Iowa to be made by the United States Food Administration under direction of Administrator J. F. Deems.

Every hog on every Iowa farm is to be counted by the school children during the month of September so that Mr. Deems can tell Herbert Hoover exactly how much pork Iowa can furnish for export to our soldiers and our allies in the war.

The count will be carried on by school districts and will be in charge in each county of a committee composed of the County Food Administrators, the county superintendent of schools, the county agricultural agent, the chairman of the woman's committee of the Food Administration and the Council of National Defense, the merchants' representative on the staff of the County Food Administrator and the president of the farm bureau of the county.

Census cards will be furnished the pupils of the schools and the boys and girls will collect the information from the farmers in each school district. The census cards will secure the following information as to the hogs on each farm for Mr Hoover and Mr Deems:

Number of brood sows with suckling pigs.
Number of brood sows in farrow.
Total number of brood sows.
Number of hogs or pigs of 100 pounds or less, including suckling pigs.
Number of other hogs over 100 pounds (excluding brood sows)
Total number of hogs.

This information is being secured by the Food Administration for the reason that it is necessary to know how much exportable food Iowa may produce for our soldiers during the year.

The United States must ship to Europe this year [illegible] food as compared with 10,000,000 a year.

Mr Hoover has asked of Federal Food Administrator Deems: "How much of this increase of 50 per cent in our export of food can Iowa furnish?"

The bushels of grain which Iowa farms will supply is perfectly understood. But how about the hog crop? It is believed [illegible] a careful canvass by the school children of the [illegible] such Mr Deems plans [illegible] Mr Hoover will [illegible] to ship to our soldiers [illegible] hogs as can be sent from the farms of Iowa.

There is no other purpose in the census. The Food Administration assures that pro-German lies will be circulated about it just as they have been set going against every other war work. The Food Administration calls on loyal citizens not to give heed to any stories calculated to prejudice them against the census and to prevent them giving the information so vital to carrying on the war.

The census is not taken to affect taxes or to interfere with marketing or to affect the price of hogs in any way whatever except to give Mr Hoover definite information as to how much good Iowa pork will be available this year for export to our soldiers and our associates in the war.

"It is desirable that this hog survey be complete and that it be finished promptly," said Administrator Deems. "Every good citizen will help us take it. It is a war service of very great importance. It is a compliment to Iowa that the farmer of this state is called into consultation about his share in feeding the world for it shows that his share is very great. Let everyone on the farm, in the schools, everywhere, help get this information, accurately and promptly for Mr Hoover."

Biddle Must Earn Rations.

A daily ration of four ounces of feed per bird will be provided for birds of the best utility breeds up to an aggregate amount of 50,000 tons of feeding stuffs for six months.

Second-grade birds, which must be bred from proved layers, will receive rations only after the requirements of the first grade have been satisfied.

Effects of inadequate food distribution on prices are shown in Russian reports. Late in April of this year, butter was selling in Moscow for 98 cents per pound, while in Petrograd, 406 miles distant, the price was $3 per pound.

This condition emphasizes the present importance in all countries of using locally produced foods as much as possible in order to insure adequate transportation and bring about fairly level prices for foods in general.

Wheat Only $1.41 There.

The New Zealand government has made arrangements to take over the entire wheat crop of that country at $1.41 per bushel. The present outlook is for an average yield.

Rationing of cheese in Switzerland has been in force since June 1. The allowance is one-half pound per person monthly.

FOREIGN PEOPLES SUFFER FOR FOOD

CONDITIONS OVERSEAS MAKE THOSE AT HOME SEEM ALTOGETHER EASY AND COMPLAINING ABSURD.

Conditions relative to the food supply of foreign peoples are so much more serious than those surrounding our people that complaining about whether a tea drinker shall have one or two teaspoonfuls of sugar seems the height of absurdity, or worse, in the opinion of officials in charge of the food conservation program of the United States.

Food Administrator J. F. Deems of Iowa is notified that on May 20 the price of wheat bread in the Ukraine was about 40 cents per pound loaf; and flour 80 cents per pound. These prices, which are about four times as high as in the United States, are based on present currency equivalents.

Great Britain has adopted the rationing of poultry. So great has become the shortage of feed that it is no longer justifiable to support even a hen if she fails to do her part toward feeding the nation.

THANKSGIVING, WHAT HAVE YOU TO BE THANKFUL FOR?

[illegible] America, but the entire [illegible] have a lot to be thankful for [illegible] Thanksgiving day this year [illegible] only be a National Holiday [illegible] be a World Holiday.

[illegible] thankful for her Victory [illegible] World's War, as are her Allies [illegible] the nations which were Hun-infested and were rid of them by Amer[illegible] and her Allies.

[illegible] citizens of America, we are thankful that we have such a wonderful country in which to live, and that we sent men from this country to gain Freedom for the World and breed the true spirit of Independence. We are thankful for the victories our brave men have won. We are thankful for the food and money which we backed these men in the great Cause. And last we are thankful for their safe return, which will be soon. If we have lost our sons, brothers or husbands in the World War, we are thankful that he died for the Flag of Freedom. We have much to be thankful for on this great day. Are you thankful for these things? Surely every good American Citizen can be thankful for the numerous blessings this country has given him. And if he appreciates this he will let him divide the profits with the giver- Uncle Sam—help him bring the boys back home again by taking out your full quota in War Savings Stamps on that day. Yes, go Over The Top and buy more than your quota. You have lots to be thankful for and you can be thankful that you have this to loan to the U. S. A.

CONTRIBUTION

By A Local Writer

The following spicy articles are contributed to the Times by a Klemme writer who prefers to style himself as the "Mere Man." The articles are right to the point and no "beating the bush." The contribution is as follows:

SHRAPNEL

During the Civil War the South hated the name of "Yank" as the devil hates the sight of holy water. Who of that day would have thought that the sons of those grim old Southerners would one day be proud, to march and fight under the name of "Yanks" and with the glorious old Stars and Stripes waving over them? Verily the "world do move," and now both North and South are a nation, "one and indivisible."

Responsible for bringing on the war with all it's attendant horrors, responsible for all the atrocities committed on land and water, Germany now begins to whine about it's starving population, hoping no doubt to gain a mitigation of the just punishment that will be meted out to her at the hands of the avenging Allies. Just as soon as the old Kaiser and the war lords and the junkers shell out their ill-gotten gains stolen from ravaged Belgium, France, Serbia, Russia, and the other nations she has over-run, it will be time for America to take into consideration the condition of her starving population. It is said that the Kaiser owns 60 fine palaces in Germany and has millions of money deposited in all the prominent banks of Europe. So have the war lords and the junkers; let them look out for the starving people first before they begin to beg from us.

Our money should go to heroic Belgium and France, to brave little Serbia and the other countries that have felt the heavy hand of Germany. Or if we must contribute to starving Germany let the pro-German sympathizers and "propaganders" be the ones to do the contributing. There was and is plenty of them left in this country and it is only proper and right that relief, if any, should come from them. As Shakspeare has well said, "Let the galled jade wince our withers are un-wrung." We expect to see the pro-Germans contributing MILLIONS to the cause, letting the balance of us poor fellows out.

To the innocent bystander there were several amusing incidents connected with the recent election, not the least of which was the prodding into wakefulness of the G. O. P. elephant by the president in his appeal for the election of democratic congressmen in certain republican states. The old pachyderm had been lulled into quietude by the slogan, "No politics until after the war," and was peacefully swaying himself to and fro as his want when at rest, merely switching his tail now and then to show that he was still alive when he was suddenly and rudely aroused as if hit by one of the "Big Berthas" of the late unlamented Kaiser Bill. When thoroughly awakened and convinced of what had occurred he broke loose from his moorings and thrashing around at a dreadful rate with a result quite contrary with that hoped for by the president and his advisors. What happened, you ask? Why a republican house and senate was elected out of hand by safe majorities if you must know, and the president was sheared out of his democratic congress in consequence. However, God mercifully "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," and when our worthy president, a "sadder but wiser" man, recovers from the rude shock, he may realize what struck him and the reasons therefor.

THE COUNTY S .S. CONVENTION

The County Sunday School Convention is in full swing. The attendance is not as good as it should be, owing to the bad weather. However, the programs are carried out to the letter and each evening there has been a good attendance at the First Methodist church, where the meetings are being held. We hope to give our readers a full report next week as we are at this time unable to gather the necessary data for a good report.

GOODELL CELEBRATES

Goodell had laid all plans for an elaborate celebration and barbecue last Saturday. The event was the celebration of the World War Victory. The cold rain which set in Saturday checked the large crowd which otherwise would have attended, however even the rain did not check the exuberancy of those who were present and the program went full swing. The main event of the day was the big barbecue at noon. A couple of beeves had been thoroughly roasted and the trimmings of sandwiches and coffee completed the lunch. The Garner Band was on the job and furnished music for the day. Tom Hamilton was chief speaker of the day. In the evening a big dance was given at the Hall, music given by Manning's orchestra. Taken all in all, they had a good celebration.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

In 1823 President James Monroe made the following announcement; "That we consider any attempt on the part of European powers to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety, that we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing or controlling Ame ican governments or provinces in any other light than as a manifestation by European powers of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States." The Monroe doctrine was an official notice by the president of the United States to foreign powers not to meddle in American affairs

The old boots and shoes that are cast into the dustbin have considerable value They are soaked in water to remove the dirt, all the nails and threads are picked out, and the leather is reduced to a thick pulp, from which wallpapers screens etc., are made. The finer the original quality of leather the better it takes the bronze of old gold of the designs which make these hangings things of beauty Bookbinders and framemakers also know the value of this pulp, and carriage builders press it into sheets which are invaluable for the roofs of the most luxurious vehicles.

At one time the slaughter of Danish pigs numbered 2 600 000 early most of which supplied bacon for England The number has steady declined for the want of feeding stuffs, and one week recently only 1.230 pigs were slaughtered, not enough for home consumption which requires at least 5,677 pigs A further decline is expected and several slaughter houses may have to close Much was expected from the new corn bill, which was to reduce the price of bacon, but it is now evident that there will be very little bacon to sell

In the British house of commons Premier Lloyd George gave a brief review of what the British government had done toward winning the war It had increased the British navy from 2,500,000 tons to 8,000,000, Starting with the smallest army in Europe, it has raised 6,200,000 men, besides 2,500,000 from India, Canada, Australia and other overseas dominions. It has swept German commerce from the seas and made the waters safe from German warships, except submarines, and has sunk more than 150 of those

In laying out the 17 mile tangent of the motor highway across the Utah desert it was found very difficult to carry on the work in the daytime The sunlight reflected from the fields of glistening salt and alkali is so dazzling that it blinds the eyes unless they are protected by dark colored glasses, and the rising heat waves distort the shapes of objects sighted and produce fantastic effects Under George F McGonigle, state engineer, and member of the state road commission this tangent was established by signal fires at night

Ages before poison gas was used in warfare, a tiny British beetle known as the bradypus crepitans used a similar device to confound its enemies. When pursued by bigger beetles this little creature ejects a peculiar fluid which, on coming in contact with the atmosphere, bursts into a pale blue-green flame, following a kind of smoke, intensely irritating and poisonous The common name of this poison, gas-emitting insect is the bombardier beetle and it is plentiful about Gravesend, England

A curious method of catching turtles in the West Indies consists of attaching a ring and a line to the tail of a species of suckerfish known as the remora. The live fish is then thrown overboard and immediately makes for the first turtle it can spy, to which it attaches itself very firmly by means of a sucking apparatus on the top of the head. Once attached to the turtle, so firm is the grip that fishermen on drawing in the line bring home both turtle and the sucker

Captain Bailey introduced hackney coaches into England in 1625, and by his wide awake advertising methods got all London talking about them. Samuel Pepsy, a wily old politician, was first induced to take a ride, although it is said the old man insisted upon a large consideration for placing his life in jeopardy.

Some one—probably an automobile enthusiast—has suggested that the Great Wall of China would make an excellent automobile highway.

"Horrible food conditions prevail in Austria," said McLeod today, "and it is quite possible that 1,000,000 persons will die there this winter from lack of food, weakness and disease. The country is quiet now, but another Russia may grow out of the situation as soon as the troops returning from the front discover that the end of the war has not brought relief.

"Scenes along the railways are like those on the battle fields We saw bodies scattered here and there as a result of men crowding on the tops of trains and being swept off by tunnels. There were also bodies of wounded men who had been taken from Red Cross cars and left to die Terrible sanitary conditions prevail in little towns filled with returning soldiers

"What Austria needs is food The other prisoners and I are alive only because of food received from outside of Austria. For three days a friend and I had between us only a little bad bread. It was about as big as a man's hand. Five hundred newly arrived Serbian troops are keeping order at Laibach."

STATE TO ADOPT FEDERAL ACCOUNTING SYSTEM

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 15—Adoption of the federal system of accounting by the state executive council in all departments of the state government is announced by Secretary R. E. Bales. Under this system every state official will carry a special receipt book and for every penny expended whether for lodging, meals, telegrams or whatever the item may be—the expenditure will be allowed only upon the presentation of a receipt properly signed.

There are probably 100 officials representing the various departments constantly traveling over the state. These officials are sent out on inspection tours by oil, fire, food and dairy, board of parole, banking secret service, auditing and other branches of the public service Henceforth there will be no such item as "meals, $27 50," but the receipt book will show the exact amount which breakfast, lunch and dinner cost the official upon each particular date.

THE WORK OR FIGHT ORDER IS NULLIFIED

Draft Boards Instructed to Stop Classifying Registrants—Former Orders Expected Soon.

By Associated Press.

Washington Nov. 12.—Draft boards were ordered today to stop classifying men under 19 or over 36 years and to withhold questionnaires for such registrants for the present

Formal orders or announcements will be issued soon covering all such questions Cancellation of all draft calls and inductions yesterday practically as nullified the famous "work or fight" order promulgated last summer, although local boards have been ordered to continue classifying after physical examination men between 19 and 36. The "work or fight" order falls by reason of the fact that the only penalty attached was that of being placed in Class 1. The stopping of the calls does not relieve any delinquent who has failed to obey draft board orders from the penalties which are attached under the law

A single order from the general staff would suffice to start another stream of men flowing into the cantonments and bring the "work or fight" and all other war time requirements back into force

He does not expect the public will be so eager to take Liberty loans with the war over, and hence believes it unwise to abandon plans for high taxes. Furthermore, Senator Cummins points out, over half the proposed taxes are to come from corporations, many of which have made vast war profits, and these profits should not escape just assessment now that the war is over some democratic and republican reactionaries are trying to let them escape. Senator Cummins says excess and war profits taxes ought not to be applied to individuals and partnerships and would burden unjustly farmers and the small business man.

FRENCH WOULD PUNISH KAISER

Suggest International Court to Try Deposed Emperor—Frown on Banishment Also.

JUSTICE SEEMS CERTAIN

Holland Will Observe International Law In Dealing With the Situation.

By United Press

Amsterdam, Nov. 15—The belief was expressed here today that the former kaiser has not really abdicated but is merely seeking refuge in Holland until a counter revolution is started In support of this belief, it is pointed out that the abdication never was promulgated and that Wilhelm has not taken leave of the German people.

By United Press.

Paris, Nov. 15.—Will Wilhelm lose his head, be banished, or be allowed to disappear?

Public opinion here is divided High circles apparently are almost unanimously Wilsonian in their attitude The majority of the masses seemingly rebel at the escape of the former kaiser, who was regarded as the principal artery of the war and the murderer of 20,000,000 people. These are in favor of an international high court to pass judgment on his case. Those opposed banishment as tending to Napoleonize him into a hero, to which he is not worthy. Others declare the kaiser and crown prince were marionettes in the hands of the militarists and kings of commerce, who are the ones responsible for the war. They contend that if possible, these ringleaders also should be haled before an international court so that something like justice may be achieved.

The opinion is unanimous that the allies have hard jobs in fixing Germany so that no one man or group can make war again and at the same time arresting a famine so far as circumstances permit by holding out a helping hand to a thoroughly beaten foe.

Jan Van Hamel, professor of jurisprudence in Amsterdam now on his way was interviewed concerning the possible disposition of Wilhelm He said he believed the Dutch government will refuse to allow the former kaiser the benefit of asylum if an international court of justice should require his appearance.

TAKES FRESH AIR

London, Nov. 13.—A dispatch to the Central News from Amsterdam says William Hohenzollern, the former German emperor, took a walk this morning, accompanied by officers. Later he went motoring followed by a car containing Dutch officials.

The correspondent says the ex emperor appears to have resigned himself to his new life.

Two enormous lorries arrived today with the Hohenzollern baggage which consisted of a large number of trunks and cases.

TALKS TO PEOPLE.

Materdam, Nov. 13.—The Nieuwe Rotterdam Courant publishes the following account of the former German kaiser's entry into Holland

At about 6 o'clock Sunday morning nine automobiles carrying armed officers drew up at the Dutch frontier near Eysden. A Dutch sentry refused to let them pass. He told the party it would have to wait until the customs offices opened at 7 o'clock.

A member of the group, stepping forward, announced he was the German kaiser. This had no effect and the Dutch sentry replied the kaiser could not pass until he had orders to that effect from his commanding officer

And They Waited.

And so the party waited, the former kaiser talking to some peasant onlookers. At 7 o'clock the party went through the formalities of internment.

While strolling about the Eysden station platform, according to another correspondent, the ex-kaiser talked volubly about his country estates, farms and horses. He told how he taught the people to save by presenting every child born on his estates with a savings bank book bearing a balance of 10 marks. He jestingly remarked to a Dutch captain that the captain's was the worst job he knew. He still spoke of the German army as "my soldiers."

EXPECT JUSTICE.

Boston, Nov. 15.—Dr. Henry Vandyke, former minister to the Netherlands, said tonight that Holland has always been a country in which international law has been honored and respected and that "we can feel sure in regard to the latest fugitive who has taken refuge within her borders that Holland will do what is in accordance with law."

"The very existence of Holland," said Dr. Vandyke, "as a small, independent and intensely democratic country depends upon the sanction of international law.

"The kaiser's case must be settled in accordance with justice and while he is waiting for this settlement, in my opinion, there could be no better place for him to be kept in safety than Holland."

AS PRIVATE CITIZEN.

Copenhagen, Wednesday, Nov 13.—Queen Wilhelmina, of Holland, according to the Frankfort Gazette, wished to extend hospitality to the former German emperor while he remained in Holland. However, the newspaper adds, as Holland itself fears the coming days it was found desirable that William Hohenzollern should live as a private individual.

We will send on request to any retail druggist 100 or more little booklets, just issued, on Spanish Influenza, giving the latest information about this disease—its history—the symptoms—the treatment and particularly the use of Vick's VapoRub as an external application to supplement the physician's treatment.

NEW WAYS TO USE VAPORUB.

In addition to the usual method of using VapoRub that is applied over the throat and chest and covered with hot flannel cloths, our customers are writing us daily telling of their success in using VapoRub in other ways, particularly as a preventive. They melt a little in a spoon and inhale the vapors arising, or melt it in a benzoin steam kettle. Where the steam kettle is not available VapoRub can be used in an ordinary teakettle. Fill the teakettle half full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling and inhale the steam arising.

According to a Bulletin just issued by the Public Health Service, Dr. Stiles recommends that the nose and throat be kept coated with some oily substance. For this purpose VapoRub is excellent. Just put a little up the nostrils from time to time and snuff well back into the air passages.

German General Weeps When He Signs Allies' Armistice

General Winterfeld who headed the military branch of Germany's armistice delegation, wept bitterly when he signed the armistice, according to news dispatches.

AMERICAN PRISONERS REACH SWITZERLAND

More Than 2,000 Released By Armistice Now on Neutral Soil

By Associated Press.

Paris Nov 15 More than 2 532 American prisoners in German camps were released immediately by the signing of the German armistice, according to the latest figures prepared by the American Red Cross in Switzerland.

This number includes all the Americans captured to November 1. It is estimated that only a few hundred more Americans were captured after that date.

Of the total number of prisoners to be released 2 389 are army men, 12 are from the navy and 140 are civilians. In the camps were 241 army officers and 2 139 non commissioned officers and privates and three naval officers and nine sailors.

A majority of the prisoners were at the Rastatt camp.

There were 117 at Cassen and 103 at Limburg.

There were 103 officers at Villengen, 43 at Karlsruhe, 23 at Landshut and 20 at Rastatt.

UNREST SPREADS IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

By United Press.

London Nov 15—Considerable unrest is reported in Holland Spain and Denmark, where socialists and anti-monarchists have begun agitations in favor of establishing republics.

In Holland Pieter Troelstra leader of the Dutch socialists has summoned a council of that party for Sunday to discuss the election of a workmens and soldiers council which if formed, would be the supreme authority in the country.

The Swedish newspapers Social Demokraten and Aftonbladinget demand a change in the constitution. Danish bolshevists proclaimed a general strike but only a few responded.

In Spain disturbances have occurred on the streets, in several cities. The Austrian and German ambassadors have resigned. Members of the chamber have demanded resignation of the government.

FURTHER RELIEF FOR DRAFT BOARDS SOON

By Associated Press.

Washington, Nov. 15 New orders further curtailing operations of the national machinery of draft boards are to be issued shortly by Provost Marshal General Crowder. Stoppage of all physical examinations in connection with the classification of 18-year-old registrants is likely, on the ground that the results obtained will be of little value in six months.

There are also many thousands of foreigners in the United States, now held in class 5 as aliens, whom draft treaties recently negotiated made liable to reclassification. Boards probably will be relieved promptly of the necessity for carrying out the law in this respect.

District boards, which consider appeals and industrial exemptions, have only started their work on the 19 to 37 class. Orders are being framed to relieve them and the registrants affected.

VOLUNTEER CENSORSHIP IS WITHDRAWN TODAY

By Associated Press.

Washington, D. C. Nov 14—Withdrawal of all volunteer censorship requests under which American publishers have been working since the United States went to war, was announced by George Creel, chairman of the committee on public information after conferences with Secretaries Baker and Daniels.

THE DEUTSCHLAND SANK SAN DIEGO

Navy Department Has Evidence That Submarine Planted Mines Near Atlantic Coast.

By United Press.

Washington, D. C., Nov 15.—The German submarine Deutschland is charged with responsibility for sinking the U. S. cruiser San Diego a short distance out of New York a few months ago.

The information is the best available that the navy department has as to the cause, it was stated by an official today.

The Deutschland, originally a cargo submarine cruiser, was converted to lay mines and also was fitted with torpedo tubes. She was known to have operated for a while off the Azores, it was stated.

As far as the navy has been able to ascertain, she was the vessel that crept into American waters and discharged mines which later wrecked the old cruiser San Diego. It was indicated that the navy's proof so far is not positive, but its evidence is regarded as rather conclusive.

The Deutschland under Captain Koenig, first came into Baltimore harbor with a cargo of dyestuffs. After about four weeks she went out with a cargo of nickel and when she made her second trip she docked at New London, Conn. On her outward voyage there was a collision in which a tug was sunk.

Still a Mystery.

What happened to her sister ship, the Bremen, is still a mystery as far as the world is concerned. The British admiralty probably knows, and there may be some American naval officials in on the secret. One thing is certain—she was expected in at New London, and never appeared. Stories current in naval quarters are that she was captured and interned by the British. Germany is understood to have built seven or eight of these vessels of the Deutschland type, which she later converted into submarine cruisers.

POSTMASTER IS GUILTY OF ATTEMPT TO EXTORT

Dave Harris, of Inwood, Ia., Will Know His Fate at Rock Rapids Saturday.

Rock Rapids, Ia., Nov 15—In district court here yesterday evening Dave Harris, postmaster at Inwood, Ia., was found guilty of the charge of attempting to extort, the complaining witness being Henry Bahnson. Sentence will be passed next Saturday. The penalty may be five years in the state penitentiary or a fine of $1,000, or it may be both. Still another charge of the same nature hangs over Harris.

John Heidebrink, of Rock Rapids, was found guilty of assault on Red Cross solicitors when they were making their rounds some months ago. He was fined $50 and costs. It was charged that he refused to contribute to the Red Cross, saying that he was saving his money for relatives in Germany.

TWO ARE KILLED AS STEAM PIPE BURSTS

By Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 14.—Two men were killed, one of them a lieutenant of the United States naval reserves and two were badly scalded, when a steam valve burst on an American steamship in the service of the navy, while at her pier here today.

The men killed were Lieutenant Alexander W. Wells, and Sylvester Tennayet, foreman of a civilian crew of machinists.

A similar accident occurred on the ship about a week ago when 12 men were seriously burned.

ANIMAL INDUSTRY OF NATION THREATENED

Increased Population and Decreased Production Bring About Serious Situation.

By Associated Press.

New York, Nov 14.—A warning that the animal industry in this country must be safeguarded if the United States is to supply its own wants and also feed war devastated Europe for the next year or more was given here today by Dean William Horace Hoskins, of the New York Veterinary College. The food problem calls for the zoning of the country with animal engineer in charge of every zone, he declared, and zone abattoirs and rendering establishments should be established where unprofitable and sterile animals can be turned into food, leather, wool, fats and fertilizers to save the waste of food on the farms.

"In the last 15 years," Dean Hoskins declared, "the population of the country has increased 20 per cent whereas in the same time there has been an actual decrease of 2 per cent in the number of beef cattle, which explains the high cost of beef, shoes and leather.

"The loss sustained by the United States from infectious and contagious diseases among animals in the last year has amounted to $250,000,000."

Federal, state and municipal governments, he asserted, will have to employ a larger veterinary service to reduce the tremendous preventable losses of live stock and to foster the increase of animals on the farms.

ECONOMY RULES THE HOUSE NOW

Will Be Congressional Watchword as Reconstruction Work Approaches America.

Washington Nov 14.—With the signing of the armistice the nation is already preparing to place itself on a peace basis in anticipation of the time when war legislation will automatically cease.

Economy will be the congressional watchword from now on. This sentiment originally voiced by Senator Martin democratic leader, has been echoed by Senator Borah, Idaho, and Senator Smoot, Utah, republicans.

Important war legislation that ceases with the signing of the peace treaties of a few months later, includes:

The food conservation act, which ceases when the state of war shall have terminated.

Aircraft board to continue not longer than six months after the war.

Trading with the enemy act, nearly all activities of which cease upon the termination of the war, except certain duties of the alien property custodian.

War finance corporation, to cease six months after the termination of the war.

Housing act, to cease with the termination of the war.

Overman bill, authorizing the president to consolidate co-ordinate executive bureaus, to cease six months after the termination of the war, or at such other time as the president may designate.

Government control of wire systems, to cease at the end of the war.

Emergency fleet corporation, to cease six months after peace.

Government control of railroads, to cease 21 months after the end of the war.

Food and fuel administrations, to cease at the end of the war.

NO PROFITEERING WHEN MATERIALS ARE SOLD

Washington, Nov. 14.—Profiteers must not be allowed to make huge profits on resales of the tens of thousands of motor trucks and automobiles and other material which the war department and other departments will get rid of when peace is restored. This was the declaration of Representative Good, of Iowa, today. Mr. Good says the trucks, autos, lumber and material which the government gets rid of must be widely distributed among the people at figures fair to the government, but with no profit for junk dealers. In this way he believes many machines will go into agricultural use and the whole public will benefit. Mr. Good is taking up such a plan in connection with his proposal for a war salvage commission.

FURTHER CREDIT IS EXTENDED TO ITALY

By Associated Press.

Washington, Nov. 14.—A credit of $100,000,000 for Italy was announced today by the treasury. This will be used largely to pay for foodstuffs and war supplies already ordered by the Italian government in this country and in process of manufacture or export. Italy's aggregate loans from the United States amount to $1,160,000,000, and those of all the allies $7,912,976,666.

POWDER BLAST KILLS TWO; FIRE FOLLOWS

Peoria, Ill., Nov. 14.—Two men were killed Tuesday night in several explosions in the plant of the Western Powder Manufacturing Company at Edwards, Ill., 16 miles northwest of here. Fire which broke out in the factory buildings and spread to adjoining timber sent hundreds of inhabitants of Edwards fleeing from the village in the fear that the great powder magazine would explode and destroy the town.

Some Snorer.

In the description of her husband's frailities Mrs. Sophia Lellinger informed the domestic relations court that he snored. Now this isn't necessarily a cause for divorce or separation or even alimony in the eyes of the law, although a jury of women might decree otherwise.

Consequently the magistrate informed Mrs. Lellinger that snoring need not be included in the category of crimes attributed to her husband since it wasn't essentially vicious. But here the wronged spouse broke in:

"But you don't know Jim's style of snorin' or you wouldn't say that, judge. I know that there's nice, gentlemanlike snorin', and then there's Jim's brand. Honest, judge, when he gets started off—well, it sounds like he's tearing up white oak."—New York Herald.

Geologists owe much of their knowledge of the Alps to the tunnels which have been bored through these mountains to make railway routes between the northern and southern parts of Europe. When Man Ate Grass.

M Marcel Baudouin, who has been examining some human remains, dating from the neolithic epoch (the latest period of the stone age) has presented the Academy of Science with a curious report The shape of the incisor teeth of two young children of this distant epoch leads him to the conclusion that the present single root teeth of human beings are in reality a development from three germs, and that man is descended from the herbivorous animal with an ancestor possessing 1 2 dental germs

England's First Typewriter.

So long ago as 1714 a patent for a typewriter was taken out in England by Henry Mill, it was called a "machine for impressing letters singly and progressively as in writing, whereby all writings may be engrossed in paper so exact as not to be distinguished from print" His machine was very clumsy, and it was not until more than a century later (1829) that anything further was attempted Then the first American typewriter "called a typographer," was patented by W A. Burt.

There is one country on the American continent Ecuador, which actually boasts of two national days. These independence days of the little republic are the 9th of August and the 9th of October, and mark two determined revolutions, the first of which failed, only to spur the patriots, revolting against Spanish domination, to shake it off, a few months later, forever.

Little Ethel, whose big brother, George, was her teacher's beau, walked proudly to the desk with her examples worked neatly. The teacher, after looking them over, said "Ethel, I don't like your methods." "Well then," said Ethel, "I'll tell my brother, George. He wrote them for me."

Cows Sleep Upstairs.

Three valuable heifers, belonging to a farmer at Blairgowrie, Scotland, were lost for three days recently, and it was supposed that they had been stolen. Passing an uninhabited house later in the week, a soldier was surprised to see the head of a heifer an upper window, and the missing cattle were found together in the front bedroom of the house. How they got there is a mystery, and considera difficulty was experienced in removing them.

Snakes in the Ocean.

It is not generally known that there are snakes in the ocean. There are numerous varieties of small snakes that live in all oceans; then there are the eels, of course, which go from the salt water to the fresh. In the waters around southern Asia there lives the banded sea snake, which has stripes around its body and broad tail, and can swim with great speed.—Christian Science Monitor.

GIRLS! LOTS OF BEAUTIFUL HAIR

A small bottle of "Danderine" makes hair thick, glossy and wavy.

Removes all dandruff, stops itching scalp and falling hair.

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—it costs but a few cents—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance, freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will you cannot find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp—Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower, destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp, and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this. Adv.

Why He Didn't Hit Him.

I heard some loud voices among the children in front of the house, and in a moment Arthur came in. I asked what was the trouble and he explained that a new comer was picking a fight with the boys.

"What did you do?" I asked.

"Well," replied Arthur, "I'd have hit him if it hadn't been for his strengthfulness!"—Chicago Tribune.

THIS WEAK, NERVOUS MOTHER

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which added to my weak condition kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not stop that, I could not get well. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my husband wanted me to try it. I took it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness."—Mrs. J. WORTHLINE, 2842 North Taylor St., Philadelphia Pa.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as it did to Mrs. Worthline.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

(CHAPTER TWENTY—Continued.) 45

He took breath and continued:

"After that? After that, Florence, this: either the smash will take place in such a way that your body will not even be in sight if any one should dream of coming here to look for you, or else it will be partly visible, in which case I shall at once cut and destroy the cords with which you are tied.

"What will the law think then? Simply that Florence Levasseur, a fugitive from justice, hid herself in a grotto which fell upon her and crushed her. That's all. A few words for the rash creature's soul, and not another word.

"As to me—as for me, when my work is done and my sweetness cloyed, I shall pack my trap, or only remove all the traces of my coming, smooth every inch of the trampled grass, jump into my motor car, sham death for a little while, and then put in a sensational claim for the hundred millions."

He gave a little chuckle, took two or three puffs at his cigaret, and decided calmly:

"I shall claim the hundred millions and I shall get them. That's the greatest part of it. I shall claim them because I'm entitled to them and I explained to you just now before Master Lupin came interfering how, from the moment that you were dead, I had the most undeniable legal right to them. And I shall get them because it is physically impossible to bring up the least sort of proof against me."

He moved closer.

"There's not a charge that can hurt me. Suspicions, yes, moral presumptions, clues, anything you like, but not a scrap of material evidence. No body knows me. One person has seen me as a tall man, another as a short man. My very name is unknown. All my murders have been committed anonymously. All my murders are more like suicides, or can be explained as suicides.

"I tell you the law is powerless. With Lupin dead, and Florence Levasseur dead, there's no one to bear witness against me. Even if they arrested me, they would have to discharge me in the end for lack of evidence. I shall be branded, execrated, hated, and cursed, my name will stink in people's nostrils, as if I were the greatest of malefactors. But I shall possess the friendship of all decent men."

"I tell you again, with Lupin and you gone, it's all over. There's nothing left, nothing but some papers and a few little things which I have been weak enough to keep until now in this pocketbook here, and which would be enough and more than enough to cost me my head, if I did not intend to burn them in a few minutes and send the ashes to the bottom of the well.

"So you see, Florence, all my measures are taken. You need not hope for compassion from me, nor for help from anywhere else, since no one knows where I have brought you, and Arsene Lupin is no longer alive. Under these conditions, Florence, make your choice. The ending is in your own hands: either you die, absolutely and irrevocably, or you accept my love."

There was a moment of silence, then:

"Answer me yes or no. A movement of your head will decide your fate. If it's no, you die. If it's yes, I shall release you. We will go from here and, later, when your innocence is proved and I'll see to that, you shall become my wife. Is the answer yes, Florence?"

He put the question to her with real anxiety and with a restrained passion that set his voice trembling. His knees dragged over the flagstones. He begged and threatened, hungering to be entreated and, at the same time, great was his natural murderous impulse.

Is it yes, Florence? A nod, the least little nod, and I shall believe you implicitly, for you never lie and your promise is sacred. Is it yes, Florence? Oh, Florence, answer me! It is madness to hesitate. Your life depends on a fresh outburst of my anger. Answer me! Here, look, my cigaret is out. I'm throwing it away, Florence. A sign of your head, is the answer yes or no?"

He bent over her and shook her by the shoulders as if to force her to make the sign which he asked for. But suddenly seized with a sort of frenzy, he rose to his feet and exclaimed:

"She's crying! She's crying! She dares to weep! But, wretched girl, do you think that I don't know what you're crying for? I know your secret, pretty one, and I know that your tears do not come from any fear of dying. You? Why, you fear nothing! No, it's something else! Shall I tell you your secret? Oh, I can't, I can't—though the words scorch my lips. Oh, cursed woman, you've brought it on yourself! You yourself want to die, Florence, as you're crying—you yourself want to die——"

While he was speaking he hastened to get to work and prepare the horrible tragedy. The leather pocketbook which he had mentioned as containing the papers was lying on the ground; he put it in his pocket. Then, still trembling, he pulled off his jacket and threw it on the nearest bush. Next, he took up the pickaxe and climbed the lower stones, stamping with rage and shouting:

"It's you who have asked to die, Florence! Nothing can prevent it now. It's too late! You asked for it and you've got it! Ah, you're crying! You dare to cry! What madness!"

He was standing almost above the grotto, on the right. His anger made him draw himself to his full height. He looked terrible, hideous, atrocious. His eyes filled with blood as he inserted the bar of the pickaxe between the two blocks of granite, at the spot where the brick was wedged in. Then, standing on one side in a place of safety, he struck the brick, struck it again. At the third stroke the brick flew out.

What happened was so sudden, the pyramid of stones and rubbish came crashing with such violence into the hollow of the grotto and in front of the grotto, that the cripple himself in spite of his precautions, was dragged down by the avalanche and thrown upon the grass. It was not a serious fall, however, and he picked himself up at once, stammering:

"Florence! Florence!"

Though he had so carefully prepared the catastrophe and brought it about with such determination, its results seemed suddenly to stagger him. He hunted for the girl with terrified eyes. He stooped down and crawled round the chaos shrouded in clouds of dust. He looked through the interstices. He saw nothing.

Florence was buried under the ruins, dead, invisible as he had anticipated.

"Dead!" he said with staring eyes and a look of stupor on his face. "Dead! Florence is dead!"

Once again he lapsed into a state of absolute prostration which gradually slackened his legs, brought him to the ground and paralyzed him. His two efforts, following so close upon each other and ending in disasters of which he had been the immediate witness, seemed to have robbed him of all his remaining energy.

With no hatred in him, since Arsene Lupin no longer lived, with no love, since Florence was no more, he looked like a man who had lost his last motive for existence.

Twice his lips uttered the name of Florence. Was he regretting his friend? Having reached the last of that appalling series of crimes, was he imagining the several stages, each marked with a corpse? Was something like a conscience making itself felt deep down in that brute? Or was it not rather the sort of physical torpor that numbs the sated beast of prey, glutted with flesh, drunk with blood, a torpor that is almost voluptuousness?

Nevertheless, he once more recalled Florence's smile and tears, rolled down his cheeks.

He lay long in this condition, gloomy and motionless; and when, after taking a few sips of his medicine, he went back to his work, he did so mechanically, with none of that gayety which had made him hop on his legs and set about his murder as though he were going to a pleasure party.

He began by returning to the bush from which Lupin had seen him emerge. Behind this bush, between two trees, was a shelter containing tools and arms, spades, rakes, guns, and rolls of wire rope.

Making several journeys, he carried them to the well, intending to throw them down it before he went away. He next examined every particle of the little mound up which he had climbed, in order to make sure that he was not leaving the least trace of his passage.

He made a similar examination of those parts of the lawn on which he had stepped, except the path leading to the well, the inspection of which he kept for the last. He brushed up the trodden grass and carefully smoothed the trampled earth.

He was obviously anxious and seemed to be thinking of other things, while at the same time mechanically doing those things which a murderer knows by force of habit that it is wise to do.

One little incident seemed to wake him up. A wounded swallow fell to the ground close by where he stood. He stopped, caught it, and crushed it in his hands, kneading it like a scrap of crumpled paper. And his eyes shone with a savage delight as he gazed at the blood that trickled from the poor bird and reddened his hands.

But, when he flung the shapeless body into a furze bush, he saw on the spikes in the bush a hair, a long, fair hair; and all his depression returned at the memory of Florence.

He knelt in front of the ruined grotto. Then, breaking two sticks of wood, he placed the pieces in the form of a cross under one of the stones.

As he was bending over, a little looking glass slipped from his waistcoat pocket and, striking a pebble, broke. The sign of ill luck made a great impression on him. He cast a suspicious look around him and, shivering with nervousness, as though he felt threatened by the invisible powers, he muttered:

"I'm afraid—I'm afraid. Let's go away——"

His watch now marked half-past four. He took his jacket from the shrub on which he had hung it, slipped his arms into the sleeves, and put his hand in the righthand outside pocket, where he had placed the pocketbook containing his papers:

"Hullo!" he said, in great surprise. "I was sure I had——"

He felt in the left inside pocket, then in the handkerchief pocket, then, with feverish excitement, in both the inside pockets. The pocketbook was not there. And, to his extreme amazement, all the other things which he was absolutely certain that he had left in the pockets of his jacket were gone: his cigaret case, his box of matches, his notebook.

He was flabbergasted. His features became distorted. He spluttered incomprehensible words, while the most terrible thought took hold of his mind so forcibly as to become a reality: there was some one within the precincts of the old castle.

There was some one within the precincts of the old castle! And this someone was now hiding near the ruins, in the ruins perhaps! And this some one had seen him! And this some one had witnessed the death of Arsene Lupin and the death of Florence Levasseur! And this some one, taking advantage of his heedlessness and knowing from his words that the papers existed, had searched his jacket and rifled the pockets!

His eyes expressed the alarm of a man accustomed to work in the darkness unperceived, and who suddenly becomes aware that another's eyes have surprised him at his hateful task and that he is being watched in every movement for the first time in his life.

Whence did that look come that troubled him as the daylight troubles a bird of the night? Was it an intruder hiding there by accident, or an enemy bent upon his destruction? Was it an accomplice of Arsene Lupin, a friend of Florence, one of the police? And was this adversary satisfied with his stolen booty, or was he preparing to attack him?

The cripple dared not stir. He was there, exposed to assault, on open ground, with nothing to protect him against the blows that might come before he even knew where the adversary was.

At last, however, the imminence of the danger gave him back some of his strength. Still motionless, he inspected his surroundings with an attention so keen that it seemed as if no detail could escape him. He would have sighted the most indistinct shape among the stones of the ruined pile, or in the bushes, or behind the tall laurel screen.

Seeing nobody, he came along, supporting himself on his crutch. He walked without the least sound of his feet or of the crutch, which probably had a rubber shoe at the end of it. His raised right hand held a revolver. His finger was on the trigger. The least effort of his will, or even less than that, a spontaneous injunction of his instinct, was enough to put a bullet into the enemy.

He turned to the left. On this side, between the extreme end of the laurels and the first fallen rocks, there was a little brick path which was more likely the top of a buried wall. The cripple followed this path, by which the enemy might have reached the shrub on which the jacket hung without leaving any traces.

The last branches of the laurels were in his way, and he pushed them aside. There was a tangled mass of bushes. To avoid this, he skirted the foot of the mound, after which he took a few more steps, going round a huge rock. And then, suddenly, he started back and almost lost his balance while his crutch fell to the ground and his revolver slipped from his hand.

What he had seen, what he saw, was certainly the most terrifying sight that he could possibly have beheld. Opposite him, at ten paces distance, with his hands in his pockets, his feet crossed, and one shoulder resting lightly against the rocky wall, stood not a man: it was not a man, and could not be a man, for this man, as the cripple knew, was dead, had died the death from which there is no recovery. It was therefore a ghost; and this apparition from the tomb raised the cripple's terror to its highest pitch.

He shivered, seized with a fresh attack of fever and weakness. His dilated pupils stared at the extraordinary phenomenon. His whole being, filled with demoniacal superstition and dread, crumpled up under the vision to which each second lent an added horror.

Incapable of flight, incapable of defense, he dropped upon his knees. And he could not take his eyes from that dead man, whom hardly an hour before he had buried in the depths of a well, under a shroud of iron and granite.

Arsene Lupin's ghost!

A man you take aim at, you fire at, you kill. But a ghost! A thing which no longer exists and which nevertheless disposes of all the supernatural powers! What was the use of struggling against the infernal mechinations of that which is no more? What was the use of picking up the fallen revolver and levelling it at the intangible spirit of Arsene Lupin?

And he saw an incomprehensible thing occur: the ghost took his hands out of its pockets. One of them held a cigaret case; and the cripple recognized the same gunmetal case for which he had hunted in vain. There was therefore not a doubt left that the creature who had ransacked the jacket was the very same who now opened the case, picked out a cigaret and struck a match taken from a box which also belonged to the cripple!

O miracle! A real flame came from the match! O incomparable marvel! Clouds of smoke rose from the cigaret, real smoke, of which the cripple at once knew the particular smell!

He hid his head in his hands. He refused to see more. Whether ghost or optical illusion, an emanation from another world, or an image born of his remorse and proceeding from himself it should torture his eyes no longer.

But he heard the sound of a step approaching him, growing more and more distinct as it came closer! He felt a strange presence moving near him! An arm was stretched out! A hand fell on his shoulder! That hand clutched his flesh with an irresistible grip! And he heard words spoken by a voice which, beyond mistake, was the human and living voice of Arsene Lupin!

Offices [illegible] that means will be [illegible] of course, [illegible] the current plans for eliminating strikes of giving labor [illegible] a voice in the management of industrial plants [illegible] of extending both labor and trade federations to promote collective bargaining. They suggest that the government through the War Finance corporation may aid in the conversion of industries from war to peace footing, reversing the existing priority of war enterprises. Railroad transportation of industrial production, and ocean shipping must be coordinated and supervised for a few years after peace comes as they have been during the war, in the opinion of government leaders. Employment agencies, universities and schools, churches and other social organizations must cooperate to facilitate the placing of returned soldiers in the occupations where they are best fitted and most needed.

Continue Indefinitely

To do all this it is the belief in many official circles in Washington that most government agencies which have sprung up during the war must continue to function for an indefinite time afterward. These include the War Industries Board, Shipping Board, War Trade Board, Food and Fuel Administration, War Labor Board and the War Labor Policies Board, numerous divisions of the Council of National Defense, War Finance Corporation, and many other connected agencies. The Railroad Administration has 21 months to live after peace is signed, unless future legislation should change existing plans for restoration of railroads to private control. The Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association, War Camp Community Service and similar institutions will have big work to perform in conjunction with the government long after the war is over.

In realization that the question of how to accomplish all these complicated matters will be as big a question as that of how to make war has been, nearly all government agencies now are bestirring themselves quietly to taking stock. In congress the spirit is reflected in at least three pending resolutions looking to creation of boards or commissions to study reconstruction. The republicans advocate a survey by a committee of members of congress. Senator Overman's resolution provides for appointment of a disinterested body of students at various problems. Senator Owen has a similar suggestion. Most administration leaders are inclined to endorse Senator Overman's proposal.

President Wilson has discussed the questions of internal as well as international reconstruction with a few advisors and it is understood that it was at his suggestion that the Council of National Defense went to work months ago gathering information from all departments and bureaus concerning their capabilities as peace-time bodies. An extensive bibliography, several chests full of reports and a number of charts have been gathered together for the use of any agency which may undertake to formulate the government's reconstruction program. No effort has been made by the council's officers to suggest policies. This research work has been done largely by Walter S. Gifford and Grosvenor Clarkson, director and secretary respectively of the council. Mr. Gifford has just returned from Europe with information on tentative reconstruction plans of the allies.

All this is only the barest outline of what government leaders are thinking these days without regard to when the war will end.

The famous scientist, Metchnikoff, said: If the system could be kept free from these toxic germs, people might easily live a hundred years or more.

The only safe thing to do is to rid the stomach of its excess acid at once. A way has been found in the wonderful preparation, called EATONIC—a compressed compound that absorbs the excess acid and carries it away through the bowels. Thousands upon thousands now know of EATONIC and its amazing power to clean out the excess acid and leave the stomach sweet, cool and strong—giving it a chance to properly digest food so that you get full strength of what you eat and in this way help Nature build up vigorous health, strength and vitality to take the place in a few days, of sickness, lassitude, weakness.

EATONIC is worth your trial. Its possibilities for restoring health, vigor, energy and vitality are beyond telling. You in mere words—you must "just try it."

EATONIC is absolutely guaranteed so get a big 50c box from your druggist. If it does not help you your money will be refunded. If your druggist does not keep EATONIC, send your name and address to the Eatonic Remedy Company, 1018 S. SWISS ADMIRE IDEALS OF AMERICAN PEOPLE

Washington, D. C. Friendly sentiment toward America is shown by many Swiss newspapers and writers. An excellent example of this sentiment is the following article by Prof. W. E. Rappard. The article appears in a Swiss paper just received here.

Liberal Europe is at last breathing again.

The recent military successes and the moral comforts which they have procured us owes in the first place to the intervention of the Americans. Had they given her only that much they would have been their benefactors.

But there is more. In entering this struggle without selfish ambitions to make the world safe for democracy and the future for liberty they have ennobled the war. They have dowered it with a new ideal or rather they have restored its primitive signification, the purity of which was somewhat tarnished by the deception caused by reverses, the violence of reprisals and compromises of diplomacy.

Since its discovery the New World has been peopled by those whom religious intolerance, political tyranny, and economic servitude drove from the Old. By means of a double resolution as courageous as it was generous these victims of oppression became, first, the pioneers in America and now, the champions in the world of human emancipation. Would one not say that the soldiers from across the sea bring back to Europe today to divide it fraternally with all its peoples, this sacred gift of justice and of democratic liberty, which the colonists, their first ancestors, formerly took with them in exile to save it from oppression?

"America has not only, in the moment of the greatest perils saved liberal Europe from the aggression of exterior imperialism. She will be ready again, at the hour of final victory, to oppose her own ideal of justice to the contagion of this imperialism if it should spread internally.

Switzerland is placed in the center of Europe. Switzerland lives by means of right and democratic liberty. In saving democracy in Europe, America assures therefore in a two-fold sense the salvation of Switzerland. We know it and we shall not forget it."

Mary Pickford will have to pay $108,339 to Mrs. Cora Carrington Wilkenling, a literary and theatrical agent, by order of a supreme court jury. Mrs. Wilkenling said she was responsible for obtaining for Miss Pickford an advance in her income to $10,000 weekly with a bonus of $150,000 a year.

"It is true that German air raids were not conducted over cities of England and France since early last month but this was due not to a belated sense of humanity but to the compelling fact that the shortage of gasoline in Germany became acute," says a message from the front.

HIGH LIVING IN SOUTH SEAS.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Living conditions in the South seas are quite the opposite of the popular idea conveyed in books of romance and adventure. Instead of being able to loll under the shade of palms and having the fruits thereof drop into one's mouth, the daily needs are obtainable only by hard toil. Living, if one desires to live according to the standards of the white man, is as expensive as in any other part of the world.

According to those who have lived there for some time, "it is the last place in the world for a man without capital to come." Consular officers have a regular form warning all inquirers against attempting to settle there unless provided with ample funds, as there are but few opportunities for obtaining employment.

CLEVER MAN.

"She told me to kiss her on either cheek."

"And you"—

"Hesitated a long time between them!"

Clerks in the main office of the Pennsylvania railroad discovered recently that when George Pottsgrove died, 25 years ago, he had $187 due him in wages from the road and a check was forwarded to his widow.

Army officers traveling by airplanes hereafter will receive an allowance of 4 cents a mile. Traveling by rail an army officer usually is allowed 7 cents a mile.

Some Exceptions.

"Women are [illegible] given to abstract reflections." "Aren't they always stealing glances at a mirror?"

It is the history of our kindness that alone makes this world tolerable.—Robert Louis Stephenson.

Unlike Topsy— Swift & Company Has Not "Jest Growed"

Swift & Company, in fifty years of well ordered growth, has become one of the great national services because it has learned to do something for the American people which they needed to have done for them, in the way in which they preferred to have it done.

It has met each successive demand, in the changing conditions of national life, by getting good meat to increasing millions effectively, efficiently, economically, and expeditiously.

The Swift & Company packing plants, refrigerator cars, car routes, branch houses, organization, and personnel of today are the practical solutions, born of practical experience, to the food problems of half a century.

Because of all these elements working in correlation and unison, Swift & Company is able to supply more and better meat to more people than would have been possible otherwise, at a net profit per pound of meat so low (a fraction of a cent) that the consumer price is practically unaffected.

Strip away any portion of this vast, smooth-running human machine, and you make a large part of the meat supply uncertain, lose the benefit of half a century of fruitful experience, and scatter the intelligent energies of men who have devoted a life work toward meeting the needs of a nation in one vital field.

The booklet of preceding chapters in this story of the packing industry will be mailed on request to Swift & Company, Union Stock Yards, Chicago, Illinois.

A PROCLAMATION

By virtue of the authority in me vested and in harmony with patriotic movement to sustain the honor of Iowa by raising, at the earliest possible date, the remainder of the state's quota of War Savings Stamps, I hereby proclaim as

"War Savings Cash Sale Week,"—the period beginning Monday, November 25th and closing on Saturday, November 30th In conformity with the plans of the Iowa War Savings Committee I hereby set aside Thursday November 28th as Thanksgiving Day on which every citizen of this state—man, woman, and child, shall go to the nearest polling place, and there for cash buy his or her fair share of the unsold remainder of the city's quota of stamps

Iowa has achieved new honors in the Liberty Loan Campaign To fail to raise the quota of War Savings Stamps fixed for Iowa by the Government, will bring lasting disgrace to our commonwealth and to us as individuals

Iowa has great reason to be thankful this year We should be thankful that the German barbarian has been kept from our shores We should be thankful for the glories attained by our sons on the fields of France. We should be thankful that our fight for democracy is a winning fight. Let us then give evidence of our thanks by doing our share to support the armies that have made these things possible.

Fifteen million dollars in W. S. S. remain to be sold. It must be sold within the period designated. The Government expects each of us to do his share. The fact that we have just bought bonds does not relieve us from the necessity of buying stamps. The Government expects us to buy both. I know that the citizens of Klemme and vicinity will not fail to make this response.

Let us as a commonwealth show that we are prepared to meet every demand of the Government to shorten the war by winning it and, to sustain Iowa's honor by going to the polls Monday or Tuesday, November 25th or 26th, and buy our fair share of War Savings Stamps.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal.

Done at Klemme, Iowa, this 13th day of November, 1918.

Foreign Food News Notes.

The potato situation in France is very grave, for whereas the average for the last ten years is 12,000,000 long tons, this year the potato crop will not exceed 7,500,000 long tons.

The occupier of an agricultural holding in England may not sell or part with the possession of any horse which is used or capable of being used for the cultivation of the holding, except with the authority of a license.

The rationing of jam in England will be equally as discomforting as the sugar limitation, as jam has been used more than formerly to help out in the small butter ration of five ounces per week The fruit crops of England were abnormally poor this year, practically all the fruit produced being bought by the army and the navy for jam-making purposes.

All persons owning horses in England and entitled to limited supplies of hay, straw, chaff and cereal feeding stuffs must keep records showing the number and class of horses, and full facts regarding source, kind and amount of feed used.

The total nutritional value of the 1918 cereal crop as well as of beans and potatoes in France is below that of last year The wheat crop is larger and of better quality, but the maize, barley, oats, beans and potato crops are considerably smaller These facts, announced by M. Boret, French food controller, show the need for continued and increased conservation in the United States.

The use of straw for bedding purposes is forbidden in England. Oat straw in particular may be used only for feeding purposes.

According to an order of the British food controller, effective November 4, sirup, molasses, honey jam and marmalade will be rationed in Great Britain. While the British people have been on an allowance of two pounds of sugar per month, the same basis as exists in the United States, the new regulation will make it impossible to supplement this ration with unlimited supplies of other sweeteners, as exists in the United States. The size of the new rations will not exceed four ounces per week.

In Russia, bread is selling at $1.23 per pound, as against 1 cent in 1914 and 8 cents in 1917. Sugar is selling at $4.32 per pound as against 6 cents in 1914 and 40 cents in 1917. Potatoes are selling at $30 72 per bushel, as against 30 cents in 1914 and $3.17 in 1917. Milk is selling at $1.12 a quart, as against 9 cents in 1914 and 54 cents in 1917. Butter is selling at $2.88 a pound, as against 29 cents in 1914 and 69 cents in 1917. Eggs are selling at $2.40 a dozen, as against 14 cents in 1914 and 31 cents in 1917.

The number of hogs in France on January 1, 1918, had dropped from 7,000,000 in prewar times to 4,000,000—a decrease of 43 per cent. During the past six months the decline has become much more marked; and with the shortage of feeding stuffs, resulting from a bad potato crop and the necessity for reserving most cereals for human consumption, a still sharper decline may be expected.

SAVING OF FOOD MUST CONTINUE

CONSERVATION OVER HERE WILL PREVENT STARVATION OVER THERE WHEN THE WAR COMES TO AN END.

When the war ends America must not only feed nations which are its present allies, but it will face the responsibility of saving from starvation as many of the 180,000,000 people of Roumania, Russia, Poland and Finland as may be reached. These people face famine and winter.

There is a world-wide shortage of foodstuffs—the natural result of four years of warfare betwen all of the leading nations of the earth, with the consequent withdrawal from agricultural and other productive pursuits of 50,000,000 or more adults, the disorganization and utter demoralization of Russia and the interrupted and unbalanced movement of food and feedstuffs to the neutrals of northern Europe and elsewhere.

The world must continue on short rations for two to five years after peace is declared. If the lid should be taken off when peace is declared the price of most staple food products would no doubt be doubled instantly. High prices will undoubtedly continue for several years after the war.

In the face of the present situation the American farmer faces:

The greatest responsibilities that have ever been placed upon the producers of any nation—that of feeding a starving world.

The greatest opportunity the agricultural industry has ever faced for making money.

Not only must food be measured in terms of human life, but the efforts of the producers of the country must consequently likewise be measured in terms of human life.

America is under direct obligation to furnish its allies with 17,500,000 tons of foodstuffs this year, against 12,000,000 tons last year, if the war doesn't end.

1918.

"I met Mrs. B. the other day," said a North Alabama street man, "and she asked about you."

"How was she dressed?" asked the wife.

"I really cannot say, my dear," said her husband, "there wasn't enough goods for sample."

The Proper Spirit.

"Don't you wish you had your boy to help you on the farm?"

"No," replied Farmer Corntossel; "what I wish is that there was some way of me bein' over there to help Josh in the trenches."

Burns Arms Severely

Last Saturday afternoon A. L. Hubbard, living east of Klemme, was doing some work on his car, adjusting the carburetor, etc., and while thus engaged the gasoline ran down on his sweater sleeve and he gave it no more thought In order to start the engine more quickly he decided to go to the house for a tea-kettle of hot water. As he reached across the stove for the hot water the gasoline on his sweater sleeve ignited and he was all aflame and in trying to put out the blaze with his other hand that arm sleeve also caught, both arms were badly burned before the flames could be extinguished. He was immediately brought to town for medical attention and is now resting quite well at the A. Kirkwood home. His mother, Mrs. Hubbard, is now caring for him.

How nice it is for the Editor to open a letter which says, "Enclosed find check to pay my subscription for another year." Monday we received just such a letter from one of our Garner route patrons. Here is the letter:

"BOBBY" GRABS A HOT ONE

"Bobby Carr" and "Swift" Lewis were putting up a chimney the other day, a rather cold day if we remember right. "Bobby" was the brick laying artist and "Swift" was the guy who handed up the bricks. "Bobby's" hands were getting cold and he made the remark that it would be nice to lay warm bricks. That gave "Swift" a bright idea at once. He heated up a brick, unobserved by the brick laying artist, got the said brick warm, a little warmer, then hot and still a little hotter, put on several pairs of gloves and handed "Bob" the hot one. Did it do the biz? Ask "Bob" about it, and say, he had Webster cheated off the map, the language he used isn't even in the Russian dictionary. Plenty said!

IDLE HOUR HAS NEW ASSISTANT

James B. Mack has joined the Idle Hour as House Manager, with Dr. Parsons retaining his position as business manager. Under this new system the people of Klemme and vicinity are promised something extra good in the winter entertainments. Beginning with the first week in December on Wednesday nights they will run Blue Bird Pictures, a Dance on Friday nights with a good orchestra, and on Saturday nights they will run Paramount pictures. The management also state they have other plans in view which are not at this time given over to publicity. But we can say that the entertainments for the winter season will be all first class.

Arteries of Commerce.

The Romans were the great road builders of history. Roads were the girders which sustained the vast superstructure of their empire. When a new province was conquered it was laced to the empire with roads. Over these highways there poured into Rome the products of the four quarters of the then known world—silks, laces, birds, animals, tropical fruits and slaves. And out from Rome poured the legionaries and the chariots.

Hard to Explain.

Has it ever been fully explained why it is that a man on a cold, raw day will sit four hours uncomplainingly on a hard board in a rowboat and hold a fish pole, yet squirm and fidget and fume if he is asked to sit more than an hour and fifteen minutes on a cushioned seat in a well-warmed church?

OBITUARY

Mrs. Dorothy Lau

Dorathy Lau was born in Pribinow Melkenburg Schwerin Germany, the 19th of July, 1830, and died in her home in Klemme, Iowa, November 21, 1918, thus bringing her age to 88 years and 4 months.

Sixtr-two years ago she and her husband came to this country and settled on a farm in Clayton county, Iowa. There they lived, she and her husband both working hard and economizing in every way possible to pay for a little home which they might call their own. Mother Lau often told of the hardships she and her family endured during the early pioneer days and how they were often in want of the necessities of life and home. Especially was this the case when her hrsband was drafted into the United States Army during the Civil War

Mother Lau was endowed with a strong constitution which enabled her to endure hardships and privations, and kept her hopeful that a better day was coming. In the year 1854 she was united in marriage to Christian Lau. To this happy union 11 children were born, four of which have passed into the Great Beyond waiting to bid the mother welcome at her coming The 30th of August, 1894 her husband was taken from her through the Angel of Death.

She united with the Methodist Episcopal church shortly after coming to this country and remained a faithful member of the same until death. The past few years she was not able to attend the church services on account of her feeble condition. She was always glad when her pastor called on her to have God's word read to her and offer prayer. Often she gave testimonial of her faith in God and that she knew she was a Child of God. Often she invited us to her house to hold our prayer service in her presence. Death did not find her unprepared, she was ready to meet her God who had been most precious to her during these long 88 years.

She leaves to mourn her death 5 sons, 2 daughters, 58 grand-children, and 52 great-grand-children.

SURPRISE PARTY

Joe Johnson and family received a very pleasant surprise last Wednesday evening when about forty friends and former neighbors walked in, all ready for a jolly good time as usual, and not forgetting their appetites, all brought well-filled baskets.

A very pleasant evening was spent, the younger ones playing games while the older folks enjoyed a good visit.

Mr. Johnson was glad he had decided to build a large house which proved none too big when it came to entertaining his friends, and both he and his wife extend a hearty invitation to them all to come again.

HERE WE GO—NINETY BUSHELS TO THE ACRE

We are going to start something with the farmers now and want to hear from those who can beat this. We were talking with Hod Lawhorn the other day and he has a piece of land that yielded him 90 bushels of corn to the acre. He cribbed 1500 bushels off of 18 acres, besides feeding over 100 bushels to his hogs from the same field. Hod says this is by measure and he says it will go a whole lot more by weight. If any of you farmers can beat this just let us know, we will be glad to print it. Little items of this nature are of interest to everyone, so let us hear from you.

SOLDIERS' LETTERS

If you have an interesting letter from a soldier or sailor bring it to the Times office. Such letters are interesting reading for everybody and we like to print them. Bring them in, there is no charge on them whatever, all news items are welcome. If you hear of a party, accident, fire, interesting local story, or in fact anything along the news line, bring it or send it to the Times with your name signed at the bottom so we will know who it is sent by, and we will be glad to publish it. Editor.

Had to Give Up Work

Mr. McMurray Was In a Bad Way Until He Used Doan's—They Brought a Quick Cure.

Mr. McMurray

P. E. McMurray, 43 W. Hickory St., Chicago Heights, Ill., says. "I was always a strong man until I was taken with kidney trouble. I worked many years as a blacksmith and this work brought the trouble on. When I stooped over there was a grinding pain in my back and I couldn't straighten up for four or five minutes. Sometimes it took me half an hour to put on my shoes. I got so bad, I had to lay off work for days at a time. Often I would have to get up a dozen times at night to pass the kidney secretions, and they burned like fire. My feet swelled, and at times they burned so that it seemed I was standing on a hot stove. I had spells of gasping for breath and dizzy spells, too, and my health failed rapidly. I was told that my working days were over, but Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention and before I had used one box, I began to feel relieved. I kept on and by the time I had used ten boxes, I was absolutely cured. All pains left my back and other symptoms of kidney trouble disappeared and I felt as well and strong as ever."

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 7th day of July 1917."

Ordinarily a soldier doesn't appear at the leave center with any more baggage than the law allows. One man arrived with a pair of extra socks and a rifle. Why the rifle? This was his explanation:

"Why, my dear sir, what a state we're getting ourselves into! Of course, I understand that my sudden return seems an unusual and even an inconvenient proceeding, but still it does not do to be so uncontrollably impressed. Men have seen much more extraordinary things than that, such as Joshua staying the sun, and more sensational disasters, such as the Lisbon earthquake of 1755.

"The wise man reduces events to their proper proportions and judges them, not by their action upon his own destiny, but by the way in which they influence the fortunes of the world. Now confess that your little mishap is purely individual and does not affect the equilibrium of the solar system. You know what Marcus Aurelius says, on page 84, of Charpentier's edition——"

The cripple had plucked up courage to raise his head, and the real state of things now became so obviously apparent that he could no longer get away from the undeniable fact. Arsene Lupin was not dead! Arsene Lupin whom he had hurled into the bowels of the earth and crushed with a hammer, Arsene Lupin was not dead!

How to explain so astounding a mystery the cripple did not even stop to wonder. One thing alone mattered: Arsene Lupin was not dead. Arsene Lupin looked and spoke as a living man does. Arsene Lupin was not dead. He breathed, he smiled, he talked, he lived!

And it was so certainly life that the scoundrel saw before him that, obeying a sudden impulse of his nature and of his hatred for life, he flattered himself to his full length, reached his revolver, seized it, and fired.

He fired, but it was too late. Don Luis had caused the weapon to swerve with a kick of his boot. Another kick sent it flying out of the cripple's hand.

The villain ground his teeth with fury and at once began hurriedly to fumble in his pockets.

"Is this what you're looking for, sir?" asked Don Luis, holding up a hypodermic syringe filled with a yellow fluid. "Excuse me, but I was afraid lest you should prick yourself by mistake. That would have been a fatal prick, would it not? And I should never have forgiven myself.

The cripple was disarmed. He hesitated for a moment, surprised that the enemy did not attack him more violently, and sought to profit by the delay. His small, blinking eyes wandered around him, looking for something to throw. But an idea seemed to strike him and to restore his confidence little by little, and in a new and really unexpected fit of delight, he indulged in one of his loudest chuckles.

"And what about Florence?" he shouted. "Don't forget Florence! For I've got you there! I can miss you with my revolver and you can steal my poison, but I have another means of hitting you, right in the heart. You can't live without Florence, can you? Florence's death means your own sentence, doesn't it? If Florence is dead, you'll put the rope round your own neck, won't you, won't you, won't you?"

"Yes. If Florence were to die I could not survive her."

"She is dead!" cried the scoundrel, with a renewed burst of merriment, hopping about on his knees. "She's dead, quite, quite dead! What am I saying? She's more than dead! A dead person retains the appearance of a live one for a time; but this is much better: there's no corpse here, Lupin, just a mess of flesh and bone!

"The whole scaffolding of rocks has come down on top of her! You can picture it, eh? What a sight! Come, quick, it's your turn to kick the bucket. Would you like a length of rope? Ha, ha, ha! It's enough to make one die with laughing. Didn't I say that you'd meet at the gates of hell? Quick, your sweetheart's waiting, you know. Hurry up. Where's your old French politeness? You can't keep a lady waiting, you know. Hurry up, Lupin! Florence is dead!"

He said this with real enjoyment, as though the mere word of death appeared to him delicious.

Don Luis had not moved a muscle. He simply nodded his head and said:

"What a pity!"

The cripple seemed petrified. All his joyous contortions, all his triumphal pantomime, stopped short. He blurted out:

"Eh? What did you say?"

"I say," declared Don Luis, preserving him calm and courteous demeanor and refraining from echoing the cripple's familiarity, "I say, my dear sir, that you have done very wrong. I never met a finer natur nor one more worthy of esteem than that of Mlle Levasseur. The incomparable beauty of her face and figure, her youth, her charm all these deserved a better treatment. It would indeed be a matter for regret if such a masterpiece of womanhood had ceased to be."

The cripple remained astounded. Don Luis's serene manner dismayed him. He said in a blank voice:

"I tell you she has ceased to be. Haven't you seen the grotto? Florence no longer exists!"

"I refuse to believe it," said Don Luis quietly. "If that were so, everything would look different. The sky would be clouded, the birds would not be singing and nature would wear her mourning garb. But the birds are singing, the sky is blue, everything is as it should be, the honest man is alive, and the rascal is crawling at his feet. How could Florence be dead?"

A long silence followed upon these words. The two enemies, at three paces distance, looked into each other's eyes. Don Luis still as cool as ever, the cripple a prey to the maddest anguish. The monster understood or divined as the truth was, it shone forth before him with all the light of a blinding certainty. Florence also was alive! Humanly and physically speaking the thing was not possible, but the resurrection of Don Luis was likewise an impossibility and yet Don Luis was alive, with not a scratch on his face, with not a speck of dust on his clothes.

The monster felt himself lost. The man who held him in the hollow of his implacable hand was one of those men whose power knows no bounds. He was one of those men who escape from the jaws of death and who triumphantly snatch from death those of whom they have taken charge.

The monster retreated, dragging himself slowly backward on his knees along the rocky path.

He retreated. He passed the confused heap of stones that covered the place where the grotto had been and did not turn his eyes in that direction as if he were definitely convinced that Florence's remains were there and sound from the appalling sepulchre.

He retreated. Don Luis, who no longer had any reason to keep him was busy unwinding a coil of rope which he had picked up and seemed to be paying no attention to him.

He retreated.

And suddenly, at a gesture of his enemy, he sprang to his feet and drew himself up on his stockinged legs with an effort and started running toward the well.

He was twenty paces from it. He covered one half these quarters of the distance. Already the mouth opened before him. He put out his arms, with the movement of a man about to dive, and sprang forward.

His rush was stopped. He rolled over on the ground, dragged back violently with his arms fixed so firmly to his body that he was unable to stir.

It was Don Luis who had divined wholly lost sight of him, who had made a slip knot to his rope and who had lassoed the cripple at the moment when he was going to fling himself down the abyss. The struggle lasted for a few moments. But the slip knot bit into his flesh. He ceased moving. Everything was over.

Then Don Luis, keeping the other end of the lasso in his hand, came up to him and bound him hand and foot with what remained of the rope. The operation was carefully performed. Don Luis repeated it time after time, using the coils of rope which the cripple had brought to the well and gagging him with a handkerchief. And while applying himself to his work, he explained, with affected politeness:

"You see, sir, people always come to grief through excessive self-confidence. They never imagine that their adversaries can have resources which they themselves do not possess. For instance, when you got me to fall into your trap, how could you have supposed, my dear sir, that a man like Arsene Lupin, hanging on the brim of a well, with his arms resting on the brim and his feet against the inner wall, would allow himself to drop down it like the first silly fool that comes along?

"Look here, you were fifteen or twenty yards away, and do you think that I had not the strength to leap out nor the courage to face the bullets of your revolver when it was a question of saving Florence Levasseur's life and my own? Why, my poor sir, the tiniest effort would have been enough, believe me!

"My reason for not making the effort was that I had something better to do, something infinitely better. I will tell you why that is, if you care to know. Do you?

"Well, then, at the very first moment, my knees and feet propped against the inner wall had smashed in a thick layer of plaster which closed up an old excavation in the well, and this I at once perceived. It was a stroke of luck, wasn't it? And it changed the whole situation. My plan was settled at once. While I went on acting my little part of the gentleman about to tumble down an abyss, putting on the most scared face, the most staring eyes, the most hideous grin, I enlarged that excavation, taking care to throw the chunks of plaster in front of me in such a way that their fall made no noise. When the moment came, at the very second when my swooning features vanished before your eyes, I simply jumped into my retreat, thanks to a rather plucky kick, a regular kick of the loins.

"I was saved because the retreat was dug out on the side where you were moving and because being dark itself it cast no light. All that I now had to do was to wait.

"I listened quietly to your threatening speeches. I let the things you flung down the well go past me. And when I thought you had gone back to Florence, I was preparing to leave my refuge, to [illegible] and to take you from behind when——

"Don Luis turned the cripple over as though to watch a part which he was tying up with string and continued:

"Have you ever been to Carville-la-Pommeraie, a fishing village in Normandy on the banks of the Seine? Haven't you? Well, you must know that, to reach the ruins of the keep, there is an old well which, like many of the wells of the period, possesses the peculiarity of having [illegible] one of the walls, forming a kind of [illegible] lowered one's pail and [illegible] to the [illegible].

"At last [illegible] opening [illegible] a groove. [illegible] been placed, [illegible] alcohol [illegible] and from the start in the open air. But have I said this? I confess that chance favored me to some purpose. It has often failed me, in the course of our struggle, but this time I had no cause to complain.

"I felt myself in such luck that I never doubted for a second that, having found the entrance to the subterranean passage, I should also find the way out. As a matter of fact, I had only to pull gently at the slight obstacle of a few stacked bricks which hid the opening in order to make my exit amid the remains of the castle keep.

"Guided by the sound of your voice, I slipped through the stones and thus reached the back of the grotto in which Florence lay. Amusing, wasn't it?

"You can imagine what fun it was to hear you make your little speeches. Answer me, yes or no Florence. A movement of your head will decide your fate. If it's yes I shall release you. If it's no you shall die. Answer me, Florence! A sign of your head, is the answer yes or no?' And the end above all, was delicious, when you scrambled to the top of the grotto and started roaring from up there: 'It's you who have asked to die, Florence. You asked for it and you've got it.'

"Just think what a joke it was: at that moment there was no one in the grotto! Not a soul! With one effort I had drawn Florence toward me and put her under shelter. And all that you were able to crush with your avalanche of rocks was one or two spiders, perhaps and a few flies dozing on the flagstones.

"The trick was done and the farce was nearly finished. Act first: Arsene Lupin saved. Act second: Florence Levasseur saved. Act third and last: the monster vanquished, absolutely and with a vengeance!"

Don Luis stood up and contemplated his work with a satisfied eye.

"You look like a sausage, my son," he cried, yielding at last to his sarcastic nature and his habit of treating his enemies familiarly. "A regular sausage! A bit on the thin side perhaps, a saveloy for poor people! But there, you don't much care what you look like, I suppose. Besides, you're rather like that at all times; and, in any case, you're just the thing for the little display of indoor gymnastics which I have in mind for you. You see, it's an idea of my own, a really original idea. Don't be impatient: we shan't be long.

"He took one of the guns which the cripple had brought to the well and tied to the middle of the gun the end of a twelve or fifteen yards length of rope, fastening the other end to the cords with which the cripple was bound just behind his back. He next took his captive round the body and held him over the well.

"Shut your eyes if you feel squeamish. And don't be frightened: I'll be very careful. Ready?"

He put the cripple down the yawning hole and next took hold of the rope which he had just fastened. Then, little by little, more and more cautiously, so that it should not knock against the sides of the well, the bundle was let down at arm's length.

"When it reached a depth of two yards or so the gun stopped its descent and there [illegible] on the dark [illegible] of the narrow [illegible].

"Don Luis sat right to a number of pieces of paper, which were [illegible] down, shedding their [illegible] upon the walls. [illegible] the craving [illegible] leaned over [illegible] done and [illegible] with care, [illegible] catch cold. [illegible] after you, you [illegible] I owe it that I [illegible] and I promise [illegible] government to [illegible] alive as soon as [illegible]. Only, as I didn't know [illegible] you until tomorrow morning I've hung you up to the gun.

"It's a pretty trick, isn't it? And you ought to appreciate it, for it's so like your own way of doing things. Just think: the gun resting on its two ends, the barrel an inch to spare. So, if you start wriggling, or moving, or even breathing too hard, either the barrel or the butt end'll give way, and down you go! As for me, I've nothing to do with it!

..UTON TRUCKS PAY AS MAIL CARRIERS

Experiments Conducted During Past Year Show Feasibility of the Idea.

Washington, D. C.—Cross country operation of mail carrying motor trucks, tried out by the postoffice department on an experimental but nevertheless big scale, during the last year, has been a great success. James L. Blakslee, fourth assistant postmaster general, has found that one truck route between Philadelphia and Washington, cutting chiefly through territory without direct rail connection and costing $800 a month to operate, has in eight months developed a revenue of $16,000 monthly. Another route, into Washington, where 28 parcels a day were moved during the first month, now shows one ton of traffic each way each 24 hours.

Seventy lines now operate over the country, all but one east of the Mississippi, and there are visions of a system which will furnish $360,000,000 annually in revenue for road construction or other purposes.

"Why, General Pershing has 3,000 trucks damaged or ruined over on the other side," said Mr. Blakeslee, telling of the growth of the system. "I don' care what condition they are in. We want them all, and can fix up and put every one of them to work. What's even more important, he's got some boys over there shy a hand, or an arm, or a leg, and we can use them all, too, in good work at good pay, that they can do. Congress gave us $300,000 to work with, and if we had the earnings of the lines themselves, we could expand almost indefinitely. As it is, $9,000,000 will be requested by the division for next year, and I think it will be appropriated. People realize what we are doing.

"Operating at night is the most profitable, and we have but two machines doing that, out of New York. The typical route is about 180 miles long, 90 miles out, and 90 miles back.

"Almost always the constant operation of the lines produces a return load, the universal character of the mail service allowing almost anything to be taken. The mail trucks go, come, rain, storm, or anything, and so the traffic develops. Rates are also pretty high, the lowest being about $20 a ton. That is what makes the surplus revenues.

"Of course, we'll have to have concrete roads, but the business can produce the money to build them. There are some economies in distribution of produce that are simply amazing. It has added an entirely new factor to transcontinental transportation, and we shall just begin finding it out when more extensive operation goes into effect during the next two years."

Just why Mr. Blakeslee sees it that way can be understood from just one commodity price list. Milk retails now in Washington at 17 cents a quart. Milk is coming in on mail trucks direct to consumers for 10 cents a quart. Naturally the trucks are being weighed down with five gallon cans as consumers learn of the possibility. The trucks tap milk producing territory that outside the usual hauling lines, and off the rail articles.

"Where'll the roads come from to run 3,000 trucks?" he asks. "Well, there are 66,000 rural mail and star routes being operated in the United States now. Sometimes I think everyone of them would make a truck line. Food is being handled 10 times on its way to a consumer. We can cut that to five.

"Watching these figures, since December, when we started, has given me a new sort of inspiration. We shall be moving the mails and mails will include a whole unexpected variety of things—in new modes before the generation finishes. Airplanes for the 1,000 mile distances, trains for the 500 miles, and trucks for the 250. That's about the schedule."

HOLLAND PEOPLE WANT AMERICAN FRIENDSHIP

Amsterdam (by mail).—Hollanders have been told by their friends in the United States that American opinion is undergoing a change adverse to Holland. To combat this a Netherlands society is preparing to send a special mission to America in the hope of more firmly cementing the friendship of the two nations.

Friends of Holland in the United States, according to the Handelsblad, which is regarded as the leading newspaper in the kingdom, have sent word to Holland that the feeling in America is that the people of the Netherlands seem "indifferent" to the tremendous issues of the war.

The paper declares that the consensus of American opinion is that the Dutch fail to appreciate the purity of America's motives, that the Hollanders think of nothing but to keep out of the war and enrich themselves an that the loudness of their protests against any inconveniences they may have suffered as a result of Entente war measures is not proportionate to the moderateness of their complaints against Germany's crimes on land and sea.

The newspaper freely admits that there is good ground for reproach. "Many persons in Holland" it says, "judge the war and the leading statesmen of the various countries, especially America, in a captious, presumptuous, even cynical spirit, which is calculated to grieve Americans sorely. America can justly expect Holland to believe in the good faith of its declaration that it entered the war not from egotistical or selfish purposes but to free the world from the cancer of militaristic imperialism.

"Holland has not done nearly enough to enlighten public opinion in America regarding the true feelings of the American people. The spirit of the Dutch people is largely misunderstood and misinterpreted abroad."

SIBERIANS GET AID FROM ALASKANS

Nome, Alaska.—Siberians across the Bering sea from here, fearing that unsettled conditions in Vladivostok will cut them from their Russian source of supply next summer, have asked Nome's city council to send merchandise from here.

The request was made in a letter received by the council from the "people's administration" of Anadyr, a Siberian town on the Gulf of Anadyr, an arm of the Bering sea. The letter was written in Russian and was sent over in a trading boat. Nome responded to the request so far as it could. A committee of councilmen was named to communicate with the Russian municipal officers and render as much assistance as possible.

Discussing the problems immediately confronting the government, United States Senator Lodge warned against the new pacifist and pro-German campaign both in this country and in England, which, he said, was sure to follow the signing of the armistice.

GERMAN OFFICERS HAD FINE QUARTERS

Americans Mopping Up Found Under Ground Homes Had Many Comforts.

With the American Armies in the Field (by mail).—All the comforts of home, with some added luxuries, were found in the dugouts and living quarters which the Germans were forced to abandon when the American troops smashed through the St. Mihiel salient and took the territory which the German army had occupied for four years.

Running water, electric light, steam heat, tennis courts, bowling alleys, swimming pools, pianos and wine cellars were some of the up-to-date conveniences which Uncle Sam's "mopers-up" that followed on the heels of the rushing American soldiers found in some of the quarters of the German officers.

The more elaborate quarters were located in the thickly-set woods which abound in this part of France and most of them represented the work of four years. The majority of them were of elaborate rustic construction and usually had shell proof shelters connected with them. Furniture and decorations taken from the French inhabitants of neighboring villages formed the principal interior equipment.

One of the most unique of these officers' quarters was located in the little village of Euvezin, about 20 miles from Metz. There were two tiers of rooms with broad balconies in front and all lighted with electricity. In the lower floor was an elaborate sitting room, containing richly upholstered furniture, a piano, oil paintings, inlaid tables and beveled mirrors. This apparently was the headquarters of a high officer, for in it were found many maps, plans and a telephone switchboard. Outside was a bowling alley and a small swimming pool.

At one side was a wine cellar well stocked with apple wine, beer and other beverages dear to the German heart. Immediately adjoining was a shell proof dugout, 40 feet deep and capable of holding 60 men. Next to this was a shoemaker's hut where a number of women's shoes and slippers were found, indicating that the Germans had women in their trenches. Higher up in the woods was a vegetable farm and overlooking all is an observatory, which gave a surpassing view of the country for miles around.

Everything was confusion. Uniforms, rifles, pots, dishes, books and all kinds of military paraphernalia were heaped about everywhere, indicating that the Germans had fled in great haste.

That the Germans expected to occupy this territory for a long time is shown by the character of their trenches. In many cases, these were of concrete and equipped with almost as many conveniences as a dwelling house. Some of them had running water, telephone communication, heating stoves and piped drainage.

CHINA "PLUNGES" IN MODERN STYLE

Tokio (by mail).—Twenty loans totalling $72,665,000 have been made by Japan to China during the first eight months of 1918, according to data compiled by Millard's Review of Shanghai. The total loans from January 1 1909, to the outbreak of the war are given at $24,835,000 and since the war began at $99,250,000.

The Bank of Japan makes its large domestic loans to such institutions as the Yokohama Specie bank, according to officials of the department of finance. The Bank of Chosen and the Industrial Bank of Japan, which have figured largely in the loans are semi-government banks.

On January 6 1918 the Yokohama Specie bank made its second advance on the second reorganization loan, repayable out of the reorganization loan if made, otherwise a one-year loan with interest at 7 per cent. This loan which is secured by surplus salt revenues is for $5,000,000.

On January 20 1918 a loan of $10,000,000 was made by the Tai-hei Kumei syndicate to the central Chinese government for the purchase of arms, interest 7 per cent, issue price 97, additional commission of 5 per cent for unspecified purpose.

January 1918, wireless loan amount not known but probably $1,500,000 for construction of wireless stations, materials to be purchased from Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

In June a loan of $10,000,000 for 40 years at 5 per cent was made to the ministry of communications for continuance of the Kirin-Changchun line to the border of Korea.

On July 3 the Industrial Bank of Japan and the Bank of Chosen made a loan of $15,000,000 for five years at 7½ per cent. As security all the forests of Kirin and Heilungkiang were pledged.

On July 5 a third advance of $5,000,000 was made on the second reorganization loan.

In August a loan of $1,500,000 was made to the Yunnan government, security being the government revenues from the Ko Chiu tin mines.

Smaller loans made by Japan to China in 1918 include Yokohama Specie bank's share of group bank advance for flood relief $100,000, Mitsui Bussan Kaisha loan to central government on bureau of engraving and printing, $1,000,000, supplement loan for Kirin-Changchun railway, $325,000, Mitsui Bussan Kaisha to Tsao Kun for military purposes, $500,000, Japanese syndicate, for use of Hunan provincial government, $1,250,000, loan to province of Fukien, for general purposes, $500,000, Mitsui Bussan Kaisha to Chihli province (in which lies Peking), for purchase of cotton yarns for Chihli spinners, $500,000, Bank of Chosen to Fengtien provinces for redemption of small coin notes, $1,500,000; Yokohama Specie bank to province of Hupeh, $500,000; Okura group of Tokio to province of Shensi, $500,000; Okura group to central government for military advance against Canton $1,000,000.

VIRGINIA CONVICTS TO BE PUT TO WORK

Charleston, W. Va.—It is likely that West Virginia will be one of the first states to utilize her idle convicts on essential war labor. Announcement has been made by Charles M. Browne, labor supervisor for the railroad administration, that male prisoners in Moundsville state penitentiary probably will be put on track and other construction work being done by and for the government, permission to take convicts from their cells for this purpose having been granted by the state board of public works. There has been much agitation favorable to putting convicted prisoners on work which is lagging because of insufficient men to perform it.

SECRETARY BAKER MINGLED WITH BOYS

Carries a Pack, Samples Their Food and Gets a Full Knowledge of Affairs.

London (by mail).—Enlisted men of the American army grinned sympathetically as they watched the American Secretary of War Newton D. Baker trudging back and forth carrying the heavy pack of the American soldier on his back when he visited a camp of American soldiers in the Winchester district while in England. The men were adjusting their cumbersome kits when the secretary arrived at the camp.

"I would like to try one of them," said the secretary to the sergeant.

The Lord Mayor of Winchester, the camp commandant and a group of soldiers all gathered about as Mr. Baker lifted the pack and adjusted it to his shoulders. Then he trudged back and forth two or three times carrying the 70 pound load, while a pair of heavy hob nailed trench boots, swinging from the bottom of the kit, banged against his legs.

"It's heavy, all right," he commented as he unburdened himself, but not so heavy as the Frenchman's pack. I tried one of them on a few days ago and it gave me an additional respect for the Frenchman as a soldier."

The secretary made himself at home and was friendly with the soldiers. Everywhere he carried his pipe and several times filled it from the soldiers' pouch as he engaged in a casual chat with the men. "The whole country is behind you with everything it possesses," was one of his frequent messages to the fighting men. In the Red Cross hospitals the secretary went through the wards and had a few cheery words for each of the patients.

In some of the camps he dropped in upon the soldiers at mess time and lunched with the big crowd of them in the mess tent beside a little woodland stream. He looked through scores of barracks and living quarters. He inspected kitchens and spent 10 minutes watching soldiers playing a scrub game of baseball. His inspection of the Red Cross activities was comprehensive. He saw the bathing houses in operation with long lines of raincoated soldiers waiting their turn at the showers. He saw the dental huts, with the Red Cross dentists busy at their work. He visited several Red Cross recreation huts and listened to the Red Cross Jazz bands at practice.

At one camp he found his cousin, Sergeant Harry Chiswell, of Cleveland, and chatted with him for 10 minutes. Altogether the secretary gained an excellent impression of what the American army authorities have done in preparing comfortable and sanitary camps for the soldiers in the Winchester district south of London in preparation for the winter.

HOT CHOCOLATE STOPS WHOLE YANK ARMY

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in France (by mail).—"Mother" Burdick, the little Texas woman who invented "shrapnel cake" and won the heart of every doughboy who flocked into the little Salvation Army hut for cake and doughnuts and pie, has a new stunt which delights the soldiers.

It is the "all night chocolate service."

Recently a new division suddenly appeared in "Mother" Burdick's area, or rather the first units of it appeared. They were going to the front the first doughboys told her. She was business at once. Calling "Pa" Burdick and her other assistants, "Mother" Burdick got pots of chocolate on the stove at once. It was then fairly late at night.

Then "Mother" Burdick went out to find the general commanding the division. In the dark it was pretty hard to locate the general, but she finally cornered him. He was surprised. Being a newcomer in France with a new division, he had never heard of the Salvation Army women.

"Mother" Burdick told him in a few words ending with, "We've already put every pot we have on the stove full of chocolate. When one is emptied we'll make more. Those boys should never go to the front without each one having a cup of hot chocolate. I want to stop them in companies just long enough to fill their cups as they go by the hut down the road."

The new general was not used to being talked to that way and it was hardly within campaign orders to stop men in companies for chocolate. But the general had brought his men a long way already that evening, and they had farther to go before morning. He knew how hot chocolate would brace the boys.

So he gave the order for groups to stop one by one for rest at the Salvation Army hut, as they passed through. Then the general stopped himself for a cup of chocolate. They worked all night at "Mother" Burdick's hut and two other huts nearby assisted so that more than 15,000 cups of chocolate were given to the boys that night.

WHISKY PRICES ARE UNCERTAIN QUANTITY

Louisville, Ky.—After 18 months of extreme uncertainty in the whisky market, the price of bonded goods today in Kentucky, the largest straight whisky producing state in America, is 95 cents to $1.15 a gallon.

The imminence of complete prohibition, coupled with the belief that higher taxes may cause a marked decrease in consumption, is expected by large operators to keep prices at a low level. A few dealers, however, believe the approach of prohibition will stimulate demand and bring high prices.

The sudden, sweeping market changes have kept operators in a turmoil. A year and a half ago many of them would have been bankrupt had they been forced to liquidate their holdings. Then prices rose and on paper some of the holders were millionaires.

The order stopping production for beverage purposes sent prices upward until newest whiskies approached $3 a gallon in bond. Owners counted gains in big figures, and many held on for higher prices. The cautious ones unloaded at the peak, however.

Then came the certainty of prohibition for the duration of the war and that greatly increased taxes must be paid. Prices crashed and brought the low levels of today.

There are between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 gallons of whisky available for sale today on which the tax has been paid. The present tax on whisky is $3.20 a proof gallon. Dealers said they expected the new $8,000,000,000 revenue bill to provide a tax of at least double and probably treble the present rate.

IOWA FOLKS GET MORE SUGAR NOW

FEDERAL FOOD ADMINISTRATOR DEEMS REDEEMS PLEDGE GIVEN THE PEOPLE WHEN RATION WAS CUT DOWN.

By increasing the monthly allotment of sugar for Iowa people from two to three pounds of sugar per capita, effective November 1, Federal Food Administrator J. F. Deems emphatically declared that this must not be taken as meaning that the conservation of foodstuffs generally is not now fully as important as it was at the height of the sugar shortage. While the sugar situation has improved, largely due to the splendid aid of the American housewife in reducing consumption, and also by the availability of new domestic cane and beet sugar, the needs for greater exports in other lines is no less marked. The United States must increase the food exports by one-half from a harvest no larger than last year's.

The prominent part which the American woman has played in conserving sugar is best understood by a comparison of our consumption of sugar during the past four months with the consumption for a similar period in normal times. Normal consumption of sugar for the months of July, August, September and October was approximately 400,000 tons per month, or 1,600,000 tons for the four months. Following the appeal for sugar conservation there was saved approximately 3,000,000 tons during that period of this year. Seventy per cent of the sugar consumed in the United States is used in the home.

Last spring when we had only 20,000,000 bushels of wheat for export above our normal requirements, the American people made sacrifices by saving that enabled us to send 110,000,000 additional bushels of wheat besides the normal exportable surplus. Of this the housewife alone saved a total of 13,000,000 barrels of flour.

The same loyal spirit of sacrifice has been shown in the sugar conservation program and it is confidently felt by the food administration that the American people will give renewed devotion to the food program.

AN ENTIRE WEEK FOR CONSERVATION

December 1-8 to Be Utilized for a Rededication of Our People to War Service.

The end, Monday, of the actual fighting of the war will not interfere with carrying on the war program in Iowa so far as food conservation is concerned.

As planned, the week of December 1-8 will be devoted to rededication of the people to that cause which is now more vital than ever.

The responsibilities of the food administration are greatly increased by the close of the European butchery. More than twice as many people are now facing famine as could be reached before they were released from the domination of the Huns.

In view of this situation Mr. Hoover will write a new message to the American people which will be read in the churches on Sunday, December 1, and at lodges and meetings of all civic organizations during the week, and in the schools.

The new home card and the new window card will not be distributed during the week but the organization perfected by the women's committee for the distribution be maintained in tact, for there will be other activities which will enlist their attention.

It is now planned to ask the schools to organize a program relating to the new and intensified conservation required by the changed war condition and to give it publicity on Monday December 2.

The food administration will arrange for local meetings in each county to be addressed by local speakers. The county food administrators and the chairmen of the women's committee in each county will arrange for public meetings in every community during the week of December 1-8. The new message from Mr. Hoover will be the text at these meetings.

MAY REDUCE SUBSTITUTES

There Is a Chance That Wheat Flour Restrictions Will Be Modified.

The United States food administration announces the possibility of diminishing the percentage of substitutes used in wheat bread before the new year. Mr. Hoover in a message to Federal Food Administrator Deems of Iowa says that the belief is entertained that sufficient wheat will be available to reduce the amount of substitutes in bread of all allied countries and allow substitutes now being imported to allies to be used for dairy feeds, of which there is a great shortage in all countries. This is possible on account of the collapse of Austria alone. "The change in the war situation, however, does not alter the total of foods demanded from the United States, but will increase our load," says Mr. Hoover, "and, therefore, there will be increased demand for economy and conservation. We must now participate in the preservation from starvation of the newly liberated nations in Austria, and it is anticipated that while some wheat may be needed from the United States, the largest part of our export to that quarter will be corn, rye, barley and fats."

THE BLUE TRIANGLE ON BABEL'S TOWER

Lucia pulled her shawl farther across her face and shrank down on the station platform bench as the solid blue figure suddenly bent down over her. Excitedly she shook her head in answer to the question that she could not understand. She searched through her red plaid waist for the paper that Tony had folded into a little square and given to her. The writing on it, in the English that Tony knew and she did not, told the house where she lived. Tony had explained it all to her that morning. He had told it to her again at the station. Then, waving his hat, he had disappeared into the train with the rest of the men, and Lucia had been left standing outside the gate. There were crowds of women pushing all about her. They were weeping. So Lucia wept, too.

Lucia had been betrothed to Tony in the old country. Five years before, with a long ticket for New York pinned into his inside pocket, her lover had left her. He wrote in every letter that he had made her a home in the new country. Her dowry money had finally provided her own transportation, and for two months Tony and she had been married. Then he had drawn a ticket with a number on it, and this morning he had gone off to war.

To the policeman Lucia told all these things in rapid Italian. But the policeman only talked back to her as rapidly in a language that was not Italian. She followed him dumbly to headquarters. An hour later a woman wearing American clothes gently began talking to her in beautiful Italian.

Italian Lucia was only one of thousands of foreign-born women, Syrians, Italians, Armenians, Russians, Lithuanians, Polish, who, when the draft called their men folk to the American colors, asked in helpless confusion what it was all about. When would their men be back? What did people mean when they told them they would receive money through the mail? Where could they find work that they knew how to do? Was there no one who could explain it all to them in their own language?

The Y. W. C. A. was ready to offer assistance, but it would be of no value to offer it in English. Consequently it had to supply a corps of women who could talk to the foreign-born woman at her own door in the language that she was used to hearing in the homeland. To teach her English was as essential a factor in her Americanization as to find her a job. Therefore the war council of the Y. W. C. A. set out to find her English.

A year before the war began in Europe, the leaders of the Young Woman's Christian association foresaw just such a situation, and made ready to meet it. They studied the needs of the immigrant. They trained skilled American social workers to become familiar with the home habits and to speak the language of the Lett and the Hungarian and the Greek and the other foreign mothers who brought babies and bundles over from Ellis island to Battery park.

The organization into which this experiment has developed was named by the Y. W. C. A. national board, "The International Institute for Young Women." In terms which these women can understand, it is teaching the foreign-born how to sew and cook and care for the baby.

To girls like Italian Lucia, who confusedly lingered on the station platforms when the draft trains pulled out, the W. Y. C. A. is giving direct assistance. Educated European women, appointed to the regular staff of workers at the camp Y. W. C. A. Hostess Houses are able to talk to the drafted men in their own language, assist them in writing letters home, and in arranging furloughs and little visits to the camp.

"The Home Information Service for Foreign Families of Enlisted Men" is doing practical relief work for the wives and mothers. The purpose of the board is to help the women folk left behind to understand where their boys are and how they are being treated; how they need home support and cheer, how to send them comforts, and to keep pace themselves by learning English and other things, so that when the boys come home they will not find their women still very un-American and out of sympathy with them.

Food conservation bulletins have been translated into 18 or 19 languages. At the factories and munition plants interpreters are available for the non-English speaking women by whom the real war industries of the country are being largely carried on. In 25 important cities International Institute Bureaus are training American and foreign women for full time social service work with foreigners. Twenty-four trained women are employed on the national and district field staff of the Y. W. C. A. On June 15 there were 105 trained women working at Americanization.

When more than 75,000 Chicago men filled out their blue cards for the September 12 draft, Gang Luo Wong appeared at one precinct bringing with him Mrs. Gang Wong and the three children. All five wished to register. The enrolling clerk explained, but the Gang Luo Wongs make many broken Chinese remonstrances before the master of the family was induced to sign a card without his wife. Mrs. Wong could not speak English. What would his family do in a strange country if Gang Luo went to war? All over the United States Chinese and Poles and Serbs were asking the same question. It is to just such needs that the War Council of the Y. W. C. A. is organized to give assistance.

High Cost of Living Looked at From New Angle.

Uncle Peleg Gave the Citizens of Bloomfield Something to Think About When He Bought His Frugal Sunday Dinner.

"I suppose the folks back home still manage to get a living in spite of the high cost of it?" said the dweller in the city to his boyhood friend, Reuben Sparrow, who had driven in from Bloomfield that morning.

"Why, yes," said Reuben, "they all seem to live along in pretty much the same old way. Of course there is some scaling down. Extravagant ones are tightening up a bit, and the close ones are a little mite closer.

"Take the Longleys for example. You know how they always used to do. Jim would get his pay Saturday night, and then they'd begin to live on the fat of the land. About Thursday, funds would give out, and then it would be pudding and milk, or whatever they could pick up, for the rest of the week. Well, they do just that same way now. First of the week there's nothing too good for them, and price is no object. Only difference is that now hard times begin with them 'long about Tuesday instead of Thursday.

"Then there is Eben Titus. He goes on altogether a different principle. Eben says that it doesn't cost him so very much more to live than it did five years ago. He was always a great figurer, you know. He's set what calls a fair price on each of the commodities. Of course he can't control the price, but he can regulate the quantity. So when sugar, for example, takes a jump of ten per cent, he marks down the amount to be used in just the same proportion, and so keeps even with the game. You might suppose that the family would be on scant rations by this time, but Eben says not. According to his tell, not one of 'em has lost weight, and they never were healthier or happier. He says the generality of folks eat too much and too expensively and that we never can know how little is enough until we have put the question to the test.

"But most of our Bloomfield people do their fighting of the high cost of living simply by word of mouth. That was what I found a lot of 'em doing when I stepped into Elias Pride's provision store the other night. They weren't giving the monster a leg to stand on. They all agreed that it was unjust and outrageous and heartrending the way prices were mounting up; and that flesh and blood couldn't stand it much longer. Elias himself joined right in with the rest. He said it made him fairly sick to have to charge such prices, but what could he do?

"Just then old Peleg Dawes came to buy his Sunday dinner. I suppose Peleg was the only man there that you might say was actually feeling the pinch of poverty. He's past work, with not much to do with, and it was kind of pitiful to see him pricing one thing after another and then shaking his head. Finally he settled on half a pound of tripe.

"'A good piece of tripe, properly cooked,' says he, 'goes about as well as anything, this time of year. Some calls it a little tough, but I tell 'em it's tougher where there's none.'

"'Have to pay pretty high for anything we get nowadays, Uncle Peleg,' I says, as he started to go.

"'Yes,' says he, 'but that isn't so bad by half as not being able to get it at all. Sometimes,' says he, 'when I'm setting down to a good, square meal at home, I seem to see some of those hungry people across the water looking on kind of wishful; and it makes me feel real guilty, as if I was getting more than my share.'

"After the old man had gone out, conversation seemed to take a different turn. I guess we had all been reminded that there are some things in the world a little more heartrending than the high cost of living in Bloomfield.—Youth's Companion.

Motorcycles in War.

From the arrival of the British expeditionary force in Belgium in the late summer of 1914 down to the present time the motorcycle has steadily gained in importance in different branches of the military service. Its use has not been restricted to the allied armies. The best authorities place the number of motorcycles employed by the armies of the central powers at the time of the Battle of the Marne at 18,000. The British had at least 40,000 in service in the spring of 1915, while the French had about 11,000. The Italian forces up to present have 10,000 according to recent estimates, says Popular Science Monthly

It has been figured that more than 750,000 motorcycles have been in use for military purposes by the belligerent powers since July 1914. This does not include those at present in the United States army service, for prior to our entrance in the great war the American army did not have more than perhaps 150 machines in all.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

The first compulsory vaccination act was passed in England 64 years ago. Ten years later vaccination became obligatory in Scotland and Ireland, and this means of protection against smallpox has since become general in nearly all civilized countries. There was, of course, much opposition to the new law in many quarters, and anti-vaccination societies were formed. These exist even today in many parts of the world. Thirty-three years ago an anti-vaccination riot occurred in Montreal. A mob attacked the city hall and threatened to burn the newspaper offices, but the police succeeded in quelling the disturbance. Similar outbreaks, especially among eastern people, have occurred from time to time.

The Washington monument is a national memorial to the "Father of His Country." It is 555 feet high. The base is 55 feet square, with walls 15 feet thick and the total weight of the structure is 90,854 net tons. The interior of the monument is lighted by electricity and contains a stairway composed of 800 steps and an elevator that reaches the top in seven minutes. The corner stone was laid July 4, 1848, in accordance with Masonic rites. The work progressed slowly until 1854, when it was discontinued for lack of funds, but in 1880 it was resumed by the government and in 1884 the monument was completed at a cost of $1,200,000. It was dedicated February 22, 1885.

The word "crater" from the hole made by a mine, and afterward fought for, has thoroughly established itself in the language of the trenches. It is a highly obvious and inevitable borrowing from the volcano. But the volcano itself took the word from the original "crater"—the mixing bowl (from the verb meaning to mix), in which the Greeks, from the earliest known times, mingled water with wine. These craters, which stood in conspicuous positions in the hall, were often of huge size, and the resemblance to them of the volcanoes orifice struck all ancient observers who used the word "crater" in the modern volcanic sense.

A small boy entered a drug store and inquired the price of an ice cream soda, for which he intended to pay a dime, which he had earned by doing errands. The clerk told him the price was 15 cents. After a moment of deep meditation the lad asked the price of a glass of soda and was told 5 cents. Then he ordered an ice cream cone tariff a nickel. Ordering the soda, he deftly whisked the cone contents into the glass, getting his portion of home-made ice cream soda for his dime. The proprietor chuckled and gave him a dime to try the clever trick on a rival druggist on the next street.

Negotiations for aerial postal service have been completed between the British and Dutch governments, and Holland is very busy making final arrangements. The journey from Amsterdam to London would take but one and one-half to two hours. The Dutch military airmen, who have been in training since the beginning of the war, are to act as pilots, and the ministry of war is lending full cooperation to the scheme. On the same lines an air service between Amsterdam and Groigen is also being arranged. Ground for large airdromes is being prepared near the Dutch metropolis

An elephant in his native land has a hard job to find what he likes to eat. Contrary to the general belief, he will not eat anything, but he selects carefully the best of roots, herbs, fruits and various vegetables. When in captivity, he eats about the same kind of fodder, with a few exceptions, including pastry, bread, nuts (chiefly peanuts) and some other goodies which may be offered to him. Elephants eat no kind of meat whatever, they will eat only pure grown food or clean bread or pastry

Dice exactly resembling those of the present day have been recovered from the ancient Egyptian tombs, and also from the more recent times of Greco-Latin civilization. Dice similar to ours were found at Herculaneum, and the destruction which overwhelmed Pompeii also destroyed a dicing party at its amusement. Eighteen hundred years after, the dice were found in their bony hands and the game yet unsettled.

Opening a British industries fair of dye industries and gloves at Glasgow Sir Arthur Steel Maitland M P said the exhibition showed the great progress already made in Great Britain. SOLDIER CAN'T FORGET BAYONETING SOLDIER WOMAN

Waterloo, Ia, Nov 21 - U. B. Kelly, former secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, now a Y. M. C. A. secretary in northern Italy, tells of seeing a wounded soldier who could not banish from his mind the sight of a dying German woman soldier who was bayoneted to death as she was strapped to a machine gun.

"I had a strange experience while helping unload some of the wounded American soldiers," Mr. Kelly writes to his wife. "One of them, badly hurt, was unable to get out of his mind one incident of the hand-to-hand fight in which he was engaged. Charging a machine gun nest, he ran his bayonet through a soldier As the latter dropped to the ground the helmet fell off and the American realized he had killed a woman who was assigned to a machine gun

The soldier raved continually about the incident while delirious He said he never could forget the sight of the woman's long yellow hair which fell about her shoulders as she dropped to the ground We have read of the hellish practice of chaining women to guns, but now I know it was true"

MANY PAROLED MEN WENT INTO SERVICE

Des Moines Ia., Nov 21 - In its biennial report, officially filed with Governor Harding, the state board of parole sets forth a new condition with which it has been confronted in its work with paroled men since war was declared

In spite of the restrictions against it many paroled men absconded and went to war. Either by using assumed names and enlisting, or through liberal interpretations of the law on the part of draft boards who inducted paroled men into the service not a few of the men under the jurisdiction of the board got into the service. A few others secured work in shipyards or in war industries outside the state The question now confronting the board is how to handle these men now that the war is over It recommends that appropriate legislation be enacted providing that in cases where these men have proved good soldiers or have done constructive war work they should be finally discharged from their obligations as paroled men

Y. M. C. A. MEN IN FIRST BATTLE LINES

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 20 "The first man to reach me after I annexed a good sized chunk of shrapnel in my leg at the battle of Chateau Thierry was a Y M C A secretary," said George Fitzgerald, of Kiowa, Kan one of the overseas boys invalided at Fort Des Moines, as he watched the "Y," K. C and Jewish welfare secretaries marching along in the big parade Saturday afternoon.

"Fitz," as the boys out at the fort call him, was a member of Company G, 13th infantry and was in the thick of the big fight which really was the turning point of the war and the downfall of the Germans. He has a bad wound in his right knee and a German bullet plowed its way clear through his chin leaving a "dimple" on each side

"After that Y M C A boy had dragged me back to a place of safety where I could get first aid, said Fitzgerald, "he hustled back and fought shoulder to shoulder with the regular army men. Nobody can hand me anything about the 'Y' not doing the right thing for the boys overseas why the shows they gave us alone with such talent as Elsie Janis and other broadway stars, was remarkable, and it didn't cost us a cent - all free I have no time for the criticism which is being heard about the Y M C A canteen service we are paying more right here in Des Moines for cigarets than we ever paid the 'Y' If the boys only could understand how much it cost to get that stuff over there, plus the heavy losses sustained they wouldn't be so free with their kicks

Dempster United States commissioner to explain why he had cards circulated in Waterloo, which are alleged to have interfered with the United War Work campaign Mr O'Connor not questioned the county official for some time but no formal charge has been preferred and federal officials are doubtful if one can be placed as reported

Mr O'Connor stated it was the first time such a matter had been brought to his attention and he may communicate with the department of justice before taking any further steps in the investigation

The cards which were left on every doorstep in the city a week before the drive tended to show the Knights of Columbus are to receive a larger percentage of the funds received in the United War Work campaign than the public had been led to believe The cards purported to be an article in a local paper written by Mark Hurl but of Fort Dodge misstated facts concerning appropriations of the war work funds

Visit to Metz a Real Welcome to the Y an

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the French Advancing Toward Metz, Nov. 21.—General Petain entered Metz yesterday. The ceremony was strictly military and symbolic of the recovery of Alsace-Lorraine. French civilians have dominated the town for several days

The story of how Metz changed from a German to a French town last week was told to me by an eye-witness, Lieut. Charles W. Drew, of Philadelphia. American aviator, who just returned from a Metz hospital.

"Walter J Wakefield, of New Jersey, and I got the news of the armistice through newspapers which were smuggled in by an Alsatian guard, who was an allied sympathizer," said Drew.

"The German doctors, nurses and guards were all right, but they were strict. We felt a change in the rigidness of the discipline Saturday. On Monday, the 11th, the Bavarians on guard at the hospital threw down their arms. They were replaced by old men, many of whom carried red flags. These self styled 'soldiers of the republic' did not salute the officers. They fraternized with the prisoners and liberated several of them.

"The Germans who had discarded their weapons put on Red Cross bands and talked fearfully of the red flag demonstrations in the streets. The doctors put on civilian clothes. They and the nurses stayed until some French doctors arrived Walked About City.

"In the meantime none of the guards prevented us walking about Metz. There was a strange atmosphere. Crowds gathered and told of their French sympathies boldly wearing the tri-color.

"As the German regiments marched out of the city the soldiers mingled with the crowds, assuring the civilians they had no ill feeling toward them and saluting many of the municipal officials.

The shopkeepers immediately got busy and tore down German signs, replacing them with French. Their supplies were meager but good, particularly the clothes

A thousand Alsatians who deserted from the German army donned civilian clothes and sought jobs running trams and clerking in stores

After Monday the streets were brightly lighted every night There were many French and a few American flags displayed The streets were crowded with happy men, women and children but there were no wild demonstrations We received numerous invitations to dinners and teas We accepted one from the mayor who heartily entertained Wakefield two French officers and myself in honor of the city's liberation His wife had made French British and American flags with her own hands. These were placed over the door The mayor then appointed the four as a sort of reception committee and we stood under the flags shaking hands with a great number of citizens who called to pay their respects. The meal and the wine were splendid.

To Visit America.

"The mayor already is organizing a delegation of the most prominent sons of the city to go to America to thank the United States for its part in rescuing Alsace-Lorraine.

"We returned to the hospital in the mayor's car. It was the only car in Metz, which had not been requisitioned by the Boches to carry the families of the officers to the Rhine.

"The next day we decided to leave despite my wounded arm. We had difficulty making our way out of the city and did not see a single German on our way to Nancy. Every village we passed through—on both sides of the line—was decorated with French and American flags. The natives were all happy and were showing their gratitude by feeding refugees and German war prisoners."

Drew said that German officers and soldiers readily admit their defeat, show no particular hate and declare they are hopeful of a permanent peace.

Prisoners Emaciated.

Thousands of emaciated, unkempt and poorly clothed prisoners—Russian, British, Russian, Italian and Belgian—are returning from Lorraine prison camps. They say the Boches have begun to wave red flags and have driven all the prisoners toward French lines in groups. Guards disappeared and the prisoners were fed and guided the refugees.

A unit of Bavarians guarding a prison camp threw down its arms when "the republic" was declared, freeing hundreds of prisoners before the armistice was signed.

French, British and American troops hastily established relief camps to feed, lodge, clothe and bathe the refugees. Doctors and nurses provided medical attention for long neglected prisoners.

The prisoners tell how the Alsatians and Lorrainers are enthusiastically preparing for French reoccupation.

In Toul, Nancy and other Lorraine towns, former prisoners of half a dozen nationalities are delightedly donning doughboy uniforms which were issued without discrimination by Yankee relief depots.

The Allied Line.

The allied armies of occupation have advanced an average of 20 to 25 miles from the lines established at the signing of hostilities, it was indicated in official and unofficial reports today.

The general line now held by the allies apparently runs as follows: Antwerp and Brussels (occupied by the Belgians); Hal, Seneffe, Charleroi, Florennes (occupied by British); Liemburg, Fumay and Florennville (occupied by the French); Etalle, Leger, Athus, Andun-LeRoman, Briey (occupied by the Americans); Grayelotte, Chateau-Salins, Dieuze, Saarburg, Markirch, Colmar, Breisach, and the line of the Rhine to the Swiss border (occupied by the French).

Fortress City Happy as French Enter—Statues of Kaiser Are Quickly Destroyed.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Metz Nov 21 The nightmare of German domination in Lorraine ended yesterday and this historic city slept last night under the protection of Marshal Petain

Metz was formerly taken over by the French yesterday when Marshal Petain reviewed the tenth army before the statue of Marshal Ney

French civilians and a majority of the Lorrainers were wildly enthusiastic during the ceremonies yesterday afternoon while a small pro-German minority looked passively on

General Mangin, injured in a fall from a frightened horse, was unable to share in honors of occupation

The crowds cheered the veteran poilus and the aviators swooped overhead

One of the machines crashed headon into the crowded square but, miraculously, only a few persons were injured

Numbers of children unceasingly shouted "Vive la France" not knowing any other French words because of the German laws forbidding the teaching of that language

Soldiers Revolt

The last of the Germans departed Sunday The soldiers revolted and the officers were shorn of their chevrons and belts before the civilians There were no signs of disorder other than that four statues of Wilhelm were defaced and the head broken off the statue of Daniel, outside the cathedral, the fate of which the former kaiser years ago caused to be replaced with a replica of his own features The headless statue was decorated with a sign on which was inscribed in Latin, "Thus Passes Earthly Glory." Shops and restaurants were busy Food was plenty and substantial with the exception of bread

There were no wild demonstrations after the military review the French element remaining quietly happy The few Germans appeared resigned

POSTAL FIGURES TOO HIGH FOR BURLESON

By Associated Press

Washington D C, Nov 20.—Postmaster General Burleson announced today that failing to reach an agreement with the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co upon compensation to be paid for its lines during the period of government control he had made an award which would be enforced, though the department would facilitate a suit in the courts to determine final adjustment

The postmaster general asserted that the Postal Company in sworn statements to the wire control commission had reported its net operating income in 1916 to be $4,157,670, while the net income reported by its component corporations to the Interstate Commerce Commission during the same period, was but $342,343 This he said, made it impossible for the department to accept the company's proposal.

SLAV FATE MAY FALL TO GER

Real Danger of Bolshevism in Kaiser Land, Official View of State Department.

By United Press.

Washington, Nov 21.—That there is an active danger of bolshevism in Germany, but that Teuton leaders are not playing that possibility for their own ends, is the official attitude of the government today toward the German situation. This position was reached by the state department.

It was pointed out that the present calm of recent days need not necessarily be significant. Russia moved rather quietly; but when bolshevism burst in its fullness the nation went mad. The state department now expects events to follow the same sequence in Germany, for the intelligence and training of the average German are higher than those of the Russian. It was pointed out that the Russians came out of actual serfdom only a comparatively few years ago. The Germans have not been a real serf, though they have been bound down by caste and autocratic rule.

However, it was said that likewise the Teuton probably will not prove intoxicating as to the Russian. The chief element in the situation, as viewed by the state department, is the belief that when the dead of winter is over there may be hunger through lack of food distribution. That, as President Wilson has pointed out, tends to anarchy. So the state department fears that there is still a chance of genuine bolshevism, with bad consequences for Germany.

Overplaying Game.

On the other hand, the official view of the above added the suggestion that Germany was overplaying the peace menace in an effort to enlist sympathy for herself and to gain mitigation of armistice and peace terms.

"Looking at the matter from the German viewpoint, it seems quite the logical thing for them to do," said one authority. He indicated, however, that neither this nation nor the allies are being unduly served by the Bolshevik program, waiting for help and appealing for sympathy.

AMERICAN NAVY HAS FRENCH HEADQUARTERS

Army of Officers Constantly on Job to Manage Vast Fleets of Boats Coming and Going.

American Naval Base, France.—(by mail.)—Here on this rugged Breton coast there is an American naval establishment which is a sort of composite of the busy activity of the navy department at Washington and of one of the big navy yards on the American seaboard.

Vice Admiral Wilson commanding the American naval forces in French waters, has his headquarters here, with an executive staff quartered in one of the largest buildings of the city, fronting the Place President Wilson. American bluejackets are on guard at all the entrances, and steady files of American naval officers and sailors crowd the corridors on their various duties.

The streets are filled with American sailors on "liberty parties," often 5,000 and 6,000 in a single party. And on the water front there is the hustle and activity of a huge navy yard, with scores of American naval craft and transports lying in the harbor, and the shore alive with a vast naval installation.

Besides the rush of the port itself this is the naval administration center for 300 miles of the French coast, divided into three districts, with a number of the chief ports into which the masses of American men and material are pouring.

Aside from the American transport fleet which comes and goes, there is a standing personnel of officers and men in these districts, with some 80 ships—destroyers, repair ships, converted yachts, mine sweepers and naval tugs. The shore establishment is on the same extensive scale, with aerdromes for balloons and airplanes, great stacks of coal and mammoth tanks for fuel oil.

Naval headquarters is in constant wireless touch with the whole range of this naval activity, along the 300 miles of front and far out to sea where the convoys are steadily moving in and out. All the orders are issued here for this intricate movement, the meetings at sea at appointed places—and the zigzag routes which will cheat the hostile craft lying off the coast. From outside headquarters one sees the wireless antennas stretching off to a nearby church steeple, thus giving a great sweep of wire for gathering the sound waves. There is also direct telegraph and telephone, so that if need be conversations may go on between the naval chiefs and American officers at Paris or London.

It is a huge work this big establishment is carrying on. On the strictly naval side are the defensive and offensive operations—defense of American and other allied shipping in the vast movement of men and munitions across the Atlantic, and offensive in the war of extermination being made against enemy submarines.

Outside of the naval operations there is the steady march of a vast naval construction at all the ports along this 300 miles of sea front, repair plants, fuel stations, oil tanks, waterworks, and all the requirements of a constantly expanding.

The Six Nations Indians of Canada will appeal to the governor general for an immediate lifting of the ban on Indians who failed to register under the Canadian national registration act. Unregistered Indians have been refused supplies at all the stores on the reserve.

First it was called Independence. Pa. Then, when the fame of the iron chancellor was at its height, the German population of the little town voted pridefully to change its name to Bismarck. Bismarck it remained until recently, when citizens forgot for all time that they had once been German and pledged themselves to battle against the machine that Bismarck had built up. The little town has a new name now. It is Quentin, Pa., in honor of that son of a former president who died fighting in France.

"The most unpleasant feature of German discussion of a league of nations is the sudden zeal of the most notorious intriguers. If there are two men in Germany who bring suspicion on anything which they profess to recommend for the good of the world, they are surely Herr Erzberger and Herr Dernburg," says the London Times.

LAST OF BANDIT GANG FALLS IN GUN FIGHT

Police Kill Charlie Forbes, and Wife, Alleged Denver Train Robbers, In California.

By Associated Press.

Denver, Col., Nov. 10.—With the death of Charlie Forbes, alias Dale Jones, who with his wife was killed in a pistol fight with officers at Arcadia, Cal., last night, the Denver police believe that the last member of the gang of alleged train robbers who terrorized Denver and Colorado Springs the afternoon and night of September 13 has been accounted for. Besides the robbery of a Missouri, Kansas & Texas mail train at Koch, Kan., the night of July 10, last, the death of Chief of detectives, John W. Rowan, of Colorado Springs and patrolman Luther McMahill of Denver are charged against the bandits.

Of the six men sought in connection with the bandit activities, three are dead and three are in jail.

In addition to Forbes, Ray Lancaster, alias, "Kansas City Blackie," fell in a fight with the police, having been killed in Kansas City, September 24.

Roy Shertil pleaded guilty to train robbery in federal court in Kansas recently and was sentenced to 25 years in prison.

Ray Long will be arrested on a charge of highway robbery.

George Lancaster, brother of Ray Lancaster, was captured in Kansas City at the time his brother was killed.

Of the two women sought by the Denver police in connection with the reign of terror here, Mrs. Forbes is dead as a result of tonight's battle in Arcadia and Eva Lewis DeMorris sister of Frank Lewis, is in jail here awaiting trial on a charge of highway robbery.

PRAISE IS GIVEN AMERICAN FORCE

King George Breaks Precedent and Goes to Meet Parliament—Tribute to Yanks.

By Associated Press.

London, Nov. 20.—Another precedent went the way of other precedents yesterday when King George, accompanied by Queen Mary and the Prince of Wales, went to the palace at Westminster to receive and reply to the loyalty address passed by parliament Monday. Heretofore it had been the custom of the parliament to go to the king on such occasions. The royal party drove to the palace without escort and was loudly cheered along the route.

Arriving at Westminster, the king, the queen and the Prince of Wales went immediately to the gallery of the house of lords, where the commoners and the lords, the latter with the officials of the houses in their robes of office, awaited them. The king was in morning dress. The lord chancellor and the speaker of the house of commons presented the addresses.

Fleet Won War.

King George in expressing his thanks to the house of lords and the house of commons said he was glad to meet the members of parliament and the representatives of India and the dominions beyond the sea.

"After a struggle longer and far more terrible than anyone could have foretold, King George said, 'Great Britain remains inviolate. Our navy has held the seas and wherever the enemy could be brought to battle it has renewed the glories of Drake and Nelson. The incessant work it has accomplished in overcoming the hidden menace of the enemy's submarines and in guarding the ships that have brought food and munitions to our shores has been less conspicuous, but equally essential to success.

Tribute to America.

"Without that work Britain might have starved and those valiant soldiers of America who have so much contributed to our victory could not have found their way hither. The fleet has enabled us to win the war. In fact, without the fleet the struggle could not have been maintained, for upon the command of the sea the very existence and maintenance of our land forces have from the first depended."

HINDENBURG MOVES HIS HEADQUARTERS

By United Press.

Washington, Nov. 20.—Field Marshal von Hindenburg has moved general staff headquarters to Cassel, according to diplomatic advices here today. Demobilization of the army will be conducted from there.

The workmen's and soldiers' council at Cassel issued a manifesto urging the people to show Hindenburg every honor while he is there.

"Never was Hindenburg closer to our hearts than now while fulfilling his duty," the manifesto stated. "His person is under our protection. We know that both the civilian and military population will only show that they honor him and will refrain from any manifestation in his respect."

BRUSSELLS FIRE BURNS ALL STATION BUILDINGS

TWO CENT FARE TO SOLDIERS GOING HOME

Washington, D. C., Nov. 19.—Director General McAdoo today announced his intention of establishing a reduced passenger rate of 2 cents a mile instead of the usual 3 cents for soldiers returning to their homes after discharge from the army. By law soldiers are allowed 3½ cents a mile for transportation and meals, and the special fare will enable them, Mr. McAdoo believes, to buy meals and pay for sleeping car reservations out of the allowance.

Real Meaning of "Salad."

Salad literally means salted and is a direct descendant of the Latin word sal, or salt. The use of "salad" to mean the greens from which or on which a salad mixture is placed is one of only recent origin. The Italian insalata and the Spanish salada, meaning salad in those languages, actually mean salted.

Allegorical October.

In some of the calendars of our ancient Saxon ancestors the month of October is allegorically represented by the figures of a husbandman carrying a sack on his shoulder and sowing grain. It was the sowing of the fall or winter wheat, as we call it in this country.

Well, Many Don't Seem to Have.

Robert was a thoughtful child and was used to reasoning out the "why" to his own questions. One day a little boy came in from next door. He asked questions continually and Robert finally looked at him curiously and said. "Haven't you a think of your own?"

Beet-Sugar Industry.

The United States and Spain are the only countries which produce both cane and beet sugar in any considerable quantity. The development of the beet-sugar industry in the United States has been one of the great agricultural and manufacturing growths of this country. From 1898 the beet sugar production in the United States increased from 50,000 tons to approximately 800,000 tons in 1915.

A LETTER FROM BEN COOBS TO HIS FOLKS

October 23, 1918.

Dear Folks:—

I suppose you received my last letter, but I have not received any mail since I am here. Have been here since the 12th of October. Now don't get scared when I tell you where I am I am in the hospital taking life easy Don't have to go out for my meals. I was gassed the 12th, but am getting along fine, so don't worry. I am better off here than at the front. The weather is lovely today; hope it stays that way for a while. We have been having quite a lot of rain here since I came here.

I have not been around the camp very much so I don't know if there are any boys here that I know. I wrote a letter to Herman the other day; hope to hear from him soon. I don't know how far he is from here. I told him to look me up if he was near here. I have not seen any Klemme boys since I am here, but there are plenty of them over here. We are a long ways back from the lines. Have good buildings for wards and of course pretty nurses to wait on us, and thick, soft beds to sleep on. I suppse you folks are busy husking corn. How are the crops this year? We have not been paid since July, so you may know that I am about broke, but I heard we were going to get paid the 31st, so that isn't very long to wait. Is Lena working in Mason City? She was going to write but I have not heard from her. Well, day after tomorrow is my birthday, but I don't expect any presents this year. There are no Iowa boys in this ward, most of them are from the East and South.

Well, this is all I can think of this time.

Your son and brother,
Ben.

School News

SCHOOL NOTES, DECEMBER 3

After a real Thanksgiving time, students and teachers are busy preparing for future citizenship.

The "Victory Boys" and "Victory Girls" organized for the purpose of contributing to U. W. W. campaign, have pledged a total of $77.25, the Victory Boys' pledges amounting to $39, and the Victory Girls running very close with a pledge of $38.25. This they have pledged to earn and give, which we feel is an important part of their education A good many have paid their pledges or have made a payment on them now and they are to be congratulated upon the spirit shown The campaign is a National one carried on for girls and boys between the ages of 12 and 20 years of age.

The 8th Grade Manual Training Class are just finishing some mat weaving looms for the use of the Primary room.

By permission of the School Board we are ordering some reference books and apparatus work for demonstration in General Science. We are greatly pleased to get this as it means a big step forward.

Only five more weeks until semester exams. Will we glow with pride or shivr with ague? It is up to each individual

Here It Is!

THE HAPPY FARMER

The author of these lines is a boy seventeen years old. He writes: "I am being dominated by a holy ambition to contribute something to the literature of America."

The farmer is a happy man,
His life is free from care;
With naught to make his spirit sad
Or want to make him swear.
All day among the cockleburs
He gayly grubs and hoes,
And money never troubles him
Unless 'tis what he owes.
How sweet at early dawn of day
To rise before the sun,
And hustle briskly 'round the barn
'Till all the chores are done;
To feed the cows and milk them too,
In brightly shining pails,
While they tread upon your corns
And thump you with their tails.

WATER WORKS ON THE HUMMER

Last Friday evening the pressure tank at the pumping station blew up and burst a large hole in one end of the tank, letting all the water out in less time than it takes to tell it. Too much pressure and a weak spot in the tank seems to be the cause of the trouble which is causing a lot of inconvenience to those depending on city water. The leak is being repaired and put in order as quickly as possible

A SPECIAL OFFER FOR THIS MONTH ONLY

J. F. Ryan is putting on a special for December only, to introduce his wonderful preparation, "Kno-Sope," to the people of Klemme and vicinity who have not yet used it and who are urged to take advantage of the special offer. "Kno-Sope" will positively remove Dandruff, it is a tonic and shampoo combined in one. Ryan can prove to you that it will do all he claims for it. "Kno-Sope" disolves the dandruff, absolutely removing it from the scalp, leaving the scalp clean and clear. "Kno-Sope" does not contain soap, or any form of soap, or other injurious chemicals which make the hair brittle and come loose. With a "Kno-Sope" shampoo you do away with rinsing the hair with water—this feature is very popular with the ladies. Ask those who have used "Kno-Sope" how they like it, ask the ladies who Ryan has shampooed what they think of it. This month only—a large 16-ounce bottle of "KNO-SOPE" for 50c.

FRANCES GEORGE HASKEL

Frances George Haskel, son of Ed Haskel of north of Limon, was found dead on his sister's homestead, which he had been working the past season, at noon Wednesday. He had been after the mail Monday, and had taken a shot gun along, presumably to hunt rabbits. He had returned to the house, placed the mail on the table and sat down in a chair, with the gun between his knees. It is thought that the gun was in some manner accidentally discharged, as he was found in the posture just described with the top of his head shot away.

Deceased was born in Butler county, Iowa, November 6, 1881, where he spent happy childhood. His parents moved to Hancock county, Iowa, when he was five years of age. He came to Colorado 11 years ago with his parents, took up a homestead and has done farming and raised cattle successfully from the start. He was a loveable character, intelligent, honest, cheerful, industrious and kind, and suicide was out of the question. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict of accidental death.

There are left to remember and miss him, his parents and a sister. The Express joins the community in extending sympathy to these bereaved ones. The remains were laid to rest in the Walks Camp churchyard at two o'clock today, Rev. Virden officiating. —Limon, Colorado, Express.

LET'S GET A COW

A. D. Gimer handed us an interesting report the other day which looks good to us—and better to the farmers in the dairy business. "The Klemme Creamery are paying 70 cents for Butter Fat for the 1st half of November. It is safe in saying that no creamery in the State has exceeded this price to patrons up to the present time."

Now that sure sounds good and shows that the Klemme Creamery is right up and doing things for the interest of their patrons. Seventy cents is some price. We are thinking strongly of buying a cow and feeding her on paper around this office and get in on that 70 cent price. A cow ought to thrive in a print shop—providing she don't get to nosing around and eat up all our ink and type.

Mere Man Shoots Over "Shrapnel"

We call our little effusions "Shrapnel" on account of their short range and tendency to scatter.

That was rather a sloppy idea of the "wets" trying to wish a "wet" administration on "bone dry" Iowa.

With the Bul knocked out of Bulgaria, the Hun knocked out of Austro-Hungary and the war germ extracted out of Germany, and the gobble out of Turkey, makes the world reasonably safe from autocracy.

This war fully demonstrated that the world will not stand for a war of frightfulness or pillage no matter whatever else it may stand for.

"To the victor belongs the spoils" is a military axiom of long standing. This, however, does not mean the indiscriminate looting and pillaging of non-combatant and defenseless inhabitants of invaded countries, but an orderly surrender of the arms and military resources of the defeated army and a proper indemnity for all property wantonly destroyed. Such terms as these are governed by international law. Looting is only practiced by savages, and is frowned upon and forbidden by civilized military authority.

With all his braggadocia and sword rattling the old Kaiser has shown himself to be nothing but an arrant swashbuckler, if you know what we mean by the term. Instead of surrendering at the head of his defeated misguided followers, he skips to a neutral country and hides himself in fear and trembling at the fate that awaits him. What happens to him now cuts little figure with the balance of the world. He is down and out, to remain so we hope for all time. Even Germany is beginning to realize what poor stuff royalty is composed of, and repudiates it also.

"A bas le Hohenzollern" is about the only bit of pure French that we have been able to master. Roughly translated into a bit of pure American it signifies, "To hell with the Kaiser." The sentiment may be a bit profane, but we can think of no other expression that fits the situation so aptly when we think of all the misery he has caused.

Another notable feature of the late election was the combined efforts of the foreign language propagandists and the "wet" or saloon element to defeat Gov. Harding for re-election. The former were angry with the governor for his stand on the foreign language question, and the "wets" because he did not stultify himself by opposing the anti-liquor laws as they expected him to do. Nevertheless and notwithstanding the governor was re-elected by a good majority and the English language with American trimmin's is still the official language of the Hawkeye state, and the anti-liquor laws are still in force. In consequence, "everything looks lovely, and the goose hangs high" in old Iowa

Christmas Days

O! The Christmas days are coming
And that's the reason why
That everything looks lovely,
And the goose is hanging high.
"Our Boys" are coming home again
To Mother's cake and pie,
And everything looks lovely,
And the goose is hanging high.
So you can very happy be,
As the days go rolling by.
For everything looks lovely,
As the Christmas days draw nigh.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSON, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

Tonopah, Nev., has decided that its wartime rejoicing can no longer be done in a haphazard, inefficient manner. Hereafter, the gladness of the townfolk will display system. The two local groups of musicians, representing the business men's drum corps and the Musicians' Union, have been established on a fire department footing, so that they are ready to turn out for calls by day or night, at a signal from the fire alarm gongs or the mine whistles. Tonopah has long had jollifications every time the allies won a victory, but it was sometimes difficult to get the affair under way promptly. On the last occasion, however, the band, with 25 pieces, and the drum corps with nine men turned out in less than five minutes after the first summons was issued, and inside of 15 minutes the business district was as congested as any street in the vicinity of a carnival during the annual county fair. The county council of defense has devoted some thought to perfecting these outpourings so that powder monkeys appear promptly with red and blue fire as the crowd assembles.

An Irish major general writes to the London Times: Amid all the stipulations and demands which have been, and will be, made upon Germany—for the payment of indemnity, for compensation, and for retributive justice—there is one all important point that has been overlooked. There must be an historical record of our victory. This can only be accomplished by the march of a selected body of troops from the allied forces through Unter den Linden. Nothing short of this will make the Berliner believe that he has been beaten. There was no mauvaise honte about Bismarck when he signed the peace of 1870 at Versailles, and we do not need to feel the smallest compunction as to adopting the same course of procedure.

Don't say "comrade" to Joe Benz, White Sox pitcher, if you are not up on footwork, says a message from Chicago. A fellow pig iron juggler in the Illinois Steel Company plant tried it. "See, nothing can stop us, comrade," he gloated, showing Benz an account of a big radical meeting. "The more I thought about it, the madder I got," said Joe. "I walks over to him and says, 'I see you sang every song there but "The Star Spangled Banner." I've got a notion to make you sing it now.' Then I beaned him. I don't want any of those bolshevists pulling that comrade stuff on me, see?"

Homer L. Ferguson, president of the Shipbuilders' Association, says there is urgent need of an American merchant marine, but it will not come unless the people of the United States are made to understand the necessity of it. They know now, Mr. Ferguson said, that this country landed more than 2,000,000 American soldiers in Europe, but they ought to be informed that 70 per cent of these troops were carried in British vessels, 20 per cent in interned German vessels, and but 10 per cent in vessels built in this country

Four thousand socialists, who paraded the east side of New York last week shouting "down with militarism" and cheering for Lenine and Trotsky, with the red flag over all, made the mistake of turning into Fifth avenue, where the few soldiers and sailors on the street immediately took the situation in hand. Doughboys and officers, some of whom were on the street with ladies, tore off their coats and went to the aid of the sailors. New York's mayor has ordered the police to keep the red flag out of sight "during the war times."

Among those who marched down the street at Buzancy, (France), during the peace celebration there, was an odd figure—a fine young American in khaki, a brightly polished German helmet set firmly upon his head. He walked with determination, and when another soldier leaning from a window shouted, "Where are you going, Buddy?" he replied: "Where am I going? I'm going to No'th Cyarline. This yere guerre is finie."

The question of what effect the president's absence will have on the work of congress is being discussed in congressional circles. Many hold that the president could not approve of veto legislation while absent, where the signature of the president is required. Under the provisions of the constitution if bills are not acted upon by the chief executive within 10 days after their passage they automatically become executiv.

"They are coming—the flying flivvers!" says Frank H. Russell, general manager of the Burgess Airplane Company. Because of unlimited landing facilities, Mr. Burgess thinks seaplanes will hold the first place in popularity. He believes flivver types will be put on the market for $3,000, with larger and more luxurious ones up to $7,500. Mr. Russell also predicts the coming of heavy freight carrying air machines.

The Stars and Stripes, the newspaper of the American expeditionary force, has arranged for November 28 as the day upon which all the American troops shall write home to father. Special delivery arrangements are under way in order that "Father's Day" shall be as successful as "Mother's Day" May 12, last. It is hoped that the fathers will write to their sons on the same day.

Government financial needs for many years are almost certain to run above $4,000,000,000 annually, treasury experts estimate, and most of the money will be raised by taxation Consequently, students of government finances think the taxes imposed last year and paid in June probably will not be lightened materially in the advent of peace.

An English psychologist decides that aviators who failed—who began well but did not finally make good—were those who could not stand loneliness. They have pluck enough, and can stand danger in company with an instructor, but "solo" flying is too much for them.

It is the intention of the Creel bureau to continue publication of the official bulletin until June 30, next, because appropriations have been made for that length of time, says a Washington dispatch.

GERMANY'S NEEDS NOT SO DESPERATE AS TOLD

President of Iowa State College Tells of Personal Observations In Europe Recently.

Ames, Ia., Nov. 29.—That starvation wails from Germany and Austria are more propaganda than anything else is the opinion of President R. A. Pearson, of Iowa State College, who has just returned from service as a member of the United States Agricultural Commission to Europe.

"These people who cry that they are starving should have on hand the fruits of the 1918 harvest," continued Mr. Pearson. They would have had to rely on this mainly for the next 12 months' food supply if the war had continued. No doubt they are short on food, especially fats, and oils, but with the 1918 crop, they are not starving as they make out. Their desperate demands for food with immediate delivery seems to be in harmony with their sudden military breakdown which developed so fast when their ponderous, bloody, progress was reversed by the allies and the United States. They can't stand adversity."

In the countries of the allies, however, there is need for a large amount of assistance with food, livestock, fertilizer and farm machinery, President Pearson found. "America must go on saving food and conserving in many materials for the benefit of our allies," he says. "People in these allied countries have not starved nor ben in danger of starvation at any time, except for short periods at a few places which could not be suplied because of inadequate transportation facilities. But they have al lmade great sacrifices, both in quantity and variety of their food. The war bread of England is not nearly as good as our own has been. Nor is it good in France—except that credit must be given to the genius of French cooks."

All European countries have drawn on their own live stock resources so heavily that it will take quite a long time to get these back to normal. In England, while the number of dairy cows has remained almost at normal, production has decreased because of lack of feed. Best breeding stuff of all kinds in England has been preserved in good shape, President Pearson found, but prices are high. In France and Italy, however, the number of dairy cattle has been greatly reduced, due to the need for slaughtering for meat, but there is now more than the usual number of calves. These countries are anxious to secure American meat so these calves will not have to be slaughtered.

France has suffered severely through destruction of her sugar beet factories, and many thousands of sugar beet acres have been put out of use. Most of the factories are a tangled mass of ruins. President Pearson saw one such factory back of the American lines that was being rebuilt by German prisoners of war. Some of the French agricultural leaders hope that Germany, which has a surplus of beet sugar, will be compelled to donate 400,000 tons of sugar a year to France until its industry can be restored.

"England is in greatest need right now of concentrated feedstuff for live stock," says President Pearson. "In Italy the need is for fertilizers. Both of these needs exist in France. In all three there is a great labor shortage."

PREACHER WORKED IN FACTORY INCOGNITO

Waterloo, Ia., Nov. 29.—Rev C. E. Luce, pastor of St. Paul's Methodist church, who spent four weeks as a laborer in the plant of the Waterloo Gas-line Engine company, disguising his profession and working elbow to elbow with other men, says his experience has given him a new outlook upon the life of a working man.

"I went among factory men so that I might get tired as they do," said Rev Mr. Luce. "I walked back and forth to my work, so that I could know what they have to endure. I ate from a dinner pail while I sat on a bench so that I could realize what it meant to have a cold meal. I left home in the morning at 6:30 and returned at the same hour in the evening. After getting cleaned up and reading the paper I was ready to retire. I can see now that a man who has stood at a machine all day and turned out a few or many castings, being almost a part of the machine itself, seeks a change when released from his work. I do not wonder that he goes to the movies. I do not criticize him so much as the man who selects the films.

"I am in favor of an eight hour day, so that a man can have his eight hours of rest and recreation as well as his work. If it is efficiency we are after this shorter day would make him more efficient, but in return let the laborer be honest and give a full eight hours of cooperative service. Without this principle of service neither business nor labor is safe. In the past the numerically or physically strong have had the center of action. Is this to be the true form of life? No, not if the teachings of the Savior are to guide. Our demand is that the reconstruction of society, industry, state and church shall be around the will to serve."

GERMANS IN AMERICA WERE WELL ORGANIZED

Dubuque, Ia., Nov 29.—"Concrete evidence of the magnitude of Germany's pre-war attempts to create the nucleus of a revolutionary and bolshevist movement in the United States was brought to my attention during the last few weeks while my office was issuing permits to enemy aliens to enter barred zones," declared United States Marshal E. R. Moore in an interview yesterday.

"Since my part in the granting of permits to these aliens gave me an opportunity to question them relative to their purposes in coming to America I have become thoroughly convinced of the well directed purpose of the German government in sending these men here. Previous to that time I was reluctant about placing much credence in the statements often made that Germany has in the United States an army of 500,000 trained reservists. Investigation of cases in Dubuque has fully developed the opinion in my mind that such is the case. If the proportion which exists in this city holds in other communities, and I have reason to believe that it does.

"One odd feature of the situation here is the fact that virtually none of the men have dependents, a singular fact when considered it is ordinarily the practice of citizens of other nations dissatisfied with conditions at home to come to America with their families."

The plans of Germany in the event of defeat were defeated, the Prussian should be believed, through the manner in which the United States government handled the problem from the start, he said, so as to prevent that the effort to spread bolshevism and anarchy will succeed here.

"FLU" EPIDEMIC IS ON THE INCREASE

Large Number of New Cases at Ida Grove—Two Deaths Tuesday Morning.

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 28.—Two deaths from influenza occurred here this morning, and there has been a large number of new cases reported during the last 24 hours.

The deaths this morning were I. L. Eels, brother of H. A. Eels, of Sioux City, who died at 2:30, after a short illness. The other death was that of C. M. Shipp, pioneer printer in the Pioneer office.

The epidemic has hit the Pioneer office so hard that it is temporarily closed. The Conn hospital has been taken over and will be used as an influenza hospital until the abatement of the epidemic.

CORRECTIONVILLE BOY MEETS CHUM IN FRANCE

Cherokee, Ia., Nov. 28.— In a letter home Sergt. Victor Conklin, of Correctionville, describes a chance meeting between himself and Van Feltus, another Correctionville boy, on a road somewhere in France.

Conklin was driving a big truck along a narrow road, and was just turning around. As the truck was squarely across the road a motorcycle came along and was forced to stop until the truck was out of the way. The glances of the driver and the rider met, and their faces lit up with mutual recognition.

Neither of the boys had seen anyone in France they knew, and did not know the other was anywhere within hundreds of miles of himself. The boys had been chums in school and theirs was a true reunion.

RENOUNCED CITIZENSHIP BUT STILL VOTED

Cherokee, Ia., Nov. 28.—Eric Erickson, a farmer of this county, was arraigned in the district court here on a charge of illegal voting, and pleaded guilty, thereby acknowledging himself not a citizen of this country. The circumstances are rather mixed, but Mr. Erickson lays most of his trouble to the kaiser.

Three years ago he went to Sweden to visit and when he started home, the United States having entered the war, he was told that if the boat on which he sailed was captured by the Germans he would be interned as a prisoner of war. On account of this, it is alleged, Mr. Erickson renounced his American citizenship and became a subject of Sweden in order to escape all difficulties with German war vessels.

Then, at the last election, he cast his ballot, and a complaint was entered, with the result that he paid a fine of $100.

DISLOYALIST IS GIVEN HEAVY PENALTY

Council Bluffs, Ia., Nov. 28.—Judge Martin J. Wade in United States court here gave L. W. Boehner, convicted capitalist, of Malvern, on an indictment containing three counts on charges of disloyalty and charging that the women of the Red Cross constitute a harem for the military officers, the most severe scoring any individual ever received in a court in this section. Judge Wade overruled a motion for a new trial and sentenced Boehner to a term of nine years in the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth and to pay a fine of $5,000.

Notice of an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals was made by Boehner's attorneys and his bond was fixed at $12,000.

CHEROKEE SOLDIER CAPTURED 12 HUNS

Cherokee, Ia., Nov. 28.—In a letter to a friend in Cleghorn, Private Roy D. Jones, of the 168th infantry, tells how he captured 12 German prisoners single handed. With five others he had rushed a machine gun nest, silencing it, but all the other men were wounded. Jones went on alone and noticed a German looking out of a building. He shot twice, but missed. "Then I made a run for the place where he was, stuck my bayonet around the corner and he said kamerad and I told him to come out, and he and 11 more came out to me.

"Now, I was all alone, and if those Huns were scared worse than I was they would not have lived very long."

GUILTY OF MURDERING PARAMOUR'S HUSBAND

Dubuque, Ia., Nov. 28.—Nicholas Christ was found guilty of murder in the second degree at his trial for slaying George Parlos on September 30. The jury was out four hours and its verdict carries a sentence of from 10 years to life imprisonment. The trouble leading to the killing occurred over the wife of the dead man who was in Christ's employment at the time of the shooting.

TUNNEL CHANNEL IS FRENCH PLAN

After the War Projects Include Ambitious Engineering Schemes—Odessa-Bordeaux Rail Route.

By Associated Press.

Paris, Nov. 28.—Jules Celes, who was recently appointed under secretary of public works and transport, says in an interview with L' Information that special attention is being given by his department to the work of reaching an understanding with the American government relative to the immense amount of work done in France by the American army and navy. M. Celes says that extensive plans are being formed for economic offensive, by which French activities after the war will be commensurate with those exerted by the nation during the struggle.

"Study is being given to a plan for a great international railway route from Bordeaux to Odessa," he says. "There is also a committee studying the project of constructing a tunnel under the English channel and another through the Vosges mountains west of Alsace."

HOME RULE PLAN STARTED IN INDIA

From the Two Americas.

The formal proposal submitted in the British parliament for a new constitution for India, that will change it from a "crown possession" at once to a partly-representative nation and give progressive democratization till it will become a fully self governing nation in the empire, is one of the most revolutionary happenings in the history of national politics. It is a proof, shown in a big way, of the genuineness of the conversion of civilization under war's discipline, from autocracy to responsive government, not only for ourselves but for others. By this official proposition to begin the nationalization of India, England gives self government not to a dependent nation of colonized Englishmen, as in the "self governing dominions," but to a mixture of native Asiatic peoples in a dependency.

The plan for part-representative government has been very carefully worked out. The central government of all India will still be responsible to the imperial parliament, but with native Indian representation in the executive councils, so that the native public opinion will always have its say in recommendation of measures. The fuller development of Indian democracy is to be encouraged in the local self government of the provinces of India.

Here, by ingenious provisions for meeting the problems presented by the separation of th enatives themselves into groups by religion or caste; the Indians are to be given the opportunity to learn by practice the way to conduct a government of their own, with the view of periodical changes in the system in the direction of their more complete handling of it.

By United Press.

London, Nov. 29.—"Nothing in world, no arguments, however [illegible] no appeals, however seductive lead you to abandon the naval macy on which the life of our depends, declared Winston Churchill minister of munitions and former lord of the admiralty in a speech

"For the third time in history freedom of the world against tary tyrant has been preserved British navy—against Philip of Spain, against Napoleon and Kaiser Wilhelm. Without it we should we have been lost, but world would have been cast back centuries.

"I am a hopeful and sincere advocate of the league of nations. I everything in my power to make an instrument a practical reality. But the league of nations no substitute for the supremacy the British fleet.

Long in Control.

"From the battle of Trafalgar end of the 19th century—nearly years—we were absolutely supreme. All other nations together not have faced us. Did we abuse power? Did we misapply this mous advantage? On the contrary were the only nation whose ports opento the whole world; whose kets were unrestricted by any whose coastwise trade was not a national monopoly.

"Our British way of doing things nowhere more admired than in the nations we have overthrown, the other nations of the world are tent to allow us to keep our supacy of the seas without demur, be becuse we hold it as a trust.

"Let us preserve our great renown as the first of free and nations, as the birthplace of ments, as the pioneer of popular ernment and as the unfailing fount of enlightened thought and humanitarian sentiment.

"That does not mean we should up the fruits of victory. Praise the whole German nation was guilty of the crime of an aggressive war ducted by brutal and bestial men is no use their pretending that late government is solely to blame. They were all in it and must all pay for it. Particular individuals for whom definite breaches of the law war on land and sea can be proved who can be proven to have been prisoners with cruelty, should be brought to trial and punished as criminals, however lightly placed.

"Alsace-Lorraine must be restored France. Poland must be a restituted nation, with access to the sea and Germany must give up her own provinces. None of the German colonies will ever be restored to Germany and none of the conquered parts of Turkey will ever be restored to them.

Complete Restoration.

"Restoration must be made by Germany to the utmost of the damage has done. I cordially sympathize with those who say: 'Make them pay for the expenses of the war.' If the allies do not, claimed this, it is for one reason only: It is not physically possible for them to do so. Reparation for damage done will soon run into the thousands of millions."

FORTY-NINE BELGIAN PRIESTS HUN VICTIMS

Tale of Torture Is Harrowing — German Governor Not a Part of American Help

By Associated Press

Malines, Belgium, Nov. 28.—Forty-nine Belgian priests were tortured and put to death by the Germans during the occupation, Cardinal Mercier, the primate of Belgium declared in an interview yesterday. He added that 1,500 men were removed from this diocese to Germany, where they were forced to work. Other crimes committed by the Germans, the cardinal said, were too long and too terrible to relate briefly.

The cardinal said that in the early stages of unrestricted German submarine warfare the Spanish minister to Belgium asked the German governor general in Brussels to intervene with Berlin to limit submarine attacks to the belligerents, saying:

"The Americans are exasperated and are on the verge of joining the allies, which will mean the defeat of the central empires."

"We have no fear whatever of the Americans, who will never be able to help the allies," the governor general replied haughtily. The cardinal said: "An army cannot be raised in a few months. Three years will be necessary for them, and France and her modest ally, the British, will be crushed long before that."

SETTLE WAR DEBT AUSTRIA ASSERTS

Food and Coal Will Stabilize Nation, Financier Declares —Little Real Bolshevism.

By Associated Press

Vienna Sunday Nov. 24.—"Provided the allies extend immediate help the Austrian republic will be able to arise from the position it is in at present," said Joseph Redlich former minister of ... in the correspondent today. "We hope their is no revengeful desire on the part of the allies to see us remain in poverty," he continued. "If we are helped, we will be able to help ourselves. Our people are farmers and men of the industrial classes, all willing to work and not inclined to bolshevism. Our financial position looks like bankruptcy on paper but we will be able to pay our war debts.

"If we can get food we will be able to keep order. If we can get coal we will begin working. If we can get cotton, metals and raw materials production will go on. We will be also quiet politically which is desired by America and the allies. Whether we be tied up to the German federation or not is an unsettled question, even among ourselves. It is my opinion that we must form a federation with the broken parts of the former empire for commercial purposes."

Will Seek Loans

Ludwig Von Neupath, director of the Austrian credit bank, said today while discussing the situation:

"The Austrian republic must first be given a loan to be used for the purpose of sending food and coal into the country to prevent famine and disorder. Then it must obtain another loan of $50,000,000 to buy a six months' stock of cotton, wool and copper.

"Diplomatic pressure should be brought to bear against the Czechs who are attempting to prevent the arrival of coal and metals from Galicia and other points. The peace conference also should apportion the debts of the former Austrian empire equitably among the Czechs, Hungarians, Austrians and Jugo Slavs. This debt now totals 56,000,000,000 kroners, 32,000,000,000 of which is in paper money which is circulating in all parts of the country. If the Austrian republic is able to shoulder this war debt she is bound to be bankrupt."

British Transport System to Return Our Soldiers Home

By Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 29.—A statement made here from authoritative sources regarding the part British ships have played in the transporting to Europe of the American army disclosed that England may be compelled soon to use all of her available transports for the return to their homes of troops of the British empire.

There are British troops to be returned from Mesopotamia, Italy and France to England, and there are Australian, Indian, African, Canadian and other colonial forces to be returned from France. Also there are in England and France thousands of women and children, families of the colonial troops who have married there, who will require transportation. So great will be the demand on British vessels for this service, it was said that the use of the ships for American overseas forces may not be possible to any great extent for some time to come.

Discussing what England has done toward moving American troops abroad, it was authoritatively stated here today that British vessels carried 1,086,417 American troops to England and France during the war, from the embarkation ports of Newport News, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Portland (Me.), and Montreal and Quebec. Two hundred engineers were the first to sail on a British vessel, departing May 8, 1917, followed a few days later by General Pershing and staff.

These voyages, 563 in number and involving 180 British ships, terminated on September 31, 1918. The record was made by the Olympic, which transported 45,030 American troops. Last July, when 288,569 were carried, was the peak month. Of the more than 1,000,000 troops carried fewer than 500 were lost through war mishaps.

Cargo of the Peace Ship Is Now Selected

Washington, D. C., Nov. 28.—According to the plan now President Wilson will sail for France on the former German liner George Washington about December 5.

These are expected to include Secretaries Lansing and Baker and ex-Ambassador Henry White.

George Creel will accompany the party. There also will be a number of unofficial guests aboard.

APRIL THE DATE OF FIFTH LOAN

Announcement of the Issuance of Certificates Forecasts Last Money to Reconstruct.

By Associated Press.

Washington, Nov. 28.—In preparation for the fifth war loan, the treasury announced today the issuance of $600,000,000 or more of certificates of indebtedness, payable May 6, 1919, and paying 4¼ per cent interest.

The subscription period will run from December 5 to December 10. The maturity date of the issue indicates that the fifth loan will be floated in April.

The treasury will issue blocks of these certificates bi-weekly amounting to not less than $500,000,000 nor more than $750,000,000 for an indefinite time, Secretary McAdoo explained in a letter sent today to every bank and trust company. He appealed for the bank's support of the government's future financial program.

Secretary's Letter.

Outlining this program the secretary said:

"The expenditures of the government, excluding transactions in the principal of the public debt, during the fiscal year (beginning July 1, 1918, to and including November 23, 1918,) amounted to $8,213,070,000. Such expenditures during the month of November to November 23 amounted to $1,577,148,000, or at the rate of nearly $2,000,000,000 for the month.

"The proceeds of the Fourth Liberty Loan in excess of the amount of treasury certificates issued in anticipation of that loan have been exhausted, and the remaining installment payments to be made on subscriptions to the Fourth Liberty Loan will but little more than cover the treasury certificates of indebtedness issued in anticipation of that loan and as yet unpaid.

Evidently some time must pass before the readjustment from a war to a peace basis can reflect itself in material remuneration of the daily cash outgo from the treasury. Indeed the wise policy of prompt liquidation of contracts might actually result for a time in the acceleration of demands upon the treasury while strengthening and making more liquid the banking position of the country.

Will Not Borrow.

"Uncertainties with respect to pending revenue legislation makes it impracticable and inexpedient to borrow further at this time in anticipation of taxes. In this period of readjustment it would be difficult to set in motion any plan for the continuous sale of government bonds, and it seems that the wise policy will be to plan for one more great popular campaign in the spring for the sale of bonds, which should be of short maturities, and meanwhile to provide for the government's necessities by the issue of treasury certificates at fortnightly intervals."

Each bank, Mr. McAdoo explained, will be expected to subscribe roughly 2¼ per cent of the bank's gross resources every two weeks, or 5 per cent monthly, in support of the government financial program.

BOYS GOT PRIZED PILLOWS

Bride's Idea That of All True Citizens—Nothing Could Be Too Good for the Soldiers.

They were pillows like your mother's and mine. The little bride had made them and stuffed them to comfortable popping with real goose feathers.

She had raised the geese from fluffy goslings and had picked them. No penitentiary striped ticking was used, but a material of delicate blue, sprinkled with pink rosebuds. Oh, but these pillows were the pride of the home-loving heart of the little bride, whose young husband is "over there." Yet she sent the six pillows last week to the sick soldiers at Fort Harrison.

"If Jim comes back we can buy new pillows," she said—"that is if we have the money. If we haven't we can do without.

"Oh, but those geese were a trouble, but when I think of a soldier's head resting on those pillows, I'm convinced that the last pesky gosling has paid for its raising."—Indianapolis News.

SPANISH INFLUENZA

Do Not Fear When Fighting a German or a Germ!

By DR. M. COOK.

The cool fighter always wins and so there is no need to become panic-stricken. Avoid fear and crowds. Exercise in the fresh air and practice the three C's: A Clean Mouth, a Clean Skin and Clean Bowels. To carry off the poisons that accumulate within the body and to ward off an attack of the influenza bacillus, take a good liver regulator to move the bowels. Such a one is made up of May-apple, leaves of aloe, root of jalap, and is to be had at any drug store, and called "Pleasant Purgative Pellets."

If a bad cold develops, go to bed, wrap up well, drink freely of hot lemonade and take a hot mustard foot-bath. Have the bedroom warm but well ventilated. Obtain at the nearest drug store "Anuric Tablets" to flush the kidneys and control the pains and aches. Take an "Anuric" tablet every two hours, together with copious drinks of lemonade. If a true case of influenza, the food should be simple, such as broths, milk, buttermilk and ice-cream; but it is important that food be given regularly in order to keep up patient's strength and vitality. After the acute attack has passed, which is generally from three to seven days, the system should be built up by the use of a good iron tonic, such as "Irontic" tablets, to be obtained at some drug stores, or that well known blood-maker and herbal tonic made from roots and barks of forest trees—sold everywhere as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

/HAT WOMEN ARE DOING FOR SOLDIERS IN FRANCE

[ ]ht in the Ranks of the Red Cross Against Pain, Disease and Death.

[ ]ey have known very well the risks were taking—the two thousand more women who have gone to e for varied services under the ican Red Cross, and the more nine thousand nurses whom the ican Red Cross has assigned to n duty under the United States and Navy Nurse Corps.

y went under orders, as soldiers prepared for any emegencies, as rs do; they assumed many ge and unforeseen tasks, as soldo. Literally, they went as rs, against pain, disease and mobile surgical unit" of nurses—words don't mean very much, aps, the first time we hear them. see such an unit follow an army o an advanced post; see how the s work with steady hands beside urgeons as the stretchers with the wounded are brought in See ands of them in evacuation hos-s, base hospitals, convalescent tals, tuberculosis hospitals; some em in French military hospitals e sometimes our men are sent; them with their specialized skill nd surgery, or fracture work, or hiatry;—all these women who head and hand cool and steady, n the ambulances unload great sts of wounded. Then we say the words "Our Nurses," as we say "Our Soldiers," "Our Sailors," "Our Marines."

On the night of March 25th, when the Germans were fast advancing, and already within six kilometers of Ancel, an outpost of Compiegne, two American doctors remained, who under order of the French government, had sent the patients and personnel of their hospital farther back the night before. The artillery was deafening, but the American Ambulance sections kept bringing their wounded to Ancel. These doctors said that as long as the American boys brought them wounded they would operate. Two nurses volunteered from Compiegne, and so in the deserted chateau the two surgeons, the two nurses and the ten drivers worked calmly on, while the buzz of aeroplanes shook the air, and the blasting guns shook the earth.

Through three takings of Belgrade, first when the city was taken by the Austrians, again when it was retaken by the Serbians, and still again when it was taken back by the Germans and Austrians together, an American Red Cross nurse, Mary Gladwin, worked in the operating room. In that first capture, when nine thousand wounded crowded the wards and halls and yard of the thousand-bed-hospital and doctor and nurse worked together for day and night without stopping, giving to each operation an average of six minutes, and employing emergencies inspired by the desperate need of the moment, they did not know that the city had been taken until all the stretchers brought Austrian wounded, and Austrian doctors came to their relief.

Several hundred women are working over there in the American Red Cross canteens. There are about two hundred of these canteens along the French and American lines of communication, and the women are working under great pressure, feeding thousands of soldiers. The Red Cross is also establishing canteens by military request at a number of Aviation Camps. American women conduct these stations, comprising canteen and club and reading room. Everyone of these canteens has something of the genius of home about it; and it is because of this, no less than the facilities for cleanliness and rest and refreshment, that the French government has given the responsibility for maintaining canteens for both armies to the hands of the American Red Cross.

In large numbers women are going abroad as hospital hut workers, also, and as social workers for trained service among the refugees and the repatriated. At each base hospital the Red Cross is equipping, as fast as they can be built, recreation huts for convalescent soldiers.

Clerical workers have steadily increased in number for the administrative offices. From that original group of eighteen, which as the first American Red Cross Commission to France sailed about June 1st, 1917, the organization has grown to a working force of more than 5,000 men and women.

EASING THE CARES OF SOLDIERS' FAMILIES

The ten thousand Home Service Sections of the American Red Cross, in their work of looking after the families of the enlisted men, are doing wonders for the morale of the army. Our fighters are not men who are going to worry about themselves, but if they do not get cheerful letters from home, or if anything goes wrong there, they are going to worry, and that delicate thing the army men call morale is going to be disturbed. It is to safeguard against this and also to prevent needless suffering and to promote that spirit of neighborliness and kindly aid that binds each community into an organic whole that the Home Service was organized.

Over 50,000 workers are serving on these ten thousand committees, which reach into every corner of the country, however remote. Not a town or village or crossroads that is not within reach of the Red Cross; not a wife or child or mother of a man in service who cannot claim the ready aid of the Red Cross workers.

More than 300,000 families of American soldiers and sailors have been relieved of money troubles, legal difficulties and worries of all sorts by the protecting arm of the Red Cross. If the allowances of allotments under the War Risk Insurance law do not come the matter is at once referred to Red Cross Headquarters, taken up with the proper government bureau and promptly straightened out. If, through the delay, the family finds itself in need of money sums are advanced to tide it over until the allotment arrives. During July over sixty thousand inquiries of this kind were received, and more than a third of these were taken clear through to headquarters before they could be straightened out.

FOR ITALY'S BABIES.

Motherhood in Italy just now is not the joy that it might be, for the poor women are at their wits ends to clothe the children already in the family, not to mention the preparation for the little newcomers. Perhaps the most appreciated gifts of the American Red Cross at this time are the layettes which are being given to the mothers of Italy. Each layette consists of twenty-four pieces and includes four bright colored swathing bands, so dear to the heart of the Italian woman. Twenty layettes a week are needed at Chioggia alone.

AMERICANS FIGHT GERMS IN ITALY

Tuberculosis Experts Sent by Red Cross Will Use Latest Methods.

Included in the unit of medical and lay workers which the American Red Cross has sent to Italy are a number of the leading anti-tuberculosis workers of the country, sponsored by the National Tuberculosis Association. Dr. William Charles White, who heads the unit, is medical director of the Tuberculosis League of Pittsburgh, and Dr. Robert H. Bishop, the assistant director, is secretary of the Anti-Tuberculosis League of Cleveland as well as health commissioner of that city. Dr. John H. Lowman of Cleveland, a former president of the National Association, is another prominent member of the unit. Others are Dr. Robert G. Patterson, secretary of the Ohio Tuberculosis Association; Seymour H. Stone, until recently secretary of the Massachusetts Anti-Tuberculosis League; Dr. Gertrude Sturgis, secretary of the New York City Association of Tuberculosis Clinics, and N. A. Nelson, superintendent of the Cincinnati Anti-Tuberculosis League.

These men and women, at the request of the Italian government, will co-operate with that country in applying the latest approved American methods for combating the spread of tuberculosis. Some of them will be charged with the establishment of clinics where people of all ages may be examined and treated; others will devote their attention particularly to preventing tuberculosis among children, and a third group will develop health publicity and education.

It is to the credit of the anti-tuberculosis campaign in America that it has produced specialists of such international standing that Italy wishes to call them into her service temporarily. But the campaign will be continued unremittingly here at home. Its support during the ensuing year will be derived not as heretofore from the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals, but by a special appropriation made by the Red Cross to the National Tuberculosis Association. Tuberculosis workers on their side will line up with the Red Cross in its Christmas Roll Call for universal membership.

CONTEST FOR THE JUNIORS.

A special feature during the Red Cross Christmas Roll Call will be a Junior Red Cross Four-Minute Men Contest on "Why You Should Join the Red Cross." The contest will be similar to those previously conducted by the Division of Four Minute Men of the Committee on Public Information It will be held on Friday, December 20th, in all of the School Auxiliaries, and friends and parents of the pupils will be urged to attend.

CANTEENS SERVING U. S. TROOPS IN ITALY

The American Red Cross canteens, which serve at railroad stations, important points on highroads, and in towns and villages throughout the Italian zone of war, are now serving American troops. These canteens have been operating during the past six months for the benefit of the Italian army and its allies, greeting the soldiers in their passage from one point to another with coffee and American crackers and jam. But it is only recently that the khaki-clad fighters from across the sea have been added to the number of those served at the Red Cross rest stations.

Numerous bowling greens have been established by the American Red Cross in the tuberculosis barracks of Paris.

BOYS AWAIT BULLETIN FOR NEWS FROM HOME

American soldiers in camps and hospitals in Great Britain are now able to keep in touch with affairs at home through the medium of a daily bulletin service which has been established by the American Red Cross.

Army officers say the service fills a long-felt want, providing the men with sporting and home news they cannot find in the English newspapers.

The arrival of the bulletin is now one of the big daily events. In this connection a Red Cross worker in England sends the following message to National Headquarters in Washington:

"After talking with the boys about the daily news service I have been told to notify you that if the bulletin is discontinued you will be court-martialed and shot."

Peculiar Articles of Commerce.

Dried lizards are said to be an article of merchandise regularly imported into this country. They come from China, to supply a demand by Chinese residents in the United States. They are supposed to possess much medicinal virtue when ground to powder and mixed with certain other curative substances. The Chinese used dried toads for a tonic, salted scorpions for smallpox and fossil crabs as an antidote for poison.

Nuts and Sirup in Candy.

It is a fact of common knowledge that nuts are very high in food value, those used principally in manufacturing confectionery being almonds, filberts, pecans, peanuts and walnuts, averaging approximately 1,500 calories per pound. Corn sirup, erroneously called glucose, used largely in manufacturing gum drops, hard candies and taffies, is a pure, wholesome, transparent, heavy sirup, manufactured, as the name indicates, from corn.

American Red Cross Aids With Supplies and Comforts in the Equipment of Valiant Army.

IT is particularly interesting to Americans to know the tremendous work which the American Red Cross has done toward relieving distress in Belgium. Among the many things done for King Albert's gallant little army by the Red Cross the following are a few:

It established a dining room and reading and writing room at the warehouses in Le Havre.

It gave a plate and a bowl to 6,000 munition workers in ——— to use at their meals.

It fitted up recreation rooms for workers at munition plants.

It installed a co-operative restaurant for the military personnel of the Maritime Agency at Le Havre.

It installed shower baths and a barber shop for the army garrisons in Le Havre.

It established a dormitory for 200 men at the Home for Permissionaires at Calais.

It established a canteen and library at Calais.

It established another canteen for the personnel of sanitary trains.

It gave material and games for a canteen for the personnel of the naval base at ———.

It gave the same for a canteen for the personnel of Belgian seaplane units.

It equipped a mess for the personnel of the unit at Calais.

It gave tents, canteens, reading rooms and shower baths for the personnel of the Bourbough bakery.

It organized dining rooms for searchlight companies and artillery batteries having fixed cantonments, and installed shower baths in them.

It distributed 60,000 enameled plates and cups for soldiers in the trenches.

It gave prizes for organized athletic tournaments.

It sent presents to each man decorated for bravery. These presents are usually razors, pipes, fountain pens and such. Up to now this work has only applied to the infantry.

The Red Cross provided the apparatus and films for cinema shows. Eight thousand soldiers see them every day.

It supplied books for all soldiers.

It installed a recreation and writing room at the large canteen at La Panne.

It presented to every infantry and cavalry regimental surgeon a medical traveling case, holding a set of medical instruments for field service.

This work required an appropriation of approximately 1,250,000 francs.

Straight from the front is this comment of a Belgian colonel. It was made recently while he was sitting in his dugout talking of the work of a canteen for which the American Red Cross had just provided quarters on very short notice.

"One live demonstration like this is better than a year of talk."

American Red Cross has erected a barracks at Dijon, France, to serve as a day nursery for the children of the French women who work in the United States Army camouflage factory.

THEIR ONLY CHANCE

Squaw Recognized Limitations of "Iron Horse."

At Least Her Advice to Old Chief Was Good, and Probably in the End Runaway Did "Get Out of Breath."

Funny as an Indian?

Sounds queer, but those who heard Dr. Charles Eastman, a real Sioux, speak at a recent dinner of fellow alumni of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity, know that an Indian has a true sense of humor.

Immaculate in a dress suit, Doctor Eastman spoke slowly and with evident relish of his own felicitous choice of words. Listening brothers in the bond of the fraternity almost imagined they were braves themselves and were seated around a council fire while the big chief said his say.

Doctor Eastman urged America's soldiers to "rush" the Huns in the trenches and make "buffaloes" of them. The Germans will get out of wind after a while, he said, and told the following story in illustration of the point:

Out on a reservation in the far West a chief and his squaw decided to buy an automobile. So they left the village and went to town, where there was an agency of a certain popular make of automobile.

"Old woman," the chief said to his wife, "let us buy one of the iron horses."

"We are old," reminded his squaw, "and the iron horse is dangerous. See the young bucks—many of them lose their lives riding the iron horses."

"Old woman," replied the chief, "we are old and must die soon. Let us buy an iron horse, then we can die together."

They went to the agency and were met by a smiling agent.

"I would buy an iron horse," said the old chief, "is it easy to ride?"

The salesman assured the chief that anyone on earth could run one. "It is just as simple as this," he said, explaining what few levers there were to operate

"Get in with me now," said the salesman, "and I will take you around and show you."

"I will get in the front seat," declared the chief.

"I will get in the back seat," said his old woman. "What you don't see, I will see."

Accordingly the party started. Soon the chief was persuaded to take the wheel. Within an hour the purchaser was persuaded that riding an iron horse was not so difficult, after all.

Soon the agent had the money and the chief had the automobile.

"Now we will return to the village," declared the chief, as he turned the wheel and headed across the prairie. It was easy going. The chief clung to the wheel and the car performed admirably until they came within sight of the Indian village.

When the village saw the old chief and his squaw riding across the landscape it went out to meet them en masse.

Braves jumped on their horses and rode forth whooping. Dogs barked a welcome.

The old chief got rattled.

Describing a great sweep, the Ladybug bore down on the chief's tepee.

"Stop it, stop it!" screamed the squaw.

"How, how?" asked the chief, clutching the steering gear.

"Turn, turn!" yelled his old woman.

The chief turned, and they missed the edge of the tepee by an inch.

Around in a great circle the car continued, with the entire village following after. "Whoo-ee!" howled the braves. "Bow-wow!" went the dogs. The children screamed, the crows cawed, all nature made a noise, but the auto chugged on.

Again the car came around in a circle, headed square for the wigwam.

"What shall I do?" asked the chief, looking back at his old woman.

"Hold to the reins! Hold to the reins!" screamed the squaw. "It will get out of breath soon!"

Lightning Uncovered Crown.

Of stories collected by Mr. Shirley in connection with the present war, says the London News, none is more singular than one having reference to the emancipation of Poland.

When the Prussians took possession of Cracow in 1794, the Polish kingdom ceased to exist. The king of Prussia coveted the traditional diadem of Poland's kings for his own adornment. It had, however, disappeared mysteriously and the Prussian king was balked of his wish.

In January, 1914, seven months before the world war broke out, a severe thunderstorm broke over Cracow and a stately elm close to the city was shattered by lightning. Its fall brought to light a secret treasure which had lain buried at its roots for 123 years, the longlost crown of Poland. Some of its jewels were loose, and fell to the ground as it was picked up, but none was missing.

Thoughtful Willie.

Freddie watched mother set the alarm clock ahead one hour so as to bring it to "summer time." On Monday the family discovered that they had been awakened one hour earlier than was necessary. Finally Freddie said: "Well, mother, don't we have to set the clock an hour ahead every night? I fixed it last night to save you the trouble."

30-POUND BILLY

By HELEN TRACY.

right, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

lla had been weighing babies all ay. Her muscles ached with lift- the heavy tots and steadying the le ones. Her voice was husky overuse, cajoling, comforting, ing.

The next one shall be the last for y," she stated just as Billy toddled

Well, little man." Nella exclaimed, ng him, "what is your name?"

Yiyi tum dum," babbled Billy.

"He can't speak yet, mam. Billy's v two," explained the girl, watch- Nella closely, as she sought an even ance. "How much does he weigh, an?"

"Exactly thirty pounds to an ounce. shall have to nickname him "Thir- 'ound Billy," won't we, sir?"

lly displayed a row of pearly teeth; large blue eyes wrinkled with mer- nt; he gave a joyous squeal, and out eager hands to Nella.

Oh, you darling," she cried, clasp- him tightly in her arms. "Is he ur brother?" to the girl.

No, he don't belong to us. His 's dead and his pa travels. He just rds with us."

lla left Billy in the girl's care hastened back to her desk. For a time she was busy with statistics, ing average weights, the greatest the smallest. The sun was low n she bade her companions-in-labor good night, and hastened down the et towards home.

At the corner crossing she hesitated, the clamor of bells warning her that fire engines were approaching. A nd later she gazed in horror at a toddling figure that was wander- aimlessly into the middle of the et. Somehow in spite of her half- of the very dirty infant, she rec- zed the baby at once.

Billy " she screamed, waving to the ld. "Come here—come!"

She stopped after a while, out of breath. Stimulated by the frightful perience she had passed through, she ermined to follow the matter up.

"When ma wants to write to Mr. No- e she uses 'Rochester—General De- ery' for an address; that's all. Some- nes he's there and sometimes he n't," the girl admitted reluctantly.

"Very well Take Billy home now and do clean him up. Good-by, Thir- -Pound Billy."

Nella wrote to Billy's father. "He'll y it's none of my business," she said to her mother, "but I've fallen in love with his son and can't see him neg- lected."

A week passed, and when the girl d almost forgotten the Billy episode blue-coated individual left a telegram the door. "I'm in for it now," Nella roaned, reading the message. "Billy's ther is calling tonight. He will prob- bly pitch into me with all kinds of maledictions. But I don't care! I'll face him, no matter what he is like."

In the evening he came—a big, strap- ping young man, full of life and good cheer, his large blue eyes twinkling just as Thirty Pound Billy's did, yet with a wistfulness in them that wrung Nella's heart. "I wish you'd help me," he came to the point at once. "I'm frantic about the boy. My parents are dead and the wife's—she died at his birth—are across the continent. There's no one to leave Billy with. I've tried him in three boarding houses already. But the people take him in because they need the money, not be- cause they need him. Perhaps you won't believe me, Miss French, but I worry more over that tike than I do over anything else."

Nella's mother offered a solution. "Let me have him. I'm alone all day, with Nella off at the settlement house. I'd love to have him here."

So it was settled. Thirty-Pound Billy was installed at his new home, where he was cared for and loved, and where Billy's father spent many hours with his son—and Nella.

The doctor had weighed the baby. He placed it in big Tom's arms, who laid it tenderly beside the waiting Nella. "The little lady weighs eight pounds, sweetheart," he whispered, kissing the white lips lovingly.

"My, but she's got to gain some be- fore she can catch up with our Thirty- Pound Billy!"

"Thirty pounds! Nearly sixty now —the buster."

"I like to think of him as the little two-year-old baby. I owe so much to him," Nella mused.

"So do I" Tom gripped Nella tight. "All I have that makes life worth liv- ing I won through him and his thirty pounds."

HOW MRS. BOYD AVOIDED AN OPERATION

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

Sometimes there are serious conditions where a hospital operation is the only alternative, but on the other hand so many women have been cured by this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after doctors have said that an operation was necessary—every woman who wants to avoid an operation should give it a fair trial before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

If complications exist, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice. The result of many years experience is at your service.

TAKES IDEA FROM AMERICA

France Plans Establishment of Public Libraries Modeled on System of the United States.

"The public library idea was a new one to the French people," says World's Work. "They have seen it in operation and leaders of French thought believe it is something France needs. A committee, with the president of the French republic as its chairman, has been created to work out plans for the establishment in France of a system of public libraries modeled on American lines.

Plans are maturing for the establishment in France, after the fighting is over, of an enormous system of schools and universities for the better education of our soldiers during the period of demobilization. It will take as long to get our men back as it has taken to get them over—longer, probably, because there will be no pressing need for haste. Talleyrand said: 'You can make a soldier out of a civilian, but you cannot make a civilian out of a military man.' Our government is going to try to do what Talleyrand said was impossible. Our men have got to be educated for their return as individual units to civil life and not as a military mass. The library war service is tending more and more definitely toward this educational objective."

Woman's Work.

Well, I've got more respect for my wife than I ever had before in all my life. How in the world a woman will live a lifetime with a man and wash dishes three times a day without rebelling I don't know. I never knew what a slave's task washing dishes was until I got to France and had to wash my own mess kit.—Soldier writing to the Stars and Stripes.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

(CHAPTER TWENTY -Continued.)

"If you die, it'll be a pretty little case of suicide. All you've got to do, old chap, is to keep quiet. And the beauty of my little contrivance is that it will give you a foretaste of the few nights that will precede your last hour, when they cut off your head. From this moment forward you are alone with your conscience, face to face with what you perhaps call your soul, without anything to disturb your silent soliloquy. It's nice and thoughtful of me, isn't it? . . .

"Well, I'll leave you. And remember: not a movement, not a sigh, not a wink, not a throb of the heart! And, above all, no larks! If you start larking, you're in the soup. Meditate: that's the best thing you can do. Meditate and wait. Good-bye, for the present!"

And Don Luis, satisfied with his homily, went off, muttering:

"That's all right. I won't go so far as Eugene Sue, who says that criminals should have their eyes put out. But, all the same, a little corporal punishment, nicely seasoned with fear, is right and proper and good for the health and morals."

Don Luis walked away and, taking the brick path round the ruins, turned down a little road, which ran along the outer wall to a clump of fir trees, where he had brought Florence for shelter.

She was waiting for him, still aching from the horrible suffering which she had endured, but already in full possession of her pluck, mistress of herself, and apparently rid of all anxiety as to the issue of the fight between Don Luis and the cripple.

"It's finished," he said simply. "Tomorrow I will hand him over to the police."

She shuddered. But she did not speak; and he observed her in silence.

It was the first time they were alone together since they had been separated by so many tragedies, and next hurled against each other like sworn enemies. Don Luis was so greatly excited that, in the end, he could utter only insignificant sentences, having no connection with the thoughts that came rushing through his mind.

"We shall find the motor car if we follow this wall and then strike off to the left. . . . Do you think you can manage to walk so far? . . . When we're in the car, we'll go to Alencon. There's a quiet hotel close to the chief square. You can wait there until things take a more favorable turn for you—and that won't be long, as the criminal is caught."

"Let's go," she said.

He dared not offer to help her. For that matter, she stepped out firmly and her graceful body swung from her hips with the same even rhythm as usual. Don Luis once again felt all his old admiration and all his ardent love for her. And yet had never seemed more remote than at this moment when he had saved her life by untold miracles of energy.

She had not vouchsafed him a word of thanks nor yet one of those milder glances which reward an effort made; and she remained the same as on the first day, the mysterious creature whose secret soul he had never understood, and upon whom not even the storm of terrible events had cast the faintest light.

What were her thoughts? What were her wishes? What aim was she pursuing? These were obscure problems which he could no longer hope to solve. Henceforth each of them must go his own way in life and each of them could only remember the other with feelings of anger and spite.

"No!" he said to himself, as she took her place in the limousine. "No! The separation shall not take place like that. The words that have to be spoken between us shall be spoken; and, whether she wishes or not, I will tear the veil that hides her."

The journey did not take long. At Alencon Don Luis entered Florence in the visitors' book under the first name that occurred to him and left her to herself. An hour later he came and knocked at her door.

This time again he had not the courage at once to ask her the question which he had made up his mind to put to her. Besides, there were other points which he wished to clear up.

"Florence," he said, "before I hand over that man, I should like to know what he was to you."

"A friend, an unhappy friend, for whom I felt pity," she declared. "I find it difficult today to understand my compassion for such a monster. But, some years ago, when I first met him, I became attached to him because of his wretchedness, his physical weakness, and all the symptoms of death which he bore upon him even then. He had the opportunity of doing me a few services; and, though he led a hidden life, which worried me in certain respects, he gradually and without my knowing it acquired a considerable influence over me.

"I believed in his insight, in his will, in his absolute devotion; and, when the Mornington case started, it was he, as I now realize, who guided my actions and, later, those of Gaston Sauverand. It was he who compelled me to practice lying and deceit, persuading me that he was working for Marie Fauville's safety. It was he who inspired us with such suspicion of yourself and who taught us to be so silent, where he and his affairs were concerned, that Gaston Sauverand did not even dare mention him in his interview with you.

"I don't know how I can have been so blind. But it was so. Nothing opened my eyes. Nothing made me suspect for a moment that harmless, ailing creature, who spent half his life in hospitals or nursing homes, who underwent every possible sort of operation, and who, if he did sometimes speak to me of his love, must have known that he could not hope to——"

Florence did not finish her sentence. Her eyes had encountered Don Luis's eyes; and she received a deep impression that he was not listening to what she said. He was looking at her; and that was all. The words she uttered passed unheard.

To Don Luis any explanation concerning the tragedy itself mattered nothing, so long as he was not enlightened on the one point that interested him, on Florence's private thoughts about himself, thoughts of aversion, of contempt. Outside that, anything that she could say was vain and tedious.

He went up to her, and, in a low voice, said:

"Florence, you know what I feel for you, do you not?"

She blushed, taken aback, as though the question was the very last that she expected to hear. Nevertheless, she did not lower her eyes, and she answered frankly:

"Yes, I know."

"But, perhaps," he continued, more eagerly, "you do not know how deeply I feel it? Perhaps you do not know that my life has no other aim but you?"

"I know that also," she said.

"Then, if you know it," he said, "I must conclude that it was just that which caused your hostility to me. From the beginning I tried to be your friend and I tried only to defend you. And yet from the beginning I felt that for you I was the object of an aversion that was both instinctive and deliberate. Never did I see in your eyes anything but coldness, dislike, contempt, and even repulsion.

"At moments of danger, when your life or liberty was at stake, you risked committing any imprudence rather than accept my assistance. I was the enemy, the man to be distrusted, the man capable of every infamy, the man to be avoided, and to be thought of only with a sort of dread. Isn't that hatred? Is there anything but hatred to explain such an attitude?"

Florence did not answer at once. She seemed to be putting off the moment at which to speak the words that rose to her lips. Her face, thin and drawn with weariness and pain, was gentler than usual.

"Yes," she said, "there are other things than hatred to explain that attitude."

Don Luis was dumfounded. He did not quite understand the meaning of the reply; but Florence's tone of voice disconcerted him beyond measure, and he also saw that Florence's eyes no longer wore their usual scornful expression and that they were filled with smiling charm. And it was the first time that Florence had smiled in his presence.

"Speak, speak, I entreat you!" he stammered.

"I mean to say that there is another feeling which explains coldness, mistrust, fear, and hostility. It is not always those whom we detest that we avoid with the greatest fear; and, if we avoid them, it is often because we are afraid of ourselves, because we are ashamed, because we rebel and want to resist and want to forget and cannot——"

She stopped; and, when he wildly stretched out his arms to her, as if beseeching her to say more and still more, she nodded her head, thus telling him that she need not go on speaking for him to read to the very bottom of her soul and discover the secret which she kept hidden there.

Don Luis staggered on his feet. He was intoxicated with happiness, almost suffered physical pain from that unexpected happiness. After the horrible minutes through which he had passed amid the impressive surroundings of the Old Castle, it appeared to him to admit that such extraordinary bliss could suddenly blossom forth in the commonplace setting of that room at a hotel.

He could have longed for space around him, forest, mountains, moonlight, a radiant sunset, all the beauty and all the poetry of the earth. With one rush, he had reached the very acme of happiness. Florence's very life came before him, from the instant of their meeting to the tragic moment when the cripple, bending over her and seeing her eyes filled with tears, had shouted:

"She's crying! She's crying! What madness! But I know your secret, Florence! And you're crying. Florence, Florence, you yourself want to die!"

It was a secret of love, a passionate impulse which, from the first day, had driven her all trembling toward Don Luis. Then it had bewildered her, filling her with fear, appeared to her as a betrayal of Marie and Sauverand and, by turns urging her toward and drawing her away from the man whom she loved and whom she admired for his heroism and loyalty, rending her with remorse and overwhelming her as though it were a crime, had ended by delivering her, feeble and disabled, to the diabolical influence of the villain who coveted her.

Don Luis did not know what to do, did not know in what words to express his rapture. His lips trembled. His eyes filled with tears. His nature prompted him to take her in his arms, to kiss her as a child kisses, full on the lips, with a full heart. But a feeling of intense respect paralyzed his yearning. And, overcome with emotion, he fell at Florence's feet, stammering words of love and adoration.

CHAPTER XXI

Lupin's Lupins.

Next morning, a little before eight o'clock, Valenglay was talking in his own flat to the Prefect of Police, and asked:

"So you think as I do, my dear Prefect? He'll come?"

"I haven't the least doubt of it, Monsieur le President. And he will come with the same punctuality that has been shown throughout this business. He will come, for pride's sake, at the last stroke of eight."

"You think so?"

"Monsieur le President, I have been studying the man for months. As things now stand, with Florence Levasseur's life in the balance, if he has not smashed the villain whom he is hunting down, if he does not bring him back bound hand and foot, it will mean that Florence Levasseur is dead and that he, Arsene Lupin, is dead."

"Whereas Lupin is immortal," said Valenglay laughing. "You're right. Besides, I agree with you entirely. No one would be more astonished than I if our good friend was not here to the minute. You say you were rung up from Angers yesterday?"

"Yes, Monsieur le President. My men had just seen Don Luis Perenna. He had gone in front of them, in an airplane. After that, they telephoned to me again from Le Mans, where they had been searching a deserted coach-house.

"You may be sure that the search had already been made by Lupin, and that we shall know the results. Listen: eight o'clock!"

At the same moment they heard the throbbing of a motor car. It stopped outside the house, and the bell rang almost immediately after. Orders had been given beforehand. The door opened and Don Luis Perenna was shown in.

To Valenglay and the Prefect of Police his arrival was certainly not unexpected, for they had just been saying that they would have been surprised if he had not come. Nevertheless, their attitude showed that astonishment which we all experience in the face of events that seem to pass the bounds of human possibility.

"Well?" cried the Prime Minister eagerly.

"It's done, Monsieur le President."

"Have you collared the scoundrel?"

"Yes."

"By Jove!" said Valenglay. "You're a fine fellow!" And he went on to ask, "An ogre, of course? An evil, undaunted brute?——"

"No, Monsieur le President, a cripple, a degenerate, responsible for his actions, certainly, but a man in whom the doctors will find every form of wasting illness: disease of the spinal cord, tuberculosis, and all the rest of it."

"And is that the man whom Florence Levasseur loved?"

"Monsieur le President!" Don Luis violently protested. "Florence never loved that wretch! She felt sorry for him, as one would for a fellow creature doomed to an early death; and it was out of pity that she allowed him to hope that she might marry him later, at some time in the vague future."

"Are you sure of that?"

"Yes, Monsieur le President, of that and of a good deal more besides, for I have the proofs in my hands." Without further preamble, he continued: "Monsieur le President, now that the man is caught, it will be easy for police to find out every detail of his life. But meanwhile I can sum up that monstrous life for you, looking only at the criminal side of it, and passing briefly over three murders which have nothing to do with the story of the Mornington case.

"Jean Vernocq was born at Alencon and brought up at old M. Langernault's expense. He got to know the Dedessuslamare couple, robbed them of their money and, before they had time to lodge a complaint against the unknown thief, took them to a barn in the village of Damigni, where, in their despair, stupefied and besotted with drugs, they hanged themselves.

"This barn stood in a property called the Old Castle, belonging to M. Langernault, Jean Vernocq's protector, who was ill at the time. After his recovery, as he was cleaning his gun, he received a full charge of shot in the abdomen. The gun had been loaded without the old fellow's knowledge. By whom? By Jean Vernocq, who had also emptied his patron's cash box the night before . . .

"In Paris, where he went to enjoy the little fortune which he had thus amassed, Jean Vernocq bought from some rogue of his acquaintance papers containing evidence of Florence Levasseur's birth and of her right to all the inheritance of the Roussel family and Victor Sauverand, papers which the friend in question had purloined from the old nurse who brought Florence over from America. By hunting around, Jean Vernocq ended by discovering first a photograph of Florence and then Florence herself.

"He made himself useful to her and pretended to be devoted to her, giving up his whole life to her service. At that time he did not yet know what profit he could derive from the papers stolen from the girl or from his relations with her.

"Suddenly everything became different. An indiscreet word let fall by a solicitor's clerk told him of a will in Maitre Lepertuis's drawer which would be interesting to look at. He obtained a sight of it by bribing the clerk, who has since disappeared, with a thousand franc note. The will, as it happened, was Cosmo Mornington's; and in it Cosmo Mornington bequeathed his immense wealth to the heirs of the Roussel sisters and of Victor Sauverand.

DANDRUFF MAKES HAIR FALL

A small bottle of "Danderine" keeps hair thick, strong, beautiful.

Girls! Try this! Doubles beauty of your hair in a few moments.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you can not find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair, and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. Before you can realize how dull, faded, brittle, scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and possess an appearance of abundance, softness and comparable lustre, coloring and radiance.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine for a few cents at any drug store or toilet counter, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine.—Adv.

Musician Has Traveled Far

Sydney Nicholson recently appointed organist at Westminster Abbey is a confirmed wanderer. This explains why he holds the record for playing in more churches and cathedrals in England and abroad than any other living organist. He started at Metz, Alsace-Lorraine, and from there drifted to Barnet, Eton and Manchester.

At the latter city he founded the popular midday organ recitals for working people. These proved so successful that the scheme has now been extended to the whole of the northern counties.

It is not only in the interpretation of sacred music, however, that Mr. Nicholson has proved himself. He is an organist, composer and conductor rolled into one, and has written a requisite setting to some of Stopford Brooke's poetry. The two were great friends at Oxford, and the organist's music is an eloquent tribute to the dead poet's genius.

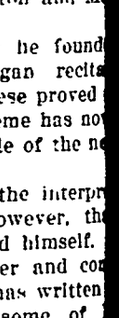
Hard Work Alone Never Kills

Hard work never killed anybody. But hard work, with irregular habits and neglect of rest does weaken the kidneys and keeps one tired, miserable and half sick. If your back aches, if you have headaches, dizziness, urinary disorders—don't wait! Help the weakened kidneys before dropsy, gravel or Bright's disease attacks. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. They have helped thousands and are used the world over.

A South Dakota Case



Mrs. H. M. Buchholz, Tyndall, S. D., says: "I suffered almost constantly from a dull ache in my back. I had spells of dizziness that left me sick and nervous. I realized that my kidneys were disordered and when I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills, I decided to take them. The results were even better than I expected. The backache has left me now and my kidneys are normal and I feel better in every way."

JAPAN LARGER THAN GERMANY

Land of Nippon Also Can Boast of a Greater Population, as Well as Area.

In World's Work here is a chart which shows a comparison of Germany and the Japanese empire. Japan is the greater of the two, both in territory and population. Germany's area (exclusive of colonies) is 208,780 square miles, while that of the Japanese empire is 260,738 square miles. This includes the peninsula of Korea which is a part of the Japanese nation but it does not include Manchurian and other Asiatic territory in which Japan has secured 99-year leases of ports and railroads as well as business advantages of all sorts and mining rights. Germany's population at the beginning of the present war was about 67,000,000. There are now 71,000,000 people living under the Japanese flag and there are also great numbers of them scattered over the islands of the Pacific and in foreign countries.

Lives 200 Years!

For more than 200 years Haarlem Oil, the famous national remedy of Holland, has been recognized as an infallible relief from all forms of kidney and bladder disorders. Its very age is proof that it must have unusual merit.

If you are troubled with pains or aches in the back, feel tired in the morning, headaches, indigestion, insomnia, painful or too frequent passage of urine, irritation or stone in the bladder, you will almost certainly find relief in GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. This is the good old remedy that has stood the test for hundreds of years, prepared in the proper quantity and convenient form to take. It is imported direct from Holland laboratories, and you can get it at any drug store. It is a standard, old time home remedy and needs no introduction. Each capsule contains one dose of five drops and is pleasant and easy to take. They will quickly relieve those stiffened joints, that backache, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gall stones, gravel, "brick dust," etc. Your money promptly refunded if they do not relieve you. But be sure to get the genuine GOLD MEDAL brand. In boxes, three sizes.—Adv.

The Face Looked Familiar.

"It's a little old world after all," commented an artillery corporal, as he accidentally ran into his father, a Y. M. C. A. secretary, recently a minister in Columbus, O.

The corporal was in a Y. M. canteen line when he noticed a familiar face behind the counter.

"That bird looks like someone I knew over in the states," he said.

He certainly did.—Stars and Stripes.

[illegible] Belgium. I think they our own.

I suppose now that German methods impressed us because they were foreign and unfamiliar and we knew nothing of their defects. As a matter of fact we Americans [illegible] were governed [illegible] and got off [illegible] efficiency, on the same terms. We never put our best men [illegible] the slightest irregularity, the least inefficiency is published from the housetops and used abroad the world in always [illegible] with the accusations of [illegible] that the atmosphere darkened by the flying missiles of the universal and recriminatory accusation charge and indictment that is always going on. No doubt it all has its effect as a police measure and proves us to be a very virtuous people either searching out our own sins with a remorseless and implacable conscience, or else searching out the sins of our neighbors. There was none of this in German cities and there was none and could be none in occupied Belgium and so the Zentrale had pretty much their own way.

For such dark subterranean systems of corruption there is no cure anywhere but in the illuminating influence of publicity, and with conditions as they were in Belgium it was impossible to let in the purifying antiseptic light.

I had supposed at first that the Zentrale was simply another expression of what has been so widely extolled in the English speaking world as German efficiency and genius for organization but as time went on I learned more about them.

They were a mere adaptation of the German theory of mechanical distribution of product—militarism, socialism and plutocracy working hand in hand. They were in reality limited companies to which the government of occupation granted monopolies. That is, the Butter-Zentrale had a monopoly of butter, the Kartoffel-Zentrale had a monopoly of potatoes, when it could get any, and so on as to all sorts of products.

The Zentrale multiplied. There was a Zentrale for everything in the end, one even for jam.

Again and again we made representations as to the abuses to be attributed to the Zentrale. There were in the German administration those who did not hesitate privately to recognize their evil, and in the Belgian circle where such things were known they became a scandal, but nothing was done and under the civil administration new Zentrales were constantly organized.

Beecher's Oratory

Rev. Charles Edward Jefferson in the Youth's Companion.

At one time great Henry Ward Beecher paid us a visit. I obtained a seat directly in front of him. I know my eyes were popping, and I am not sure about my mouth. From boyhood I had heard about the famous Brooklyn preacher and now at last I was to be permitted to hear him! I had always idolized him as the greatest of orators, and now I was to hear what real oratory is.

He began his lecture in a quiet, conversational tone. That surprised me not a little for, if man was an orator, it seemed to me he ought not to waste time in being something else. But the speaker was merely a quiet voiced gentleman saying things in a calm and sensible way. I forgave him, however, for I knew that after he once got down to business he would show us what he could do.

But he simply went on and on and on. After a while I forgot to pay attention to just how he was going on. I simply drank in the words as they flowed from his lips, and then all at once he stopped—just why I did not understand, for surely he had not spoken for more than 10 or 12 minutes and I felt confident that he would after getting his breath begin again. But to my dismay he walked off the stage and the lecture was actually ended. I looked at my watch. It said he had spoken more than an hour. I could not understand it. I compared my watch with the watch of a friend. They both told the same thing.

A new idea of eloquence began to dawn on me. I had always supposed it was the art of saying things in such a dramatic way that everyone would sit enraptured, exclaiming, "Ah, this is eloquence!" I now began to surmise that the hearer forgets the clock and merges his soul into the soul of the speaker. That is what had happened to me.

On going home I realized that I had not recognized the greatness of the speaker until the moment in which he ceased. I did not know how high I was until he left me, and I was obliged to clamber down to the level of my ordinary existence. I learned that night that eloquence is neither declamation nor any sort of verbal pyrotechnics, but the art of using words in such a way that the clock stops and the forces of the spirit are set free.

NEGROES STICK TO JOBS.

From the New York Tribune.

A "stand by the job" record deserving of recognition has been made by Frank Harris, a negro employed by the American Rolling Mill Company, of Columbus, Ohio, who has worked every day this year except two days in January, one in February and one in June—a total of 239 days out of 243. He has been continuously employed by the company since October 1, 1904, and wears a 10 year gold service button.

The four days he has taken off in 1918 have been more than made up by 7 1-4 days of overtime work.

Albert Jones, another negro, worked 141 consecutive days—7 days a week—without losing any time, from March 30 to August 19. He took five days off, beginning August 20 to go hunting, but is working every day now.

These men work on the pig casting machine and stuck to their jobs during the hottest weather.

A significant message from the allied high command to the German high command has been sent out by the French government wireless station. It reads: "The commanders of the German armies continue to propose to the commanders of the allied armies facing them that they should immediately hand out their war material and prisoners to the allies." The German soldiers in various sections of the occupied territory have apparently been getting out of hand. In some places they have attacked their commanders and raised the red flag of revolt.

Utilization of draft boards for inducting returning soldiers into work is urged by members of the 83 Chicago boards.

LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE IF SICK, CROSS, FEVERISH

HURRY, MOTHER! REMOVE POISONS FROM LITTLE STOMACH, LIVER, BOWELS.

GIVE CALIFORNIA SYRUP OF FIGS AT ONCE IF BILIOUS OR CONSTIPATED.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels needs a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.—Adv.

American Clocks in Demand.

A jewelry house in Bordeaux, France, has closed a deal with a large manufacturing firm in New England for an order for alarm clocks, the total purchase amounting to 250,000 francs or $48,250 at normal exchange. The order is the result of the efforts of the American consul at Bordeaux to open a market for American jewelry manufactured in France.

There is said to be a dearth of alarm clocks in France and in French colonial possessions. This is due to the inability of French dealers to obtain importations from their former sources of supply in enemy countries. The Bordeaux firm said it placed this initial order as a means of ascertaining the quality of American clocks and their suitability as to price and wear for the French market.

What Determines Meat and Live-Stock Prices?

Some stock men still think that Swift & Company—and other big packers—can pay as little for live-stock as they wish.

Some consumers are still led to believe that the packers can charge as much for dressed meat as they wish.

This is not true. These prices are fixed by a law of human nature as old as human nature itself—the law of supply and demand.

When more people want meat than there is meat to be had, the scramble along the line to get it for them sends prices up. When there is more meat than there are people who want it, the scramble all along the line to get rid of it within a few days, while it is still fresh, sends prices down.

When prices of meat go up, Swift & Company not only can pay the producer more, but has to pay him more, or some other packer will.

Similarly, when prices recede all down the line Swift & Company cannot continue to pay the producer the same prices as before, and still remain in the packing business.

All the packer can do is to keep the expense of turning stock into meat at a minimum, so that the consumer can get as much as possible for his money, and the producer as much as possible for his live-stock.

Thanks to its splendid plants, modern methods, branch houses, car routes, fleet of refrigerator cars, experience and organization, Swift & Company is able to pay for live cattle 90 per cent of what it receives for beef and by-products, and to cover expense of production and distribution, as well as its profit (a small fraction of a cent per pound), out of the other 10 per cent.

Swift & Company, U. S. A.

"We hear a lot of joking about the shortage of marriageable men on account of the war," Senator Smith of Georgia is credited with saying, "and I guess it must be true, judging from a proposal I just heard of from my state. Here was how the girl worked it on her bashful suitor: 'There goes our minister,' she said. 'He's very poor. I wish I could hand him a five.' 'Let me do it,' exclaimed the youth unsuspectingly, in a fervor of benevolence. 'Oh, Archie, that is too sudden,' bubbled the sweet young thing, and what chance did he have?"—The Outlook.

The More Spots the More Meals.

The number of spots burned on a Chinese monk's head shows how much he has elected to endure, says a recent writer on the subject of China. They receive as severe an initiation as they desire, and get therefrom certain privileges. If a monk has three spots he can get three meals free at any monastery in China; six spots entitles him to six meals; nine spots to three days' board, and the maximum of twelve, a month's care.

Accounts

"Let me see," began the girl who was armed with pencil and notebook. "How much money did we have when we started our week-end trip?"

"I gave you $10 to keep for me," said the girl with the knitting. "I think it was $10, but it may have been $15—"

"And I gave you twenty," interposed the artistic looking girl, who was embroidering a smock in cubist colors. "Twenty dollars and fifty-four cents, and Mabel owes me a dollar and ninety-six cents that I let her have for silk stockings, and I only spent—"

"Wait a minute'" urged the young woman with the pencil, who was figuring rapidly "You couldn't have given me so much—I only had $60 when we started, and some of it was Mabel's and part of it was my own. Well, I'll divide it up the best I can; it will be nearly right Now, let's see; what did you spend, Helen?"

The knitting girl thoughtfully bit the end of a celluloid needle

"Hotel bill," she began, "and chocolate sundaes, two of them. How much is that? Well, you ought to know, Lucy I wasn't keeping count. Anyway, that's what I bought.

"Oh, yes," she continued, "and I got that waist in Oldport, $3, only I think I'll send it back because the manicure woman in the hotel had one just like it. If I get the money back for it do you have to count that in? Oh, and I bought two hair nets and some cold cream, only Mabel used most of that Better put it in her list. I guess that's all. How much- $8.20? Why, I'd no idea it would be so much. Oh, well, we had a good time!"

The artistic girl had been engaged in carefully counting on her fingers.

"My bill is exactly $9.37," she announced. "That means I have about ten-something coming back to me. You see, I bought that purple hat and a pair of smoked glasses and ten sundaes and soap—it's $9.37 Stamps? Oh, yes, I did use a few. Hotel bill? I forgot it. Oh, well, I'll have something coming back, anyway, won't I? I simply have to buy that blouse I saw yesterday, and I won't get another allowance for two weeks. Oh, you fix it Lucy!"

Lucy nibbled her pencil, turned the page and began all over again.

"Too bad Mabel isn't here," she murmured. "I don't know exactly how much she gave me, but I think it was $16. She used more stamps than anybody—two special deliveries to Phil every day—that's about a dollar. And she ate a lot, too, and sent two telegrams. Did Mabel buy anything much? I don't seem to have any account of that."

"She bought a silver frame for Phil's picture," said the knitting girl. "I'm not sure how much it was. I think hers was a bargain, but they're $4 in the city. You'd better call it $4, it's so much easier to work with even numbers. What did you spend, Lucy?"

The secretary looked blank.

"Why, I don't believe I kept track." I must have bought something though. Hotel bill, oh, and stamps—stamps— stamps — stamps — And that blue waist! Don't you want to buy that from me, Helen? It's awfully sweet, only I don't like it. I wish you would, it would make the accounts a lot easier."

The artistic girl put aside her embroidery and began to rattle the Japanese teacups.

"Hurry up, Lucy!" she urged. "It's getting late. Accounts are an awful bore, aren't they?"

"It's funny," Lucy murmured through a mouthful of lead pencil. "It doesn't seem to come out right. We started out with about $60 and we ought to have about $20 left, but there is just two dollars and thirty cents. I wonder what's the matter."

"Mabel must have spent a lot we don't know about," suggested the knitting girl. "Anyway, what's the use of fussing? We'll never get it exactly right and it's an awful bore. Why not just divide what's left between the four of us? That will be easiest."

The secretary threw down her papers with a sigh.

"All right," she said. "Let's. And don't ask me to keep the accounts on our next expedition. I've managed all right this time, but it certainly has been hard work!"

Chicken Rice Broth.

Wash, singe and cut the chicken as for stewing. Put the neck, back, wing tips, gizzard into saucepan with six cupfuls of cold water, a small piece of onion, one tablespoonful salt, dash white pepper and boil slowly two hours. Remove the chicken and gizzard and add two tablespoonfuls well washed rice; boil thirty minutes; then add one tablespoonful chopped parsley. When serving add a dash of paprika.

Scale a Fish.

To scale a fish quickly, cover with boiling water; let it remain in the water half a minute, then scrape with a knife, and the scales will come off readily.

Historians Differ as to Sugar.

Historians say that the sugar cane was introduced by Columbus in Santo Domingo, that it spread from that island to Cuba and Mexico and that the Portuguese introduced the cane into Brazil, bringing it from Madeira. Some authorities have said that sugar cane was introduced into Louisiana in 1751 by Jesuit priests, who had it brought from Santo Domingo, while others give the date of the first planting of sugar cane as 1737 and make no reference to its having been brought in by the Jesuits.

Hens Fed by Machine.

As an aid to poultrymen a Massachusetts man has invented a machine that at regular intervals delivers water to a trough and scatters measured feed broadcast.

How The Money Will Be Spent

REGARDING THE FIFTH LIBERTY LOAN

A large percentage of the money which will be subscribed to the Fifth Liberty Loan will go toward the rehabilitation of wounded men The United States Government is resolved to do its utmost to restore every wounded American soldier and sailor to health, strength and self-supporting activity He will not be discharged from the hospital until all the medical and surgical treatment necessary to restore him to health has been given him, under the jurisdiction of military or naval authorities, according to the branch of service he is in.

Then his future will be considered by the Federal Board for Vocational Education If he has been disabled in such a way that he cannot take up the work he left to go into the country's service, a large vocational field is opened up to him, with a wide choice of occupations. He is carefully trained to self-supporting activity.

If he needs an artificial limb or mechanical appliance, the Government will supply it free, keep it in repair and renew it when necessary. If, after his discharge from the hospital, he again needs medical treatment on account of his disability, the Government will supply it free. While he is in the hospital and while in training afterwards the soldier or sailor will receive compensation as if in service and his family or dependents will receive their allotments.

Also, a wounded soldier or sailor, regardless of whether his disability prevents him from taking up his former employment, may take a course in vocational training, free of cost, and the war-risk insurance compensation will be paid him during the time of training. In this case no allotment will be paid to his family.

The training branches, with their thousands of trained instructors, will use millions of the nation's dollars, and the country, instead of being filled with dependent cripples and beggars, an eyesore to the nation and a constant reminder of the horrible side of the great war, with its glorified cause and its magnificent victory, will have thousands of highly trained men-heroes, the glory of whose sacrifice will not have been tarnished by a moral and mental disintegration.

That's one of the reasons why the Fifth Liberty Loan must be oversubscribed The first three loans launched America in the war—built training camps and equipped and sent men overseas; the Fourth Liberty Loan, the "fighting" loan, backed up the fighting men and made overwhelming victory for the allies possible The Fifth or Victory Loan will be just as important in the annals of war loans, for both moral and material reasons. America would be monstrously ungrateful should she not stay with her men in khaki and blue until they are returned to their homes, physically strong and able to earn a livelihood. The best way for every person to show his personal gratitude is to start now planning how much he can subscribe to the Fifth Loan.

Coal.

Though wood and turf formed the fuel of our early ancestors, investigations have proved that the Britons, even prior to the Roman occupation, made use of coal. But as it was possible to utilize only such coal as lay at or near the surface, the practice did not make headway for many centuries.

That overbearing German naval commanders are receiving short shrift from their men is indicated in a story from Granton, Scotland. Asked by a British officer who examined a German torpedo boat destroyer where the commander of the vessel was, the junior officer replied "Oh, he gave us some trouble four days ago, so we threw him overboard"

The section of 16 members of George Creel's committee on public information which has already sailed for Europe, and which said it should be called "The United States Official Press Mission to the Peace Conference," will cost the government $500 daily, and it is only the first section. RAPID CITY SOLDIER BOY IS BACK HOME

Wears French Decoration For Unusual Heroism While In Action.

Rapid City, S. D., Dec 6.—With a croix de guerre pinned on his breast and 16 months service with the aero squadron in France, Captain Russell Halley has returned as the hero of Rapid City He is the son of James Halley, of this city, a Black Hills pioneer and the founder of the Rapid City National bank.

Captain Halley was decorated by the French government for unusual heroism while flying over the German lines on a bombing expedition. The six allied planes of the party were surrounded by 20 Boche machines, three of which swooped down toward the plane which Captain Halley was piloting. The first of the enemy did no damage other than sending a few bullets through Halley's machine. The second attacker, however, did more effective work, and after its volley of bullets Halley found that his French gunner had been wounded and had fallen across the aerelons of the machine, making its control extremely difficult.

About this time Captain Halley's regular gunner, flying in another machine, saw his plight and went to help him He managed to send the attacking plane down in flames. Three more German planes were destroyed before the allied squadron returned to its lines.

HURON—Board of health officials in Huron are being kept busy denying false rumors that the influenza epidemic has again broken out in the city

Governor Norbeck Appoints Committee of New Yorkers, Former Residents of State.

Pierre, S. D., Dec. 5.—Governor Norbeck has sent a telegram of welcome to the South Dakota soldiers from France, welcoming them when they land in New York, as follows:

"South Dakota greets her returning soldiers affectionately. We are proud of you Mere words of welcome are wholly insufficient and entirely inadequate to convey to you our great appreciation of your noble, patriotic, brave, self sacrifices. We deeply regret our inability to be personally present to greet you. When you have reached the state we will give you a welcome which will typify our great love and admiration for you.

"Peter Norbeck, Governor."

The governor has also appointed a committee of South Dakotans, now living in New York city, to officially welcome the boys, whenever any of the South Dakota soldiers land in New York. The committee is composed of C. Louis Allan, now president of the Pyrene Fire Extinguisher Company, he having one time been deputy in the office of supreme court clerk at the capitol. SOLDIER BOYS MARKS FOR THE UNSCRUPULOUS

Lead S D., Dec 5 - George Jackson a Lead young man, who has returned to South Dakota from an officers training school at Camp Taylor Ky makes a serious charge against some of the business men of Louisville whom he alleges made an organized effort to "shake down" the soldiers in training at Camp Taylor for every cent it was possible to get out of them The system of "gyping," he states, was not confined to any line but was exercised by clothiers, restaurant men candy dealers, and butchers and bakers

Before the signing of the armistice Jackson states, uniforms which formerly sold for $15 and $20 had been raised to $45 and $50, that on the day following the signing of the armistice these prices dropped $20 With this alleged graft lost, Jackson relates that the merchants felt that something must be done to meet the situation, so they raised the price of civilian clothes from 60 to 75 per cent, expecting that the demand would pass from the military to the civilian line of wearing apparel.

Jackson also complains that in restaurants meals which usually cost from 25 to 30 cents were increased to $1 and $1.25 In candy stores the soldiers were charged eight cents a stick for candy which usually cost one cent

Although it was a crime to sell liquor to men in uniform, the sale went on in Louisville apparently without restriction, the liquor peddlers getting $8 per quart $2 per quart more than the standard price of 'bootleg' booze in South Dakota With a camp of 60,000 men to ply their alleged holdup methods on Jackson states the business houses who set out apparently with the determination to fleece the soldiers did a thriving and lucrative business

SHOULD BENEFIT BY EXPERIENCE OF PAST

Lane, S. D., Dec. 4—George N. Whitney, of this place, has a suggestion nation. It is as follows:

"In order that the experience of the past year or more of our government and state in dealing with aliens and foreign born citizens in time of war ing today. Interesting developments in connection with bootlegging are looked for, as it is alleged foremen in the shops had arranged for the trip of the two foreigners, giving them passes and money to buy the booze.

may not be lost, and the weakness of our laws (both national and state) along this line corrected in a uniform and comprehensive manner, I would like to make the following suggestion:

"That the national council of defense—this nation-wide patriotic citizenship of men from every walk of life—be called into council at state and national expense. In county council first, and one representative from such county to a state council selected, and from said state council to a national council, at which final tribunal there would be formulated and proposed laws dealing with emigration, franchise and schools conflicting with our own schools, language, conflicting with the English tongue, etc., be given consideration'

'Out of their experience, because of the many conflicting questions they have been obliged to deal with during the war period, they should be best qualified as a whole to properly handle these problems so difficult in the past and provide for the future. Besides being qualified they would be nonpartisan in their dealings and therefore fearless in their action. Otherwise, what will we profit by the experience of the past? We now have a heterogeneous group of state laws that should be made uniform'

Lead S D Dec 4 The business men and other citizens of this and other Black Hills cities have taken up discussion of the manner of reception that should be tendered the returning soldiers from this and other parts of the Black Hills on their arrival here and in other cities of the region from France and the camps in this country. The reception it is agreed will be the most elaborate of anything heretofore attempted in the Black Hills It is probable that complete arrangements for a grand reception to the returning soldiers will be made in the near future, so there will be no hitches when the soldiers arrive, as might be the case if the matter of completing arrangements were left to the last moment

The CURVED BLADES

By CAROLYN WELLS

Author of "A Chain of Evidence," "The Gold Bag," "The Clue," "The White Alley," Etc.

I.

MISS LUCY CARRINGTON.

"Garden Steps" was one of the show places of Merivale Park, Long Island. In summer it was an enchanting spot, and the dazzling white marble steps which led to the sunken gardens justified their right to give the place its name. Other stone steps gave on terraces and flower banks, others still led to the Italian landscape gardens, and a few rustic steps of a wooden stile transported one to an old fashioned garden, whose larkspur and Canterbury bells were the finest of their sort.

The house seemed an integral part of this setting. Its verandas, or more often loggias, were so lavishly furnished with flowering plants, its windows so boxed with them, that the whole effect was that of a marvelously well planned horticultural exhibition.

But all this was of the summer. In winter—for it was an all round the year home—only the varied and extraordinary collection of evergreens shared with the steps the honor of making picturesque and beautiful the view from the house windows.

And now, in January, one of the all too seldom enjoyed white snow storms had glorified the whole estate. Wind swept drifts half hid, half disclosed the curving marble balustrades, and turned the steps to snowy fairyland flights.

And, for it was night, a cold clear, perfect winter night, a supercilious moon looked down, a little haughtily and condescended to illumine the scene in stunning, if a bit theatric, fashion.

"Ripping picture, eh!" said Gray Haviland, as he held back the heavy curtain for the golden haired young woman at his side to look out.

"Oh, isn't it a wonderful sight!" And as Anita Frayne took a step forward, toward the casement, Haviland let the curtain fall behind him and the two were alone in the deep embrasure of the wide bay window.

"Not nearly such a wonderful sight as you are!" Haviland swung her around to face him, and stood gazing at the pretty, doll like face that half laughed, half frowned into his own.

"Me! I'm not like a moonlit landscape!"

"No, you're just a golden morsel of summer sunshine——" Haviland's eulogy was interrupted by a petulant voice calling shrilly:

"Where are you two?" I hear you talking: come on. I'm waiting."

"Oh, Lord! come on," and, holding the curtain aside, he let Anita pass and then followed her.

"Here we are, Cousin Lucy, all ready for the fray. Good evening Count."

Count Charlier bowed Frenchily, and Anita gave him the bright, flashing smile that she kept on hand for mankind in general, and which was quite different from that she used on special occasions or for special friends.

Annoyed at the duration of this delaying smile, Miss Lucy Carrington tapped impatiently on the bridge table, and looked her impatience most unmistakably.

Mistress of Garden Steps, wealthy, well born, of assured social position, capable and efficient, Miss Carrington lacked the one gift of fate for which she would have bartered all else. She was not beautiful, and had not even enough pretension to good looks to think herself beautiful. Plain features, graying hair—dyed red—big, prominent light blue eyes, and a pasty, pudgy complexion left no hope for the miracles worked by beauty doctors to avail in her case. Her figure was short and dumpy, the despair of her staymakers, and her taste in dress ran to the extremes in coloring and fashion.

Passionately fond of all beauty, Miss Carrington felt keenly her own lack of it, and to this lack she attributed the fact that she was a spinster Those who knew her felt there might be other reasons why her suitors had been few, but, as a matter of fact, the acidity of her disposition was a direct result her disappointed, loveless life, a even yet, though nearing 50, M Lucy Carrington had by no me laid aside all thoughts of matri nial adventure.

Heiress to immense wealth she had been fortune seekers w asked her hand, but Lucy Carri ton would none of these Aris cratic and high minded, she h unerring perception of moti and the men who had been willi to marry her face as well as h fortune had been of such enor that the lady had scorned them

But now, looming on her hop horizon was a welcome possibili Count Henri Charlier, a visitor a neighbor, seemingly admir the mistress of Garden Steps a had fallen into the habit of f quent calling. Courteous and p ished of manner he flattered M Carrington in such wise that attitude was acceptable if not dubitably sincere. Her clos scrutiny and most challengi provocation failed to surprise a admission of her lack of perf tion in his eyes, and his splend physique and brilliant mind co manded her complete approv and admiration. There had be hints that his title could not read entirely clear, but this w not sufficient to condemn him Miss Carrington's eyes

To be sure, the Count had as y said no word that could be co strued as of definite intention, b there had been certain sig deemed portentious by the wi ing mind of the lady in question

Bridge was Miss Carrington favorite diversion and as t Count also enjoyed it, freque evenings were devoted to t game.

It was, perhaps, a mistake th Miss Carrington should have a lowed this, for her temper alwa uncertain, lost all restraint wh she suffered ill luck at cards poor hand always brought dow violent objurgation on the hea of her partner and sarcastic co ment or criticism on her adve saries. Those exhibitions of wra were not good policy if she wish to charm the French visitor bu as he invariably kept his own te per, his irate hostess made little effort to curb hers.

"What are you doing Anita cried Miss Carrington, petulantly as they settled themselves at th table. "You know I always pla with the blue cards, and you a dealing them!"

"Sure enough! Pardon m Lady Lucy, I will take the re ones."

"Then pray, wait till I mak them up. There. No, let the Cou cut them! Have you no notion bridge rules? You are quite th most inattentive player! Will yo kindly concentrate on the game?

"Yes, indeed," and Ani Frayne smiled as she deftly dea the red cards. "I hope you have good hand."

"You hope I have a good hand A strange idea for an adversary!

"But I know you like to win, and Miss Frayne hastily gathers up her own cards.

"I do not like to have you wa me to win! That's babyish I li to win by superior skill, n merely by lucky cards!"

The President's Message.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2.—The president's speech in full follows:

Gentlemen of the congress:

The year that has elapsed since I last stood before you to fulfill my constitutional duty to give to the congress from time to time information on the state of the union, has been so crowded with great events, great processes and great results that I cannot hope to give you an adequate picture of its transactions or of the far-reaching changes which have been wrought in the life of our nation and of the world. You have yourselves witnessed these things as I have. It is too soon to assess them; and we who stand in the midst of them and are part of them are less qualified than men of another generation will be to say what they mean, or even what they have been. But some great outstanding facts are unmistakable, and constitute in a sense part of the public business with which it is our duty to deal. To state them is to set the stage for the legislative and executive action which must grow out of them, and which we have yet to shape and determine.

A Year's Record.

A year ago we had sent 145,918 men overseas. Since then we have sent 1,950,513, an average of 162,542 each month; the number, in fact, rising in May last, to 245,951; in June to 278,760, in July to 307,182, and continuing to reach similar figures in August and September—in August, 289,570, and in September, 257,438. No such movement of troops ever before took place across 3,000 miles of sea followed by adequate equipment and supplies and carried safely through extraordinary dangers of attack—dangers which were alike strange and infinitely difficult to guard against. In all this movement only 758 men were lost by enemy attacks—630 of whom were upon a single English transport which was sunk near the Orkney Islands.

Were Apt Pupils.

I need not tell you what lay back of this great movement of men and material. It is not invidious to say that back of it lay a supporting organization of the industries of the country and of all its productive activities more complete, more thorough in method and effective in result, more spirited and unanimous in purpose and effort than any other great belligerent had been able to effect. We profited greatly by the experience of the nations which had already been engaged for nearly three years in the exigent and exacting business, their every resource and every executive proficiency taxed to the utmost. We were their pupils. But we learned quickly and acted with a promptitude and a readiness that justify our great pride that we were able to serve the world with unparalleled energy and quick accomplishment. But it is not the physical scale and executive efficiency of preparation, supply, equipment and dispatch that I would dwell upon, but the mettle and quality of the officers and men we sent over and of the sailors who kept the seas, and the spirit of the nation that stood behind them. No soldiers or sailors ever proved themselves more quickly ready for the test of battle or acquitted themselves with more splendid courage and achievement when put to the test.

Tribute to Soldiers.

Those of us who played some part in directing the great processes by which the war was pushed irresistibly forward to the final triumph may now forget all that and delight our thoughts with the story of what our men did. Their officers understood the grim and exacting task they had undertaken and performed it with an audacity, efficiency and unhesitating courage that touch the story of convoy and battle with imperishable distinction at every turn, whether the enterprise was great or small—from their great chiefs, Pershing and Sims, down to the youngest lieutenant; and their men were worthy of them—such men as hardly need to be commended, to go to their terrible adventure blithely and with the quick intelligence of those who know just what they would accomplish. I am proud to be the fellow countryman of men of such stuff and valor. Those of us who stayed at home did our duty, the war could not have been won or the gallant men who fought it given their opportunity to win it otherwise; but for many a long day we shall think ourselves "accurs'd we were not there," and hold our manhood cheap while any speaks that fought" with us at St. Mihiel or Thierry. The memory of those days of triumphant battle will go with these fortunate men to their graves; and each will have his favorite memories.

"Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot, but he'll remember with advantages what feats he did that day."

What we all thank God for with deepest gratitude is that our men went in force into the line of battle just at the critical moment when the whole fate of the world seemed to hang in the balance and threw their fresh strength into the ranks of freedom in time to turn the whole tide and sweep of the fateful struggle—turn it once for all, so that thenceforth it was back, back, back for their enemies; always back, never again forward! After that it was only a scant four months before the commanders of the central empires knew themselves beaten, and now their very empires are in liquidation!

And throughout it all how fine the spirit of the nation was; what unity of purpose, what untiring zeal!

Long a Memory.

What elevation of purpose ran through all its splendid display of strength, its untiring accomplishment! I have said that those of us who stayed at home to do the work of organization and supply will always wish that we had been with the men whom we sustained by our labor; but we can never be ashamed. It has been an inspiring thing to be here in the midst of fine men who had turned aside from every private interest of their own and devoted the whole of their trained capacity to the tasks that supplied the sinews of the whole great undertaking! The patriotism, the unselfishness, the thoroughgoing devotion and distinguished capacity that marked their toilsome labors, day after day, month after month, have made them fit mates and comrades of the men in the trenches and on the sea. And not the men here in Washington only. They have but directed the vast achievements. Industrial Readjustment

[illegible]

No Plan Suggested

Any leading strings we might seek to put them in would speedily become hopelessly tangled because they would pay no attention to them and go their own way. All that we can do as their legislative and executive servants is to mitigate the process of change here, there and elsewhere as we may. I have heard much counsel as to the plans that should be formed and personally conducted to a happy consummation, but from no quarter have I seen any general scheme of "reconstruction" emerge which I thought it likely we could force our spirited business men and self-reliant laborers to accept with due pliancy and obedience.

Harness Every Energy

While the war lasted we set up many agencies by which to direct the industries of the country in the services it was necessary for them to render, by which to make sure of an abundant supply of the materials needed, by which to check undertakings that could for the time be dispensed with and stimulate those that were most serviceable in war, by which to gain for the purchasing departments of the government a certain control over the prices of essential articles and materials, by which to restrain trade with alien enemies, make the most of the available shipping and systematize financial transactions, both public and private, so that there would be no unnecessary conflict or confusion—by which in short, to put every material energy of the country in harness to draw the common load and make of us one team in the accomplishment of a great task. But the moment we knew the armistice to have been signed we took the harness off. Raw materials upon which the government had kept its hand for fear there should not be enough for the industries that supplied the armies have been released and put into the general market again. Great industrial plants whose whole output and machinery have been taken over for the uses of the government have been set free to return to the uses to which they were put before the war. It has not been possible to remove so readily or so quickly the control of foodstuffs and of shipping because the world has still to be fed from our granaries and the ships are still needed to send supplies to our men overseas and to bring the men back as fast as the disturbed conditions on the other side of the water permit; but even there restraints are being re-

France Needs Help

[illegible] from [illegible] many devastated [illegible] from permanent ruin. May I not say a special word about the needs of Belgium and northern France? No sums of money paid by way of indemnity will serve of themselves to save them from hopeless disadvantage for years to come. Something more must be done than merely find the money. If they had money and raw materials in abundance tomorrow they could not resume their place in the industry of the world tomorrow—the very important place they held before the flame of war swept across them. Many of their factories are razed to the ground. Much of their machinery is destroyed or has been taken away. Their people are scattered and many of their best workmen are dead. Their markets will be taken by others if they are not in some special way assisted to rebuild their factories and replace their lost instruments of manufacture.

Urges Priorities.

They should not be left to the vicissitudes of the sharp competition for materials and for industrial facilities which is now set in. I hope, therefore, that the congress will not be unwilling, if it should become necessary, to grant to some such agency as the war trade board the right to establish priorities of export and supply for the benefit of those people whom we have been so happy to assist in saving from the German terror and whom we must not now thoughtlessly leave to shift for themselves in a pitiless competitive market.

Prompt Tax Legislation.

For the steadying and facilitation of our own domestic business readjustments nothing is more important than the immediate determination of the taxes that are to be levied for 1918, 1919 and 1920. As much of the burden of the taxation must be lifted from business as sound methods of financing the government will permit and those who conduct the greatest industries of the country must be told as exactly as possible what obligations to the government they will be expected to meet in the years immediately ahead of them. It will be of serious consequences to the country to delay removing all uncertainties in this matter a single day longer than the right processes of debate justify. It is idle to talk of successful and confident business reconstruction before those uncertainties are resolved.

Expense Will Continue

If the war had continued it would have been necessary to raise $6,000,000,000 by taxation payable in the year of 1919, but the war has ended, and I agree with the secretary of the treasury that it will be safe to reduce the amount to $4,000,000,000. An immediate rapid decline in the expenses of the government is not to be looked for. Contracts made for war supplies will, indeed, be rapidly cancelled and liquidated, but their immediate liquidation will make heavy drains on the treasury for the months just ahead of us. The maintenance of our forces on the other side of the sea is still necessary. A considerable proportion of those forces must remain in Europe during the period of occupation, and those which are brought home will be transported and demobilized at heavy expense for months to come. The interest on our war debt must, of course, be paid and provision made for the retirement of the obligations of the government which represent it. But these demands will, of course, fall much below what a continuation of military operations would have entailed, and $4,000,000,000 should suffice to supply a sound foundation for the financial operations of the year.

I entirely concur with the secretary of the treasury in recommending that the $2,000,000,000 needed in addition to the $4,000,000,000 provided by existing law be obtained from the profits which have accrued and shall accrue from war contracts and distinctly war business, but that these taxes be confined to the war profits accruing in 1918 or in 1919 from business originating in war contracts. I urge your acceptance of his recommendation that provision be made now, not subsequently, that the taxes to be paid in 1920 should be reduced from $6,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000. Any arrangements less definite than these would add elements of doubt and confusion to the critical period of industrial readjustment through which the country must now immediately pass and which no true friend of the nation's essential business interest can afford to be responsible for creating or prolonging. Clearly determined conditions, clearly and simply charted, are indispensable to the economic revival and rapid industrial development which may confidently be expected if we act now and sweep all interrogation points away.

Carry Out Naval Program.

I take it for granted that the congress will carry out the naval program which was undertaken before we entered the war. The secretary of the navy has submitted to your committees for authorization that part of the program which covers the building plans of the next three years. These plans have been prepared along the lines and in accordance with the policy which the congress established, not under the exceptional conditions of the war, but with the intention of adhering to a definite method of development for the navy. I earnestly recommend the uninterrupted pursuit of that policy. It would clearly be unwise for us to attempt to adjust our programs to a future world policy as yet undetermined.

The Railroad Problem

The question which causes me the greatest concern is the question of the policy to be adopted towards the railroads. I frankly turn to you for counsel upon it. I have no confident judgment of my own. I do not see how any thoughtful man can have who knows anything of the complexity of the problem. It is a problem which must be studied, studied immediately and studied without bias or prejudice. Nothing can be gained by becoming partisans of any particular plan of settlement.

Needed Rail Control

It was necessary that the administration of the railways should be taken over by the government so long as the war lasted. It would have been impossible otherwise to establish and carry through under a single direction the necessary priorities of shipment. It would have been impossible otherwise to combine maximum production at the factories and mines and farms with the maximum possible car supply to take the products to the ports and markets, impossible to route troop shipments and freight shipments without regard to the advantage or disadvantage of the roads employed, impossible to subordinate, when necessary, all questions of convenience to the public necessity, impossible to give the necessary financial support to the roads from the public treasury. But all these necessities have now been served and the question is: What is best for the railroads and for the public in the future?

Competition Obligatory.

Exceptional circumstances and exceptional methods of administration were not needed to convince us that the railroads were not equal to the immense tasks of transportation imposed upon them by the rapid and continuous development of the industries of the country. We knew that already. And we knew that they were unequal to it partly because their full cooperation was rendered impossible by law and their competition made obligatory so that it has been impossible to assign to them severally the traffic which could be best carried by their respective lines in the interest of expedition and national economy.

Sign Terms By Spring.

We may hope, I believe, for the formal conclusion of the war by treaty by the time spring has come. The 21 months to which the present control of the railways is limited after formal proclamation of the peace shall have been made will run at farthest, I take it for granted, only to the January of 1921. The full equipment of the railways which the federal administration planned could not be completed within any such period. The present law does not permit the use of the revenues of the several roads for the execution of such plans except by formal contract with their directors, some of whom will consent while some will not, and therefore, does not afford sufficient authority to undertake improvement upon the scale upon which it would be necessary to undertake them.

Every approach to this difficult subject matter of decision brings us face to face, therefore, with this unanswered question: What is it right that we should do with the railroads, in the interest of the public and fairness to their owner?

Lacks An Answer.

Let me say at once that I have no answer ready. The only thing that is perfectly clear to me is that it is not fair either to the public or to the owners of the railroads to leave the question unanswered, and that it will presently become my duty to relinquish control of the roads, even before the expiration of the statutory period, unless there should appear some clear prospect in the meantime of a legislative solution. Their release would at least produce one element of a solution, namely certainty and a quick stimulation of private initiative.

I believe that it will be serviceable for me to set forth as explicitly as possible the alternative courses that lie open to our choice.

Intermediate Course.

We can simply release the roads and go back to the old conditions of private management, unrestricted competition and multiform regulation by both state and federal authorities; or we can go to the opposite extreme and establish complete government control, accompanied, if necessary, by actual government ownership; or we can adopt an intermediate course of modified private control under a more unified and affirmative public regulation and under such alterations of the law as will permit wasteful competition to be avoided and a certain degree of unification of administration to be effected, as for example, by regional corporations under which the railways of definable areas would be in effect combined in single systems.

Old Conditions Dead.

The only conclusion that I am ready to state with confidence is that it would be disservice alike to the country and to the owners of the railroads to return to the old conditions unmodified. Those are conditions of restraint without development. There is nothing affirmative or helpful about them. What the country chiefly needs is that all its means of transportation should be developed—its railways, its waterways, its highways, and its countryside roads. Some new elements of policy, therefore, are absolutely necessary—necessary for the service of the purpose, necessary for the release of credit to those who are administering the railways, necessary for the protection of their security holders. The old policy may be changed much or little, but surely it cannot be left as it was. I hope that the congress will have a complete and impartial study of the whole problem instituted at once and prosecuted as rapidly as possible. I stand ready and anxious to release the roads from the present control and I must do so at a very early date, for by waiting until the statutory limit of time is reached I shall be merely prolonging the period of doubt and uncertainty which is hurtful to every interest concerned.

Reason For Trip.

I welcome this occasion to announce to the congress my purpose to join in Paris the representatives of the governments with which we have been associated in the war against the central empires for the purpose of discussing with them the main features of the treaty of peace. I realize the great inconveniences that will attend my leaving the country, particularly at this time, but the conclusion that it was my paramount duty to go has been forced upon me by considerations which I hope will seem as conclusive to you as they have seemed to me.

Aid in Interpretation.

The allied governments have accepted the basis of peace which I outlined to the congress on the 8th of January last, as the central empires also have, and very reasonably desire my personal counsel in their interpretation and application and it is highly desirable that I should give it in order that the sincere desire of our government to contribute without selfish purpose of any kind to settlements that will be of common benefit to all the nations concerned may be made fully manifest.

The peace settlements which are now to be agreed upon are of transcendent importance both to us and to the rest of the world, and I know of no business or interest which should take precedence of them. The gallant men of our armed forces on land and sea have consciously fought for the ideals which they knew to be the ideals of their country; I have sought to express those ideals; they have accepted my statements of them as the substance of their own thought and purpose, as the associated governments have accepted them. I owe it to them to see to it, so far as in me lies, that no false or mistaken interpretation is put upon them and no possible effort omitted to realize them. It is now my duty to play my full part in making good what they offered their life's blood to obtain. I can think of no call to service which could transcend this.

Why Cable Control.

I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side of the water, and you will know all that I do. At my request the French and English governments have absolutely removed the censorship of cable news which until within a fortnight they had maintained and there is now no censorship whatever exercised at this end except upon attempted trade communications with enemy countries. It has been necessary to keep an open wire constantly available between Paris and the department of state and another between France and the department of war. In order that this might be done with the least possible interference with the other uses of the cables I have temporarily taken over the control of both cables in order that they may be used as a single system. I did so at the advice of the most experienced cable officials, and I hope that the results will justify my hope that the news of the next few months may pass with the utmost freedom and with the least possible delay from each side of the sea to the other.

Asks for Support.

May I not hope, gentlemen of the congress, that in the delicate tasks I shall have to perform on the other side of the sea in my efforts truthfully and faithfully to interpret the principles and policies of the country we love; may I have the encouragement and the added strength of your united support? I realize the magnitude and difficult duty I am undertaking. I am poignantly aware of its grave responsibilities. I am the servant of the nation, and can have no private thought or purpose of my own in performing such an errand. I do so to give the best that is in me to the common settlement which I must now assist in arriving at in conference with the other working heads of associated governments.

Available for Counsel.

I shall count upon your friendly countenance and encouragement. I shall not be inaccessible. The cables and the wireless will render me available for any counsel or service you may desire of me, and I shall be happy in the thought that I am constantly in touch with the weighty matters of domestic policy with which we shall have to deal. I shall make my absence as brief as possible and shall hope to return with the happy assurance that it has been possible to translate into action the great ideals for which America has striven.

SENATE MILDLY RAPS PRESIDENT

Continues Demand For An Explanation of Wilson's Ideas on Peace Conference—Members Are Calm Today.

CUMMINS' BILL HELD UP

Move to Send Committee to France Blocked—Kellogg For League of Nations.

By Associated Press.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 5.—General discussion of President Wilson's 14 peace principles was started in the Senate today by a speech of Senator Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, republican, advocating a resolution he had introduced calling upon the president to make a public declaration interpreting the principles.

Senator Frelinghuysen said the president's 14 principles were open to various interpretations and added:

"The president should not on behalf of the American public make radical suggestions until he is sure that they are indorsed by the people."

Senator Walsh, of Montana, democrat, declared that lack of criticism until recently of the president's 14 terms had justified general belief in their acceptability. Senators Knox, of Pennsylvania, and Poindexter, of Washington, republicans, sharply dissented.

During the debate Senator Borah, of Idaho, republican, introduced a resolution providing for publication of the peace terms as soon as agreed upon and for open discussion during the consideration of the treaty in the Senate.

Resolution Postponed.

Action on the resolution of Senator Cummins, of Iowa, republican proposing that a Senate committee to be sent to Paris for the peace conference was postponed until tomorrow by the Senate foreign relations committee today after executive session to discuss the resolution and hear Senator Cummins' in its behalf.

When the meeting was over administration leaders said privately the resolution would not be approved. Most of the democratic leaders of the committee are said to have opposed it while the republicans were divided on the subject.

Creation of a league of nations to maintain peace—not a supergovernment to dominate and interfere with nations' internal affairs, but a world tribunal for arbitration of international disputes was advocated by Senator Kellogg, of Minnesota, republican, in an address today in the Senate.

Senator Kellogg expressed regret at what he characterized as a lack of disposition of President Wilson to deal more frankly with the people and the Senate regarding his views on problems coming before the peace conference.

"I believe the time has come," he said, "to try to establish a league to prevent war and to enforce peace, which may not be entirely preventive, but, backed by a world public sentiment, will have a tremendous influence toward maintaining just and equitable relations between nations and preventing the horrors of war.

Backing Is Necessary.

"No league of nations can succeed unless it is originated in and sustained by an honest public sentiment of the peoples involved and unless the governments joining in such a league are responsive as the people. These conditions exist today to a greater extent than ever before."

Turning to concrete plans for a league of nations, Senator Kellogg said unless Germany evolved a government responsive to popular will and with a people having ideals and aspirations different from those of the past regime, there must be a league of nations to "see that Germany is rendered powerless to renew the contest."

Another important step Senator Kellogg said, is abolition of the system of secret treaties and alliances. The new treaties, he said, should be made in the open."

LAPLAND DOCKS AND BIG THRONG CHEERS

By United Press.

New York, Dec. 5.—The transport Lapland, loaded with home coming American troops docked here today. As she came up the North river, opposite Hoboken, there was a demonstration of whistles and cheering. The George Washington, with President Wilson aboard, waiting to cast off, joined in the greeting sounding its siren.

Strong Navy a Bar to War Is View of Mayo

Great American Sea Force Would Have Prevented World War Says Admiral.

By Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—"If our navy had been what it is today and we had had universal military training, these last four years would have been years of peace," was the assertion made tonight by Vice Admiral Henry T. Mayo, commander of the Atlantic fleet, just before he went on board his flagship, the superdreadnaught Pennsylvania, which will lead the squadron that will escort President Wilson to France.

"The conflict just ended would never have been begun by Germany if she had not been contemptuous of us as a military nation," continued the admiral. "No other conflict will be begun by anybody if the United States keeps alive her poise on land and sea.

"Congress, in dealing with military and naval matters, should realize now that it is better to spend a few hundred millions for adequate preparation—which is protection against war—than to have to spend billions of treasure and thousands of lives in war itself. A great and efficient navy and universal military training should be maintained by the United States from now on as the best possible means of preventing future wars."

Took Their Grain to Mill.

The report published in a Bridgeport newspaper that the owner of a grist mill at Sandy Hook, Conn., having secured a few bags of wheat, ground it up and sold it to his neighbors to be mixed with Western flour, the result being a cheaper material for bread, brings us back to the days of hardly more than a generation ago, when Northern farmers produced grain on their farms and had it ground in the neighboring grist mill, then an institution to be found within a few miles of every neighborhood. There was no indication in those days that the ground product of the grain, whether corn or wheat, was inferior to any produced elsewhere. But now with the advent of modern machinery our civilization seems to demand a flour from which every particle of nutritious gluten, so far as it tends to discolor the flour, is eliminated. As for home-grown, home-ground cornmeal, that is a rarity, known only to a few old-time epicures and secured by them with considerable difficulty. In the southern Appalachians, however, the old-time grist mill is still in use.—Providence Journal.

Eleven, by Actual Count.

An old toper started home one night in his normal condition, with a turkey which he had bought for his Christmas dinner.

The road was rough, and he fell several times over all sorts of obstructions in the path,, dropping the turkey each time, but picking it up again.

Entering his house, he steadied himself as well as he could, and said to his wife:

"Here, wifey, I've brought you eleven turkeys."

"Eleven turkeys!" cried his wife. "I see but one."

"Nonsense, you're blind!" cried her good man. "Why, I fell down eleven times coming home, and I swear I picked up a turkey every time!"

Powerful Exterminator.

In India and Australia a rat and rabbit exterminator was tested some time ago. It consists of an outer and inner metal shell, like one small egg in a larger one. In the outer shell is sulphuric acid, in the inner metal egg is dry cyanide of potash. The outer shell is filled with acid and placed in the rat hole or burrow, and all rat holes are tightly sealed. After an hour or so the acid eats into the cyanide and turns loose a lot of deadly prussic acid gas.

Convenient Wrist Watch.

"I can't understand why the public make such a joke of the wrist watch," said the knut to the hardened sinner. "I'm sure it's a great convenience."

"Yes. With the old kind of watch I always had to unbutton my coat and fish in every one of my waistcoat pockets for it. Now I have to unbutton my coat, fish in every one of my waistcoat pockets, discover that the watch isn't there, push up my sleeve, and look at it. A great convenience!"

SOME HIDE THEIR HABITS

Hypodermic Needle Falls From Pocket of Temperance Lecturer as He Complains About Drunkard.

It is rather generally admitted that it is poor form for those who live in glass houses to hurl rocks, writes a New York correspondent, and a man in the Tombs court had the fact impressed upon him. The man is a lecturer on temperance, and, having completed a street address on the Bowery, got into an altercation with a laborer. "This man staggered into me and nearly knocked me over," said the temperance man, "and when I remonstrated with him he became abusive. I believe in the interest of the public, and any man who is subject to drink and has an evil temper should be clapped in jail, where he belongs. I admit that I have no sympathy for this man and desire that he be heavily fined or sent to the workhouse for a good, long stay. His face shows that he is a slave of liquor."

As the lecturer spoke he dropped a pencil which he had in his hand. He stooped to recover it. Another small object fell. It was a hypodermic needle. A policeman standing nearby stooped over and picked up the needle. The upshot of it was that the temperance shouter, dreading any one enslaved by habit, was held for trial for having narcotics in his possession.

Their Position Explained.

Two army doctors, while ballooning, lost trace of their whereabouts, and, wishing to know which part of the country they were passing, saw a rustic at some distance working in the fields, and gradually descended.

When nearly overhead, one of them called out:

"Hi, there, Johnny, can you tell us where we are?"

The rustic merely gazed up in much amazement. Thinking he had not heard, one of the officers again shouted out, louder than ever:

"Where are we?"

Just as the balloon drifted past came the answer:

"Whoy, ye be in a balloon, bean't ye?"

What the officers said when they heard this is not recorded.—London Tit-Bits.

Twins Fool the Doctor.

Twin brothers, who had just reached eighteen, appeared before a medical recruiting board for examination preliminary to enlistment. One of them stripped, was ushered before a doctor, and, having passed his examination, retired. Then the other brother appeared, but the doctor refused to examine him, declaring he could not give his attention to the same candidate twice. Not until the two went in together would he be convinced.

"If one of them is killed he'll never be sure of it," commented the doctor. "He'll be uncertain whether he's himself or his brother."

The twins are so nearly alike that even their parents have never been able to distinguish them positively. They have the same initials and their penmanship is identical.

Bible More in Demand.

The American Bible society's presses have been running 16 hours a day since May 1. While about 400,000 copies of the Bible have been printed in the mean time, says an exchange, the concern is still a long way behind its orders. These orders include 1,000,000 Bibles for the Y. M. C. A. The New York Bible society is appealing for funds with which to purchase Bibles for the army and navy. There never was a time when the Book of Books was more popular in the United States than it is today.

AUNT BESS' TRUNK

By HERMINE K. FRANK.

(Copyright, 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Mother!"

"Yes, Laura?"

"Well, you know, mother, Roy Benton is coming home for a few days before going 'over there.'"

"Is he? That is very nice..." said Mrs. Nelson

"Yes, it is."

Then, hesitatingly: "There is going to be a dance given in his honor. Do you suppose I could have a new dance frock? There are some very pretty patterns in ——'s now that are very reasonable in price."

"Laura, you know I would love to get you something, but—"

"But what?" impatiently from Laura.

"Why, there are the rent and the gas bill due Saturday," added her mother wearily, "and you know the fuel is low. Perhaps you could find something suitable in the trunk Aunt Bess left you."

"Oh, that trunk!" ... Laura angrily. "I wish Aunt ... willed it to me." ... mother and ...

Laura's father ... and had kept ... comfortable circ... Laura was fourteen ... old he died of pneumonia ... four days. Mrs. Nelson ... seamstress and by careful ... and strict economy had managed to support herself and Laura.

Among the many friends was Roy Benton, the only son of the village doctor.

In her room Laura cried ... until her eyes were red ... Indeed, she did not wish to be seen by Roy at that moment. When she had calmed down she thought of how hard her mother had worked for her, and decided to take ... and look through Aunt Bess' trunk.

There were many ... which probably had been ... their day, but there ... was suitable for ... very bottom of the trunk however, there was a white ...

"It is pretty," murmured ... herself, "and I am going to ..."

About ten ... the sitting room, ... sat knitting on ... Her cheeks were ... ment, and, ... the dress of the nineteenth ..., she certainly looked like a picture.

"Laura Nelson!" gasped her mother.

"Isn't it pretty, mother dear?"

"Yes, Laura, it is. That dress was always very dear to Aunt Bess. She had worn it the night before Robert Kingston, her soldier sweetheart, went off to join the boys in blue in 1861. She was to have ... but he fell at Gettysburg. That is why she never married."

"Oh, mother," said Laura, "do you suppose it would have the same effect on—?"

"On Roy Benton?" queried her mother.

Laura blushed prettily, and said: "At any rate I am going to launder it. I may wear it to the dance, too."

Although the dress was pretty before it was laundered, it was much prettier afterward, and Laura made up her mind to wear it, just to see what the crowd would say!

Thursday night.

Laura went to the dance hall alone; and a little later than the other girls, for she wanted to see what the general impression of her old fashioned dress on all who were there would be.

She removed her wraps in the dressing room, brushed her pretty curls back from her forehead, threw a pale pink scarf over her shoulders, arranged her flowers in her belt, and went into the dance hall.

The boys and girls were all talking at once, asking this, that, and the other of Roy Benton, but never waiting for a reply.

As soon as Laura made her appearance, the hubbub ceased. All eyes were upon her, filled with admiration and surprise.

Roy broke the silence by walking up to Laura, slipping her hand through his arm, and turning to his friends said: "Friends, meet Miss 1861." They all broke into a laugh, and as the orchestra began to play at that moment, Laura and Roy had the first dance together. Not only the first, but many after, including the last waltz, after which they strolled to her home under the light of the pale moon.

"Excuse me for asking, Laurie," said Roy, using the old name he had called her in days gone by, "but where did you get that dress?"

"Laura told him about the trunk Aunt Bess had left her, and then asked: "Why?"

"Why I don't know. You look so different from the rest of the girls. Sweeter somehow. Oh, Laurie, I've got five days more. Will you—? Couldn't we—? Oh, hang it all, I love you. Will you marry me before I go away?"

Before Laura went to bed that night she had a little chat with a picture of Aunt Bess. If you had been near, you would have heard her say: "I'm sorry for what I said about your trunk that other day. I am really glad you left it to me, instead of sorry. And dear Aunt Bess, I am sorry too that your sweetheart was killed. I must go to bed now, or mother will call me a sleepy-head and tell me my eyes look like two holes burned in a blanket. Good night, Aunt Bess, and thank you for the trunk."

THE JOY OF MOTHERHOOD

Came to this Woman after Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Restore Her Health

Ellensburg, Wash.—"After I was married I was not well for a long time and a good deal of the time was not able to go about. Our greatest desire was to have a child in our home and one day my husband came back from town with a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and wanted me to try it. It brought relief from my troubles. I improved in health so I could do my housework; we now have a little one, all of which I owe to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. O. S. Jeansonne, R. No. 3, Ellensburg, Wash.

There are women everywhere who long for children in their homes yet are denied this happiness on account of some functional disorder which in most cases would readily yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such women should not give up hope until they have given this wonderful medicine a trial, and for special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of 40 years experience is at your service.

Prosperous Connecticut Business Man Creates Trust Fund for Those Who Are "Weary and Heavy Laden."

Edmund A. Russ, a native of New York who came to Derby, Conn., when a young man and associated himself with the late Robert N. Bassett in the manufacture of corset steels, dress stays, etc., has prospered and now is willing to share his wealth with the less fortunate of his townspeople, says a dispatch from that city. He has created a trust fund of $100,000 to provide, as he says, "an income to be devoted to those in need, and to extend a helping hand to those who are weary and heavy laden."

Starting as a workman, Mr Russ gradually made his way until now he is president and treasurer of the R. N. Bassett company. At the time that he began work for the concern but about fifty hands were employed; now in a new plant in the neighboring city of Shelton over 1,200, mostly girls, are employed. The industry is one of the largest in the Naugatuck valley and one of the most profitable of its kind in this country.

Eleven years ago Mr. Russ showed his interest in the Elks of Derby and Shelton by surprising them at the dedication of the new Elks' home when he presented Derby lodge of Elks $20,000 to liquidate the mortgage on the home building. Although Mr. Russ was not an Elk, the local lodge received permission to make him one, so he was given a life membership in the order.

Too Much Honesty.

On going his rounds about midnight a policeman noticed an individual moving from house to house and trying the doors. He seized him by the collar and said:

"What are you doing here?"

"Oh, nothing particular. You see, I've found a latchkey and I'm merely trying it on the doors in order to restore it to the owner."—London Tit-Bits.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

(CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE—Cont'd.)

"Jean Vernocq saw his chance. A hundred million francs! To get hold of that sum, to obtain riches, luxury, power, and the means of buying health and strength from the world's great healers, all that he had to do was first to put away the different persons who stood between the inheritance and Florence, and then, when all the obstacles were overcome, to make Florence his wife.

"Jean Vernocq went to work. He had found among the papers of Hippolyte Fauville's old friend Langernault particulars relating to the Roussel family and to the discord that reigned in the Fauville household. Five persons, all told, were in his way: first, of course, Cosmo Mornington, next, in the order of their claims, Hippolyte Fauville, his son Edmond, his wife Marie, and his cousin Gaston Sauverand.

"With Cosmo Mornington, the thing was easy enough. Introducing himself to the American as a doctor, Jean Verocq put poison into one of the phials which Mornington used for his hypodermic injections.

"But in the case of Hippolyte Fauville, whose good will he had secured through his acquaintance with old Langernault, and over whose mind he soon obtained an extraordinary influence, he had a greater difficulty to contend with. Knowing on the one hand that the engineer hated his wife and on the other that he was stricken with a fatal disease, he took occasion, after the consultation with the specialist in London, to suggest to Fauville's terrified brain the incredible plan of suicide of which you were subsequently able to trace the Machiavellian execution.

"In this way and with a single effort, anonymously, so to speak, and without appearing in the business, without Fauville's even suspecting the action brought to bear upon him, Jean Vernocq procured the deaths of Fauville and his son and got rid of Marie and Sauverand by the devilish expedient of causing the charge of murder, of which no one could accuse him, to fall upon them. The plan succeded.

"There was only one hitch at the present time: the intervention of Inspector Verot. Inspector Verot died. And there was only one danger in the future: the intervention of myself, Don Luis Perenna, whose conduct Vernocq was bound to foresee, as I was the residuary legatee by the terms of Cosmo Mornington's will. This danger Vernocq tried to avert first by giving me the house on the Place du Palais-Bourbon to live in and Florence Levasseur as a secretary, and next by making four attempts to have me assassinated by Gaston Sauverand.

"He therefore held all the threads of the tragedy in his hands. Able to come and go as he pleased in my house, enforcing himself upon Florence and later upon Gaston Sauverand by the strength of his will and the cunning of his character, he was within sight of the goal.

"When my efforts succeeded in proving the innocence of Marie Fauville and Gaston Sauverand, he did not hesitate: Marie Fauville died; Gaston Sauverand died.

"So everything was going well for him. The police pursued me. The police pursued Florence. No one suspected him. And the date fixed for the payment of the inheritance was at hand.

"This was two days ago. At that time, Jean Vernocq was in the midst of the fray. He was ill and had obtained admission to the nursing home in the Avenue des Ternes. From there he conducted his operations, thanks to his influence over Florence Levasseur and to the letters addressed to the mother superior from Versailles. Acting under the superior's orders and ignorant of the meaning of the step which she was taking, Florence went to the meeting at the Prefect's office, and herself brought the documents relating to her.

"Meanwhile, Jean Vernocq left the private hospital and took refuge near the Ile Saint-Louis, where he waited the result of an enterprise which, at the worst, might tell against Florence, but which did not seem able to compromise him in any case.

"You know the rest, Monsieur les President," said Don Luis, concluding his statement. "Florence, staggered by the sudden revelation of the part which she had unconsciously taken in the matter, and especially by the terrible part played by Jean Vernocq, ran away from the nursing home where the Prefect had brought her at my request. She had but one thought: to see Jean Vernocq, demand an explanation of him, and hear what he had to say in his defense. That same evening he carried her away by motor, on the pretense of giving her proofs of his innocence. That is all, Monsieur le President."

Valenglay had listened with growing interest to this gruesome story of the most malevolent genius conceivable to the mind of man. And he heard it perhaps without too great disgust, because of the light which it threw by contrast upon the bright, easy, happy, and spontaneous genius of the man who had fought for the good cause.

"And you found them?" he asked.

"At three o'clock yesterday afternoon, Monsieur le President. It was time. I might even say that it was too late, for Jean Vernocq began by sending me to the bottom of a well, and by crushing Florence under a block of stone."

"Oh, so you're dead, are you?"

"Yes, Monsieur le President."

"But why did that villain want to do away with Florence Levasseur? Her death destroyed his indispensable scheme of matrimony."

"It takes two to get married, Monsieur le President, and Florence refused."

"Well——"

"Some time ago Jean Vernocq wrote a letter leaving all that he possessed to Florence Levasseur. Florence, moved by pity for him, and not realizing the importance of what she was doing, wrote a similar letter leaving her property to him. This letter constitutes a genuine and indisputable will in favor of Jean Vernocq.

"As Florence was Cosmo Mornington's legal and settled heiress by the mere fact of her presence at yesterday's meeting with the documents proving her descent from the Roussel family, her death caused her rights to pass to her own legal and settled heir.

"Jean Vernocq would have come into the money without the possibility of any litigation. And as you would have been obliged to discharge him after his arrest, for lack of evidence against him, he would have led a quiet life, with forteen murders on his conscience—I have added them up—but with a hundred million francs in his pocket. To a monster of his stamp, the one made up for the other."

"But do you possess all the proofs?" asked Valenglay eagerly.

"Here they are," said Perenna, producing the pocketbook which he had taken out of the cripple's jacket. "Here are letters and documents which the villain preserved, owing to a mental aberration common to all great criminals. Here by good luck, is his correspondence with Hippolyte Fauville. Here is the original of the prospectus from which I learned that the house on the Place du Palais-Bourbon was for sale. Here is a memorandum of Jean Vernocq's journeys to Alencon to intercept Fauville's letters to old Langernault.

"Here is another memorandum showing that Inspector Verot overheard a conversation between Fauville and his accomplice, that he shadowed Vernocq and robbed him of Florence Levasseur's photograph, and that Vernocq sent Fauville in pursuit of him. Here is a third memorandum, which is just a copy of the two found in the eighth volume of Shakespeare and which proves that Jean Vernocq, to whom that set of Shakespeare belonged, knew all about Fauville's machination. Here are his correspondence with Caceres, the Peruvian attache, and the letters denouncing myself and Sergeant Mazeroux, which he intended to send to the press. Here——"

"But need I say more, Monsieur le President? You have the complete evidence in your hands. The magistrates will find that all the accusations which I made yesterday, before the Prefect of Police, were strictly true."

"And he?" cried Valenglay. "The criminal? Where is he?"

"Outside, in a motor car, in his motor car, rather."

"Have you told my men?" asked M. Desmalions anxiously.

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet. Besides, the fellow is carefully tied up. Don't be alarmed. He won't escape."

"Well, you've foreseen every contingency," said Valenglay, "and the business seems to me to be finished. But there's one problem that remains unexplained, the one perhaps that interested the public most. I mean the marks of the teeth in the apple, the teeth of the tiger, as they have been called, which were certainly Mme. Fauville's teeth, innocent though she was. Monsieur le Prefet declares that you have solved this problem."

"Yes, Monsieur le President, and Jean Vernocq's papers prove that I was right. Besides, the problem is quite simple. The apple was marked with Mme. Fauville's teeth, but Mme. Fauville never bit the apple."

"Come, come!"

"Monsieur le President, Hippolyte Fauville very nearly said as much when he mentioned this mystery in his posthumous confession."

"Hippolyte Fauville was a madman and capable of reasoning with the most appalling logic. Some years ago, at Palermo, Mme. Fauville had a very bad fall, hitting her mouth against the marble top of a table, with the result that a number of her teeth, in both the upper and the lower jaw, were loosened. To repair the damage and to make the gold plate intended to strengthen the teeth, a plate which Mme. Fauville wore for several months, the dentist, as usual, took an impression of her mouth.

"M. Fauville happened to have kept the mould; and he used it to print the marks of his wife's teeth in the cake of chocolate shortly before his death and in the apple on the night of his death. When this was done, he put the mould with the other things which the explosion was meant to, and did, destroy."

Don Luis's explanation was followed by a silence. The thing was so simple that the Prime Minister was quite astonished. The whole tragedy, the whole charge, everything that had caused Marie's despair and death and the death of Gaston Sauverand: all this rested on an infinitely small detail which had occured to none of the millions and millions of people who had interested themselves so enthusiastically in the mystery of the teeth of the tiger.

ITALIAN PRISONERS IN TURKISH MINES

Rome, (by mail).—From our soldiers just back from Austrian prison camps through exchange, it is learned that Austrian political and military authorities some time ago began to send Italians captured in the war to Hungary, where they are hated worse than they could be in the provinces of Austria, properly speaking; and even to Asia Minor to work in the lead mines for the Turkish government.

There are two reasons for the change. The first one is to prevent the prisoners from becoming acquainted themselves with conditions in Austria and making them known to the Italian government. The second is that the contact of Italians with individuals of the oppressed nationalities gave a new spur to the movement started by them for freedom.

CHINA WANTS HAIR.

From he Washington Star.

China needs hair, human hair. Lack of shipping facilities has made it imperative that the old method of shipping Chinese hair here to be dyed and then shipped back again for manufacture into hair nets be abandoned for only one-way transportation, according to word received by the representative of the Y. W. C. A. war work council here.

Hair nets for foreign women were made by the women and girls of China in their own homes. It was a profitable business for German exporters and buyers before the war. At the beginning of this war this business was divided up between the Dutch, French, British and American merchants, and now the business has been seriously curtailed by the many "non-essential" decrees issued by the different belligerent countries, according to the council's representative.

Merchants are under the great economic test of war conditions. In this test those merchants will win lasting good will and prestige who stand fast for real service to their customers, eliminating all but the absolutely necessary profits.

Five members of the Princeton faculty have died fighting the Huns. The last to be announced was Prof G. H. Glover, who was a professor of German.

Airship's Bomb Splinters U-boat, Fires Magazine

London (by mail).—Out from a dense fog streaking the sea shot a small dirigible called a "blimp," manned by three allied flyers. Directly in front of them a mile away was a U-boat with its conning tower and decks well out of the water, says an account of one of the most successful encounters of a British aircraft with a German submarine.

Opening out his engine to its full capacity, the pilot steered straight for the German craft, many of whose crew were on deck. They had seen the airship approaching and immediately brought a quick firing gun into action. With shells bursting about them the airmen pushed on and soon were within effective machine gun range.

The observer used his gun to such good effect that with one drum he accounted for the submarine's gun crew. Thereupon the Germans, without waiting to rescue their wounded, began hurriedly to submerge.

Meanwhile the wireless operator of the "blimp" was busy sending out urgent signals to various patrol boats and submarine chasers known to be in the vicinity.

Climbing to a height of about 1,500 feet, the pilot now got ready to use the machine's heavy bombs. The U-boat, although submerged, was still easily visible, and taking careful aim through his sights the "blimp's" gunner pulled the trigger of the releasing gear.

The airship, released of a heavy weight, shot up like an express elevator in a New York skyscraper, but careless of its movements its occupants hung over watching the bomb sink swiftly until it struck the water, perhaps 200 feet ahead of the target.

When its fuse came into action, a flash of lightning seemed to rip through the dark depth of the ocean, and a peculiar brown, cloudy mass enveloped the fore part of the U-boat.

It seemed ages before the effect of the explosion reached the surface. Then, like a geyser, the water shot into the air. In the center of disturbance the gaping hull of the submarine slowly appeared and its crew could be seen leaping overboard.

The occupants of the "blimp" were badly shaken, but they escaped without injury.

TABBING LIFE.

We could almost write a Thanksgiving story out of the report of the census bureau on vital statistics for 1916. Seventy per cent of the people of the United States were within the registration area in 1915. In 1918 the percentage will be larger for the great state of Illinois, with nearly 6 per cent of the population of the entire country, has at last been admitted to this area.

Only 30 per cent of the people now live outside the area. When the state outside the area appropriate money to support their health departments they go at it in the dark, for their state government keeps no books on life and health.

The death rate for the year was 14 per 1,000—a littler higher than the rate for the last year or two. It was low considering the fact that the great world war was pinching our people. Some of the better rates among the countries in 1915 were—Austria, 10.7; Denmark, 12.8; England and Wales, 15.7; The Netherlands, 12.4; New Zealand, 9.7; Norway, 13.3; Sweden, 14.8; Switzerland, 13.3.

The war had so upset most of the countries in continental Europe that no statistics from them are available. In spite of three years of war, England and Wales had a death rate of 15.7, as against 14.7 for 1915.

The honor of having the lowest death rate goes to the state of Washington with 9.7. Other very low states are Colorado, 10.3; Utah, 10.4; Minnesota, 10.7, and Kansas, 10.9. Oregon is not in the registration area, and, therefore we do not know whether it has a low death rate or a high one. Washington has a young population and a good climate. It compares with New Zealand another well governed country with a young population and an excellent climate. New Zealand's rate in 1915 was 9.1.

The states with high death rates were: Maryland, 16.5; New Hampshire, 16.1; Maine, 15.7, and Vermont, 15.6. The principal reason for the high death rate in upper New England is the high proportion of old people.

The death rate from consumption continues to fall. Up to 1915 consumption was the principal cause of death. It is now second to heart disease and the indications are that a few years from now it will be in third place. The tuberculosis death rate in 1916 was 123.8 per 100,000, as against 127.7 in 1915; 146 in the period 1906 to 1910, and 170.6 in the period 1901 to 1905. A drop from 170.6 to 123.8 in 15 years represents a very considerable gain. Similar drop in the next 15 year periods would completely wipe out the disease. The reports show that the disease is declining most rapidly in those states and cities which have been fighting it longest and hardest.

Another piece of good news relate to the deaths from diarrhoea of children under 2 years of age. It was true the hot summer of 1916 caused a rise in the rate, but a fall from 96.2 in 1906-'1 to 65.6 in 1916 is no small gain. The death rate of babies under 1 year likewise shows a great gain.

Typhoid fever is falling year by year. The degenerative diseases show an increase, as has been the case for several years. Some day we will go after those diseases in earnest, and then they too will fall. The life insurance companies should lead in the fight.

Substitute for Cow's Milk.

From Popular Mechanics' Magazine.

A very palatable and entirely satisfactory substitute for cow's milk and cream is now being manufactured by mixing in water sterilized skim milk, produced by evaporation, and making an emulsion with cocoanut oil. An essential ingredient is a stabilizer, entirely harmless in character, which keeps the water and oil from separating. In large cities where the price of milk is high and a clean product is difficult to obtain, this substitute should be in considerable demand.

Advice From England.

From the London Times.

In many households cinders are the cause of a great waste of fuel—the amount depending on the housewife. If she is a careful woman, she sees the cinders and unburnt fuel are separated from the fuel ash and placed on the fire again. Unfortunately, many women consider it beneath their dignity to save cinders, and the whole is dumped into the ash pit. An analysis of the screened coke from household refuse recently taken from 20 different local authorities showed that 20 per cent represented cinders still available for heating purposes and 20 per cent ash.

Cows and Ships.

"How many ships are you going to get into the water this year?" Mr. Schwab asked Rear Admiral F. T. Bowles, assistant general manager of the Emergency Fleet corporation, in charge of construction at the Hog Island yards.

"Our program calls for 31, but we are going to try for 40," was the reply.

"Make it 50, and I'll see that you get the best Jersey cow in America," said Mr. Schwab. The admiral has a dairy farm in Massachusetts. "I'm going to begin picking out that cow right away," said Admiral Bowles.

Jeff Davis, "Hobo King"

New York by mail: Jeff Davis, "King of the Hoboes," rested from the labors of number one, on a king size throne of real hobo in Union Square park, a replica of the old Atlantic garden resort, it was said that there [illegible] said Jeff [illegible] loving [illegible] per flag means [illegible] flag means that [illegible] adopted the hobos.

Time was when the hobo, tramp and Atlantic ocean [illegible] warm [illegible] shelter [illegible] free [illegible] one who [illegible] has all [illegible] angered. And people [illegible] the change [illegible] difference between a hobo, a tramp and a bum. A hobo is a hobo who works when there is [illegible] to be got. A tramp never works.

Here we have men on the street [illegible] who would be the last on the world to be suspected of ever being "on the road." Theirs Mail George Perry and Elbridge Sly Bisbey and [illegible] a pack of others.

That shows what the war has done to the hobo. It has given him a chance to make good and he has. If the hobo can't fight, sell bonds or [illegible] Jeff was not referring to himself as an example, though he has sold $500,000 worth of bonds and [illegible] usually buys a number of war savings stamps. If he can't sell bonds he [illegible] them shows what a hobo will do.

Allies' Meat Purchases.

From the London Times.

Mr. Astor, replying to Mr. Cautley, says that the whole of the beef, mutton and bacon purchased in the United States by the food controller is purchased by the allied provisions commission. The purchases are actually effected through the United States food administration, which has also to be parties of [illegible] on behalf of all the allies. In the case of competitive bidding the allies be avoided, and a uniform price is paid by all the buyers interested, including the American army.

The frozen meat contracted for up to September 28 was approximately 198,000 tons, of which 164,000 tons had been shipped at that date, leaving a balance of 34,000 tons still to be shipped. The bacon and hams contracted for up to September 28 amounted to 52,326 tons, all of which had then been shipped except 43,350 tons. The contracts are placed with all the packing houses who are in a position to tender supplies to the United States food administration and whose tenders are approved by that administration. The prices paid for meat vary from month to month according to the condition of the market, but are fixed by the administration. These prices have ranged up to 26 cents (about 1s. 1d.) per pound. The prices paid for bacon and hams vary in like manner and also in the case of the different cuts. They have ranged from 20½ cents (about 10½d.) to 31½ cents (about 1s. 3½d.) per pound. It is not the case that the buyers considerably overbought," as Mr. Cautley suggested. The packers are asking to be allowed to postpone delivery and cannot accept orders which the food controller would be glad to place with them.

In reply to another question Major Astor says: "The quantities of white flour imported from the United States of America during the present cereal year are below our pre-war importation. A very small amount of imported flour is being released for admixture with G. R. flour for the loaf, and millers are allowed to diminish the extraction from wheat, thus providing an increased amount of offals for stock feeding."

Sunday Service.

From the Sydney Bulletin.

"Please, Sergeant Major, may I be excused from church parade? I'm an agnostic."

"Don't you believe in the 10 commandments, then?"

"No, I don't."

"Not even the one about keeping the Sabbath?"

"No."

Well, you're the very man I've been looking for to scrub out the canteen."

Looked Suspicious.

From the Winnipeg Telegram.

Old Jenkins was mad with rage. For 12 months he had taken the plate round at the local church every Sunday. Now someone else had been asked to perform the duty.

"I considers I have been grossly insulted," he said to a friend.

"But," said the latter, "I don't think there is any bad feeling toward you."

"I don't know about that," snorted Jenkins, "but it looks very suspicious. The boss, but it looks very suspicious. The boss has only got one arm."

ORIGIN OF WORD "ROORBACK"

Name Given to First Notable Campaign Lie, of Which James K. Polk Was the Victim.

In 1844 James K. Polk was nominated by the Democrats for president. After the ... on the Albany Journal published what purported to be an extract from Roorback's Journal of a trip through the South, represented to have been made some few years before, in which he told of seeing a gang of colored men being driven to the southern market, all branded "J. K. P.," as the property of James K. Polk. The object was to stigmatize Polk as a heartless slave owner. The publication was resented by the Democrats as a forgery and a libel on their candidate, and so it proved to be, for it turned out that there was no such person as Roorback and that the pretended journal was written by a disreputable politician of New York who posed as an abolitionist. The incident caused much hard feeling and the word roorback became a synonym for a campaign lie.

Dear Anna, Wallace and Wayne.

It has been some time since I wrote to you, so will try and write a few lines. I suppose you heard from home that I was in the hospital I have been moved from where I was first I am located in Vichy We are living in a French hotel. The American Government has rented them and uses them for hospitals. One of them was owned by a German some place This city is quite a summer resort, but they left about a month ago, but there are quite a few pretty French girls on the streets.

I suppose Klemme went wild when the glad news was received there This place sure was alive and the people were out celebrating, but what bothered us most was that we were broke or the boys would have had a time. Mine is going on five months now but hope to get some pretty soon Would like to buy a few souvenirs to take home It was six months the 10th that I left the U S, so I can wear a service stripe But that doesn't interest me as much as getting back Would sure like to be back by Christmas. I have not received any mail since I left the Co. I suppose the farmers are busy picking corn

Well, that is all the news as this leaves me feeling fine and hope it finds you the same.

Your brother,
Ben Coobs

Tell Wayne Uncle Ben will be home soon.

A SPECIAL OFFER FOR THIS MONTH ONLY

J. F. Ryan is putting on a special for December only, to introduce his wonderful preparation, "Kno-Sope," to the people of Klemme and vicinity who have not yet used it and who are urged to take advantage of the special offer. "Kno-Sope" will positively remove Dandruff, it is a tonic and shampoo combined in one. Ryan can prove to you that it will do all he claims for it. "Kno-Sope" dissolves the dandruff, absolutely removing it from the scalp, leaving the scalp clean and clear. "Kno-Sope" does not contain soap, or any form of soap, or other injurious chemicals which make the hair brittle and come loose. With a "Kno-Sope" shampoo you do away with rinsing the hair with water—this feature is very popular with the ladies. Ask those who have used "Kno-Sope" how they like it, ask the ladies who Ryan has shampooed what they think of it. This month only—a large 16-ounce bottle of "KNO-SOPE" for 50c.

RED CROSS IS LIKE A SHIP OF RESCUE

Always Travels in Troubled Waters and Answers Every Cry of Distress.

REST OF WORLD IS TOO BUSY

Christmas Roll Call Gives Every One a Chance to Take Part in Rebuilding Our Broken World.

The American Red Cross is perhaps like nothing so much as a stanch and loyal ship in a storm. It goes its way with senses tuned to catch any cry for help. And when that cry comes, it drives instantly and without fear straight to the place of distress, in flood and fire and disaster, just as the ship braves the perils of tumbling seas and hazardous rescue work. And, again, like the ship, it STANDS BY till those endangered are helped to safety.

Meanwhile the rest of the world, busy with its own problems, hurries home during these times of storm and stress, and draws down the blinds.

At least that is the way it has been in the past. But now comes the Christmas Roll Call. And it is a privilege, not a pest. It has no preferences. It plays no favorites. It makes no exceptions. It summons every man, woman and child in the country. It holds out to each one the blessed opportunity to ride on every Red Cross ship of mercy, to speed with every Red Cross train of relief that encircles the earth on their errands of mercy.

The only way for anyone to escape the possibility of some time having to accept CHARITY from the Red Cross is to become ONE with the Red Cross. For terrible calamity may come to us all. The money wealth of the Belgians was as nothing when they were stripped of clothing and food. And that feeling of oneness with the organization that our men on the other side have had during the war was not merely a great, but was the GREATEST, factor in enabling the Red Cross to give the efficient aid that it did.

Let us remember what Mrs. Margaret Laing, canteen worker in France, told about our boys who came out of the hospitals without money:

"Sometimes they would be able to make up a few cents between them," she said, "and sometimes they did not have anything. They would hang behind those who could pay. And they would look at the food so wistfully that it made one fight back the tears. The only way we could get them to take what they needed and craved was by saying: 'You know, boys, this was all paid for by your own people at home.' Then immediately their attitude would change and they would say: 'Why, yes, my mother' or 'my sister gives to the Red Cross.' And then how they would pitch in."

We are proud, we Americans. We do not want something for nothing. And here is our glorious opportunity to take the rest of our nation by the hand, and with all pride and dignity insure ourselves of our own help in time of adversity.

This Christmas Roll Call gives everyone a chance to be a "Dollar Man." And most of us can be one right at home. For by joining the Red Cross now and paying the dollar we become as actively engaged in the great work as if we were giving all of our time to it. We are merely making our dollar substitute for those of us who are too busy to give all of our time to the Red Cross.

Some of the great achievements of the Red Cross have been told over and over, until the facts may seem old to you. But on this occasion they are worth telling again. We should not forget, for instance, how the women of this nation, like our first Colonial mothers, turned suddenly into great manufacturers and made garments and supplies worth $50,000,000 last year. Nor let us forget how $111,000,000 was sent into the devastated countries during the time while men and women, giving their time for nothing, went with those dollars to see that they were used in the way they were most needed. And the American Red Cross sent medicines and anesthetics to the hospitals of France when they were almost unobtainable, so that our boys and their allies might have some relief from the torment of their wounds, and a chance at ultimate recovery.

There are so many things to tell that it is impossible to spread the whole story in this limited space. But each worker will know. For the letters that have come from the boys in the camps "over here" and from the fields "over there" have been full of the reasons. Ask the mother of any boy who was imprisoned behind the cruel lines where food was scarce even for the enemy army, but who got his 20 pounds of biscuits, pork and beans, cocoa and other good, wholesome things, every week.

The roofs are at hand everywhere. The reasons are manifest. Everyone should become a member of the widest, best and holiest crusade the world has ever known. Membership in the Red Cross should be more universal than taxes; as universal as the public school, public opinion, or our own public government.

The Clove in Medicine.

Though the clove has had for centuries and still has an honorable standing in the culinary art as a condiment, it has long held a place in the distillation of liquor and in medicine. Nearly everybody knows something about oil of cloves, and most persons at one time or another have used it as a remedy or a palliative for toothache, it being a valuable local anaesthetic which has found use in professional dentistry as a means of lowering the sensitiveness of the dentine of a tooth undergoing repairs.

Bees as Weather Guides.

Bees are good weather guides, being sluggish and inactive in the morning if the day is going to be wet, and active and lively if it is going to turn out bright and fine.

SHRAPNEL

As may be noticed that our verbal batteries such as they are, are not directed toward our loyal German fellowcitizens, but toward the twin evils, Kaiserism and Kultur. Our conception of Kaiserism is that of a government composed of a hereditary military autocrat supported by a ruling class of war lords and junkers; a government in which the common people have no real voice and but little influence, whose sole duty is to "trust and obey." And our conception of German Kultur based upon observation in the world's was consists of brutality and frightfulness as a means towards an end We war on both. We are for a government "of the people, for the people and by the people;" a government if you please, carried on in thei nterests of the mass as against class. And this war between these two forms of government will go on until one or the other becomes the ruling power. The main question at the present time, no matter what your nationality may be, is, "What form do you favor?" We are for a government that spells the greatest good to the greatest number.

It is sincerely to be hoped by all lovers of freedom, that the countries that have shaken off their autocratic kings, kaisers and czars, may be able to emerge from the slough of bolshevism and anarchy into which they have become mired, and find solid footing in a stabilized representative form of government such as these United States, England, France and their colonies and dependencies enjoy And it should be the business of those countries that enjoy these privileges, to assist by advice and counsel those nations thrown upon their own resources who are groping their way through much tribulation toward constitutional freedom.

Now that our president has left us for foreign lands we have somewhat that feeling of lonesomeness a child has whose parents have gone for a few days visiting at a neighbors, and left it at home to amuse itself as best it could. However much we may differ with him and his party in some of their policies we do not forget for a moment that he is our president, elected by the voice of the people and a man whom we believe to be in the main, devoted to the best interests of the country at large. Therefore we wish him and Mrs. Woodrow also, a pleasant journey, a good time abroad and a safe return.

German phrases thrown into the linguistic scrap heap, there being no further use for them: "Gott strafe England" und "Gott mit uns," "Deutschland uber Alles" und "Nach Paris" und "Die wacht am Rein." Anyways the Belgians, Poilus, Tommies and Yanks seem to be doing all the wachting am Rein" necessary at the present time.

We do not hear the prayer, "Gott strafe England" offered quite so often as formerly. It seems that a rebound has occurred somehow and the greater strafing has been inflicted upon those who wished it onto England. It sometimes happens that way.

When those battle scarred veterans of the trenches in France and Belgium return to good old United States they should receive a welcome worthy of their deeds of valor, such a welcome as was accorded the Union veterans at the close of the Civil War when they marched in triumph down Pennsylvania avenue in the "Grand Review" in Washington, amid the plaudits of thousands of cheering spectators. Again may that song be sung that was upon every tongue and the tune played upon every band whose refrain went something like this:

"When Johnnie comes marching home again,
Hurrah! Hurrah!
When Johnnie comes marching home again,
Hurrah! Hurrah!
When Johnnie comes marching home again,
The boys will shout, and the girls turn out,
And the town'll go crazy just about
When Johnnie comes marching home again."

Witness Historical Naval Event

KLEMME YOUNG MAN VIEWS GERMAN NAVAL SURRENDER

Verner Lewis, who enlisted in the navy last spring and who later became a member of the gun crew on the U. S. S. Arkansas, was fortunate enough to be in the flotilla that brought in the surrendered German navy.

Along with young Lewis is perhaps another Klemme young man, Art McElmurray, who last heard from was also on the same boat with Lewis, the two having enlisted together.

The surrender of the German navy is the greatest act of it's kind in the history of the world. To be a witness at such can be considered a very great privilege and one can well be proud to have been a participant in the event.

Klemme can well be proud of her young men who have entered the great war for World Freedom.

VICTIM OF PNEUMONIA

Mrs. Ellen Hawes, Only Daughter Of Mr. and Mrs. M. Palmby of Wykeham, Dies After Short Illness of Influenza

Just as we go to press we learn of the death of Mrs. Ellen Hawes, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Palmby. She came down with influenza on Saturday or Sunday and was not considered dangerously ill until early Wednesday morning, after which time she gradually grew worse, passing away shortly before noon.

In the death of Mrs. Hawes we fully and keenly realize our loss. She was a true friend and her devotion to those she loved would make a bright chapter in any life. Nothing but the thought of the loving hand that removed her can reconcile us to her absence. Her retiring nature led her to hide her best qualities from public gaze, but they were revealed to those who enjoyed her acquaintance, yet it was in her home that her true worth was most conspicuous. She was a kind-loving mother and daughter, and her devotion to the family circle had no limit.

Her husband, James Hawes, died about two years ago, since which time she and the children have made their home with her parents.

She leaves to mourn her death three small children, two girls and one boy, the oldest being five and the youngest two; also her father and mother and three brothers all living in this vicinity, and all were with her at the time of her death. The time of the funeral is not known at this time.

The sorrowing family is extended the sympathy of the entire community.—Press, Eagle Bend, Minn.

KLEMME SOLDIER SENDS BACK GERMAN HELMET

Last Friday F. A. Arnold was greatly pleased to receive a genuine German helmet through the mail. The sender is Frank E. Adams, serving with the American Forces in Co. E, 108th Engineers.

The helmet was enclosed in a burlap sack with the address sewn on the outside.

As a souvenir of the great war the helmet is the first to reach Klemme It is not very heavy but is made of light steel, pumpkin shaped so it will fit the "dome" of the intended wearer. However, the Fritz who wore it received his for the helmet is literally riddled with shrapnel holes.

Those wishing to examine the helmet will find it on display at the First National Bank.

THE KLEMME TIMES

RAY A. JORGENSEN, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

The problem of providing beds in London for officers and men on leave was, and doubtless still is, very serious. One of the frequent mentions of the subject in the London Times includes the paragraph: This is not to say that the Americans now escape the general problem. There are 279 beds at the Eagle Hut, where the needs of the American private soldier are looked after, and towards the week end all are taken by 2 o'clock in the afternoon. They go to the men who come first, whatever their nationality. It often happens that as many as 200 Americans have to be sent away, the beds which some of them might have occupied having gone to Englishmen, Australians, Canadians, and others. According to those who manage the hut, there is no cause for complaint here. The system of first come first served "works out all right." Americans displace Englishmen in English quarters, and American officers have before now found rest in British Y. M. C. A.'s. One of the worst instances of "roughing it" is the case of 31 women workers of the Y. M. C. A., who came to London on their way from the United States to Paris, lost their luggage, and without so much as a comb or toothbrush were obliged to spend the night in a large bath room at a hotel

From England comes the word: In a meeting of the woman's party in Queen's Hall Mrs. Drummond said that we must never forget the atrocities and cruelties of the Germans. Some people thought that the German people and their kaiser were different, but there was really no difference between them, and never would she knowingly shake hands wth a German man or woman The women's party, she declared, was not going to return a labor government at the election, and no woman should use her vote to support a labor candidate until the labor party had first purged itself of bolshevism and pacifism. While from our own New York state we hear that the Woman's Republican Club has voted against the feeding of Germany by the United States and against all trade with Germany, against emigraton of Germans from Europe, and for the return of all German aliens in America to Germany

Alexandra Konta, of New York, named by Alien Property Custodian Palmer as an agent in negotiations through which the German government sought to buy newspapers in this country before the United States entered the war, admitted to a Senate committee that he had communicated with Dr Bernard Dernberg on the subject of the purchase of a New York newspaper The committee is investigating brewers' activities and German propaganda. Konta said he wrote to Dr Dernberg on the subject and that he was inspired by a desire to help the kaiser's representative carry out his plans to get publicity for Germany, to get a newspaper that would be hostile to prohibition, and to earn a commission. In his testimony before the committee Konta told of meeting Hans Tauscher and his wife, Madam Gadski, a grand opera singer, both of whom, he said, were "100 per cent pro-German."

The British army is rendering great assistance to devastated and impoverished northern France and Flanders. During November the army furnished to the American commission for relief in Belgium 20 000,000 rations, which were badly needed, for quick distribution among the hungry people. This aid came at a time when the commission was unable to get provisions through speedily enough from Holland British officers and soldiers are also giving largely from their own stores, and the British army is providing great quantities of kerosene and candles for the homes and shops; otherwise darkness would prevail in most of the towns. Succor of a different sort but equally valuable, is being afforded by transportation of the refugees This timely aid saved many who would otherwise have perished by the wayside

"An entirely fictitious banjo" was very instrumental in raising funds for a seaman's home in London Says the London Times: Someone came on to the stage playing this invisible instrument Mr Robey bought it for $20. Everybody heard it, but nobody saw it When Mr. Robey plucked at its unseen strings music swam into the theater When he dropped the mysterious thing there was a jangle of discordant wires He sold the banjo to someone in a box, and music came from the box A mystified and amused audience entered into the spirit of the game and bids of $25 and $50 came from all parts of the house, always with the concession that the banjo could be sold again.

A wireless appeal for medical aid to check a serious epidemic of influenza in the Society Islands, situated in the South Pacific ocean approximately 3,000 miles from San Francisco, was received by the Associated Press from its correspondent there The message said that the entire population of Tahiti and Moorea had been stricken by a malignant form of influenza and the supply of necessary medicines is nearly exhausted. The governor of the islands, which are under French control appeals officially to the outside world for help, asking that a fast steamer with doctors and medical supplies be sent immediately to Paheete from the nearest port. Honolulu, the nearest port from which aid could be sent, is 2,000 miles distant.

The League to Enforce Peace has adopted a new platform, which calls for a league with judicial, legislative, administrative and executive functions and powers. It recommends that the charter members shall be the United States and the other nations "associated as belligerents in winning the war." At the same time, it does not close the doors upon the Teutonic powers forever, because it declares as an ultimate ideal that the league should be as "universal as possible."

THE "FLU" AND CUPID WRECK TELEPHONE FORCE

Ida Grove, Ia., Dec. 14.—The "flu" and cupid have been creating havoc with the telephone service in this city for several weeks past. The former put four of the five women employes out of the service for two weeks, and during the past week matrimony has taken two more from the service. Miss Lottie Dutler, one of the most experienced of the operators, was married last Thursday at Kingsley, Ia., to John Urban, a well known young man of this city, and yesterday, Miss Vida May Nelson, another of the most experienced employes, was united in marriage to James F. Truelock, a marine, who is home on furlough. Mr. Truelock has made 10 trips across the water with United States transports during the 12 months he has been in the service and expects to return to Baltimore to his ship, the Von Steuben, for one more trip about December 20 before he is mustered out.

SILVER CHEVRON IS MARK

Honor Men Who Failed to Get Across the Sea.

By Associated Press.

Washington, D C. Dec. 12.—Officers and men of the army who failed to reach the fighting front by reason of the duties imposed upon them in this country will not be denied recognition of their services in the winning of the war By direction of President Wilson as commanderinchief of the army General March, chief of staff today issued an order that hereafter such men shall be entitled to wear a silver chevron similar to the gold one authorized for service overseas

"The president," said the order, "desires, on behalf of the nation, to express his appreciation of the vitally essential and self sacrificing service given by officers and men whom military necessity has held and is holding for performance of duties outside the theater of active operations. Their contribution to military success is no less than that of those who have had opportunity for service at the front. On them devolved the creation of the great armies of the nation and their supply with the equipment and stores indispensable to military operations. The country holds in grateful appreciation the fundamental service they have rendered in winning the war"

CROP VALUES FOR 1918 TOTAL ENORMOUS SUM

Iowa Corn Heads the List With Feeding Value Double That of 1917 Crops.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 13.—Total value of the soil crops of Iowa for 1918 is $862,215,117, an increase over 1917 of $40,000,000, and nearly $300,000,000 greater than in 1916. These are the official figures compiled by crop director Charles Reed and read today to the state board of agriculture in session at the state house.

Corn heads the list with a total value of $488,712,710. The total crop this year was 356,677,000 bushels, or 54.4 bushels per acre, worth $1.23 per bushel. Crop Director Reed explains that this crop, which was called "disappointing," is only 2.1 bushels below the average of the past 10 years, and the total crop has been exceeded but four times in 29 years. The feeding value is nearly double that of the 1917 crop.

Oats is the next highest in value, totaling $142,203,200, the crop averaging 40.2 bushels to the acre, and the price is given as 64 cents. The total yield was 222,192,500 bushels. The tame hay crop is valued at $65,697,448, and wild hay crop at $9,513,280. The value of pastures and grazing is estimated at $90,000,000.

The winter wheat crop, amounting to 3,920,000 bushels, is valued at $7,920,036, and the spring wheat crop, totaling 10,564,600 bushels, is valued at $21,063,354.

Director Reed reports that the campaign to increase the winter wheat acreage this fall for next season's crop has brought large results in those sections of the state where the crop is usually grown.

"It is impossible at this time to state what the acreage is, but it is probably somewhat less than the 1,000,000-acre goal set," he reports. "The crop is entering the winter in unusually good condition, 95 per cent of the acreage having made 'good to rank' growth and has become well established. Four per cent has germinated, but made little showing above ground, and only 1 per cent has apparently not germinated."

BERLIN WOMEN ADD TO PERILS

Facing Starvation Through Loss of Jobs, They Join Bolshevists —Solf Finally Quits Cabinet Position—Ebert Controls.

By Associated Press.

Berlin, (Wednesday). Dec. 11.—The minister of foreign affairs has handed in his resignation, which has been accepted by the cabinet.

The foreign secretary's retirement does not come as a surprise as his relations with the independent socialist wing of the Ebert Haase cabinet reached the straining point some time ago.

Dr. Solf's continued presence in the government has been vehemently objected to by the more radical of the German political elements as savoring too much of the old German regime and a campaign has been in progress against him.

The demands for his retirement were specifically voiced in resolutions adopted by the soldiers' and workmen's council at Berlin and emphatic calls from Bavaria that he be eliminated.

WOMEN ARE ANGRY.

Berlin, Dec. 13.—Thousands of women, facing starvation through the loss of their war jobs, are adding to the perils of bolshevism in Germany.

The women munitions workers, who are rapidly being demoralized, are unable to find employment, as practically all factories are idle through lack of raw materials. Added to their ranks are thousands who have been engaged in similar occupations. Some have obtained employment on farms, but the great majority face a serious situation.

The Spartacus group has seized the opportunity to augment their ranks with these women, hoping not only to obtain their political support but to influence other men through them. Twenty-one million women are said to be eligible to vote for representatives in the national assembly.

It was estimated today that there are more than 200,000 illegitimate children in Germany as a result of war conditions.

Berlin Wednesday, Dec. 11.—The German cabinet anticipating a refusal by the allies to deal with the present government and the soldiers and workmen's council, according to the Tageblatt of Berlin, is considering convoking the Reichstag to give the government a parliamentary basis.

Berlin, Wednesday, Dec. 11.—The reichstag session, the Tageblatt says, may be expected to begin next week.

Copenhagen, Dec. 13.—The Prussian guard returning to Berlin is reported to have sworn allegiance to Chancellor Ebert's government. The famous unit which numbers thousands of the best German troops, was enthusiastically welcomed by the people.

Definite alignment of the Prussian guard on this side is believed to place Ebert in a position where he need not fear the growing strength of the bolshevist element under Karl Liebnecht. With the formation of his proposed socialist army this would give the chancellor a great advantage in military strength.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 13.—Germany will not be asked to pay the full allied war debt, as Lloyd George is advocating, provided President Wilson's principles obtain in the peace conference.

Officials here privately declare that much of the British talk of making Germany pay this enormous debt—Lloyd George estimates it at $120,000,000,000—is election talk. The American government believes Germany will be about "cleaned" financially when she is done with paying merely the restorative indemnities to be asked of her for Belgium and northern France and elsewhere.

Germany will be working for the allies a long time ahead and will pay in the sweat of her brow, in lowered living conditions and in taxes on all for her brutality, and the suffering her autocracy imposed upon the rest of the world

President Wilson believes in a stern justice for Germany.

Neither he nor any other American official believes Germany should escape such punishment as will go with territorial readjustments and restorative indemnities.

But President Wilson has declared against "punitive indemnities," and if officials here are correctly informed, he will oppose the Lloyd George plan of seeking to make Germany pay the allied war costs.

Lloyd George will have hearty support from the president in seekin to abolish conscription.

Revised Armistice.

Concrete evidence in this support is seen here in the fact that the war department has privately let congressmen know that at present there is no plan for universal military training in this country.

Germany is soon to face a revision of the armistice terms. The limit expired yesterday. The revised version probably will vary only slightly from the one previously in effect.

CHRISTMAS STORY

A SMALL IRISH BOY

WANTED TO BE WITH HIS MA

Mrs. Murphy Wanted to Be Held in His Mother's Arms, and Not Go to the Creche.

Mrs. Murphy worked in the feather factory. All day long she sorted and bound the feathers. Always the air of the room in the nursery was white with feathers and would cling to her dress and nestle in her hair. When she came home at night her little son would clap his hands in glee, and chase the fluffy, white bits about the room. The next morning Mrs. Murphy would wrap the boy in her warm shawl, gather him in her arms, lock the door of her tenement and carry him to the day nursery. There she would place the boy on the floor and unwind the shawl, kiss him hastily and speed away to the feather factory.

"Goodby, me sweatheart," she would say, "mither," the little lips would echo while one small hand would gravely wave adieu.

The very first morning that Mrs. Murphy appeared at the door of the nursery with the boy, and had carefully unwound her heavy shawl, the baby from the shawl had clung to baby's yellow curls, so that his head was all fuzz and fluff and feathers.

"Oh!" here's a little goosie," exclaimed the matron's assistant, mother-frightened child. And somehow the name had reached Limerick court and had clung to him as tenaciously as the feathers to his mother's shawl.

Goosie loved the trips to and from the nursery. The heavy shawl was so soft and warm, and it was such fun to pick the feathers from its folds and throw them into the air. But best of all he liked to feel the caress of his mother's arms and the pressure against her breast and her warm cheek close to his. The little excursions which Goosie had his mother made each morning and evening were all too short for the boy. Even when she kissed him goodbye at the nursery door his face would lengthen. He was thinking how good it would be to be cuddled in those strong arms all one day.

"Mother dear," he announced, tremulously, one morning as she was getting him ready for the nursery, "it's thinkin' I would stay at home today mesilf."

The lines about Mrs. Murphy's mouth softened and, with head tilted slightly to one side and her two rough, red hands upon her hips, she stepped back several paces and proudly surveyed Goosie.

"It's workin' I am today, me swateheart," she said. Then quick to note the boy's face lengthen, she added "There's polles upon polles o' fithers sort."

"It's thinkin' I am that not all the little biys' mithers be sortin' fithers," protested Goosie.

"Right ye are, me swatie," answered Mrs. Murphy, bravely, "but a blissin' I thot I have me eyes and me hands full sortin' o' fithers, to buy the bit o' bread and mate for ye, me little mon."

This was a new thought to Gossie. It had never occurred to him that his mother spent all her days among the feathers to buy him bread. Carefully he picked one of the feathers from the shawl. He did not look up, but his mother could see the lips quiver and heard, "and—and wishin' ye to stay home and hold me in yer arms."

One fear persisted in getting away from Mrs. Murphy. It trickled down her cheek and splashed upon Goosie's shoulder.

"Bliss ye, me heartie," she burst forth, "it's lonkin' I would to be doin' the vera same thing, and I'm thinkin' it but a bit of a wholle before we'll be enjl'in' the Christmas togither."

"Is the Christmas for thim as sorts fithers?" asked Goosie anxiously.

"It's for the vera same," replied Mrs. Murphy, reassuringly.

Goosie's face had brightened perceptibly at the mention of Christmas, but it was apparent that his mind was not quite at ease. He took one step nearer his mother, clutched the fold of her dress nervously and looked into her face.

"And—and mither, will ye be holdin' me in yer arms the Christmas day?" he begged, with a quaver.

Mrs. Murphy's face was seamed and her hands were hard and horny, but she loved this quaint, little son of hers. She was proud of his yellow curls, and his strange ways, and when she looked down into the small anxious face upturned to hers that morning she caught him impulsively to her breast and hugged him so tightly that mother and son in a moment were laughing in high glee.

Many were the consultations Mrs. Murphy and Goosie held the next few days concerning the approaching festival. As the holiday neared the boy became greatly excited and the journey home from the nursery enhanced the little fellow's high spirits. The streets and the store windows gay in Christmas garb stirred the boy. In great glee he would tell the feathers from his mother's shawl as she was hastening home with him in her arms and send them floating high into the air.

"Mither dear," he confided to his mother one night as they were entering Limerick court, "it's thinkin' I am I'll never be crying again."

Mrs. Murphy smiled and made no answer, but she hugged Goosie in a manner that made him wonder.

Christmas week proved a busy one at the Murphy tenement. Each of the three rooms must be made sweet and clean for the gay day that was coming, and Goosie's clothes must be washed and mended and nearly pressed and it must all be done after a long day's work among the feathers. Goosie lent his small strength and a world of encouragement.

"It's not knowin' I was mither dear," he explained in the midst of the preparations, how to get grits into the corners."

When the days that remained before the day of all days to Goosie could be counted on the fingers of one hand, the child was nearly beside himself with joy. When his mother was carrying him to and fro from the nursery his feet and hands beat fast time so that she could scarcely keep him in the folds of the shawl.

The day before Christmas Mrs. Murphy and her son were up before daylight. There was work to be done which Mrs. Murphy wished to finish before she started for the nursery with Goosie. The little fellow was very talkative and kept pleying his mother with questions.

"It's thinkin' I am mither dear, who made the Christmas," he inquired Goosie.

"It's the birthday of the Christ Child," explained Mrs. Murphy, as she poured the water from the tub into his tub.

"His as was in the pictures?" asked Goosie.

"The very same," responded the mother.

Goosie pondered over the meaning of the day was not clear to him and he intended to ask further questions when his mother, who was ready to hang out the clothes, asked him to open the door.

The Murphy tenement was on the top floor of a three story block. The back door opened onto the roof of a two story building which adjoined the one in front. A large clothes reel on the roof of this building was available for drying purposes. Goosie opened the door and his mother stepped out with her basket of clothes. The boy followed.

It was a cold day and the wild gusts of wind, which caught the dampened clothes and stripped them out like whipcords. The snapping clothes, the bare roof and the biting wind contrasted harshly with the warmth and cozyness of the little kitchen. Goosie shivered and clung to his mother's skirts.

"Mither, dear," he demanded anxiously, "it's tomorrow the Christmas is, and it's a-holdin' me in yer arms yer'll be?"

Mrs. Murphy had two clothespins in her mouth and her hands were full of clothes. With one hand she reached for the pins. One of these fell to the roof and rolled near the edge. The wind was tugging at her skirts and snatching at the garments in her hands. Mrs. Murphy heard the boy's question, but all her life the demands of business and the pressure of hard work had received her attention first.

"Be lolvely, swatie and fetch me the clothespins," she urged.

Goosie loosened his hold on her skirts and stepped gingerly toward the errant pin. There was a glorious look upon his face. The joy of a whole day with his mother nearer than arm's length was good fortune that might prove as elusive as the feathers he had chased so many times, and he wished to hear again from his mother's own lips that tomorrow was really and truly the first of all days.

Suddenly there was a [illegible] among the chimney pots, and a great gust of wind came tearing across the waste of roof. There was a deafening sound and a huge piece of the building parted at the roof corner, hung for an instant, and pushed down into the areaway in Limerick court.

Goosie had heard the howl of the wind, and had stopped near the edge of the roof, trembling with apprehension. When the crash came, terror overspread the boy's face. He turned and held out appealing hands to his mother. An instant more and the great sweeping wind struck him. He tottered, clutched the air and fell over the edge with a sharp cry. The little body struck the pavement below with a thud.

Mrs. Murphy had heard the onrush of the wind, she had seen the terror that had marked her son's face, she had noted the outstretched hands, but she had stood irresolute. When the wind swept against the boy, and hurled him over the edge, the blood surged through her veins and her knees trembled. She tottered to the edge and, looking down into the court below saw a limp little heap.

"Climb up again me heartie," she begged hoarsely. The only response from below was a stiffled moan.

"My Gawd! My Gawd!" groaned the woman, and sped across the roof, and through the tenament and down the stairs. Her face was white.

The Stigmata.

On the mountkin, on the plains below
Each morning broke in silent waves afar;
In the heart of France, late aglow
With prayer and passion, silence like a star.

Where there had passed an angel in the night
Setting to heaven his last surrender up;
Unless and worthless am I in His sight,
And yet His servant!" He had drained the cup
Of ultimate sacrifice, when sudden shone
In orb spread sunrise on the morning skies,
Over it flashed and nearer Seraph-Son
Of God, wast Thou! Thyself revealed unto his eyes,
Six great wings spread cross wise round the form
Of Christ upon the tree before him bent;
There was a voice celestial sounding warm
Secrets of heaven unto his soul attent.
There was the glory and the anguish twined
Those immortal brows; while darts of fire
Hands and feet and side on his inclined,
Setting half way the urge of his desire.
Side—ah, torment mixed with joy!—
What wound
Of love has pierced? Through either hand there goes
Hallowed, grievous nail; unto the ground
His feet are clenched as with love's iron blows.
There were his hands God-sealed, and so his feet
Printed on God's way, and so his side
An open blooming in love's fire-heat,
That to the little griefs of earth he died.

Uncle Wiggily's Christmas.

By Howard R. Garis.

Uncle Wiggily was sitting in the parlor of his hollow stump bungalow, out in the kitchen was Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy, the ruskin lady housekeeper.

"I wonder if Santa is going to get up a Christmas dance for tomorrow that we'll all enjoy, or anything," said Uncle Wiggily to himself, as he sniffed the roasted carrots, broiled turnips, frizzled cabbage and scrambled lettuce. And then the bunny rabbit gentleman felt so good and happy that he sang:

"Two more days before Christmas,
In the bungalow snug,
The [illegible] was a-going [illegible]
The kitchen was filled up with smells of delight
For dear old St. Nicholas would be there that night!"

"Hip! Peanuts are for you!" laughed [illegible] she looked in from the [illegible] room, a dab of flour on the [illegible] her nose and jelly dripping from her whiskers. "You seem happy [illegible] Uncle Wiggily," she [illegible]

"I am," spoke the bunny. "I hope everyone has as nice a Christmas as I'm going to have. Hurray! It'll be tomorrow! I can hardly wait!"

And that's the way it was all over Woodland, where the animal boys and girls, Sammie and Susie Littletail, the rabbits, Johnnie and Billie Bushytail, the squirrels, Jackie and Percie Bow Wow, the puppies; Jacko and Jumpo Kinkytail, the monkeys, and Curley and Floppy Twistytail, the piggie boys, each and every one was getting ready to hang up his or her stocking or wait to see what was left for them under the Christmas tree.

The morning turned into afternoon, and the afternoon began to turn into night, soon it would be the night before Christmas. Little soft snowflakes began to sift down from the clouds.

"Hurray!" cried Uncle Wiggily, as he saw them. "There will be a white Christmas!"

And all the animal children said "Hurray!"

Then it became dark. It was time for little animal boys and girls to go to bed, so Santa Claus, Kris Kringle, Sant Nicz, or whoever brings the presents could begin to start on the journey.

Uncle Wiggily was scurrying around here there, everywhere, tipping his tall silk hat on one side so he could see through the snowflakes. On the duck pond some of the animal children were having their last glide over the ice before going home. Uncle Wiggily took off his skates, folding himself up on his rheumatism crutch.

Then it became very dark. All was still in Woodland, the squirrels and rabbits went to their underground homes, the puppy dogs to their kennels, the ducks and chickens to their pens and coops and the birds to their nests.

Through the swirling snowflakes went somebody in a big fur overcoat with red flannel trimmings around the edges and a ruching of lace. From nest to burrow, from burrow to coop and so on went someone.

The night passed on silently and in the morning all the animal boys and girls awakened and cried:

"Merry Christmas! Merry Christmas!"

"Merry Christmas!" answered the fathers and mothers and uncles and aunts and cousins and so on.

"Let's go over and see Uncle Wiggily and wish him Merry Christmas!" said Johnnie Bushytail, the squirrel, who had a new sled.

"And see what presents he got," added Jackie Bow Wow who was jingling his new skates.

"And we'll wish him Merry Christmas, softly," spoke Susie Littletail, who was playing with a new doll named Julia Happiness Huckleberryple.

So the animal children, with their new presents went over to see the bunny uncle.

He was just getting ready to sit down to a nice dinner which Nurse Jane had ready for him.

"Merry Christmas, everybody," cried Uncle Wiggily. "Come in and eat."

"Merry Christmas!" answered the animal children.

And, as they were eating, Alice Wibblewobble, the duck girl, looked out of the window and said:

"Oh look at the two poor tramps!" And there was the skillery-salery alligator going along paw in paw with the Fuzzy fox. They looked cold and hungry.

"Poor things," said Uncle Wiggily. "They have no Christmas dinner, I fear. We'll invite them in with us."

"And have them bite?" cried Johnnie Bushytail. "Oh, no!"

"They won't bite anything on Christmas but the dinner I'll give them," softly said Uncle Wiggily, and the fox and the alligator were so korlostrated and surprised at being invited in, and so ashamed that they acted as nicely as heart could wish at the dinner table, biting no one.

"Merry Christmas to everybody!" cried Uncle Wiggily, and every one had a most jolly time, with enough cranberry sauce to go around and have some left over, and the fox and the alligator took some home to their families.

So Uncle Wiggily had his Christmas and he liked it ever so much, and so did the animal children, and now I hope you will all have a Merry Christmas, and if the wishbone doesn't try to jump over the nut cracker into the celery yard, I will tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's big dinner.—Copyright, 1917, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Coblenz Civilians Do Not Take Attitude of Beaten People.

By Herbert Bailey.

London Times cable service. (Copyright 1918, by Public Ledger Co.) to The Block City Tribune.

COBLENZ, Dec. 13.—(by wireless.)—The American troops at Coblenz have met a reception somewhat more cordial than they did at Treves. American officers who saw the Third German army, praise the efficient manner in which the enemy withdrawal is being conducted. Here, as in Treves, the home going Germans received a great welcome from the civil population. All Germans assert the army returned unbeaten. Certainly the attitude of the inhabitants of Coblenz is not that of a beaten people.

The food conditions in Coblenz appear to be similar to that in Treves. All surplus food is in the hands of speculators and can be bought by those who have the money. The poorer people are strictly rationed, but what they can get is sold cheap, at prices fixed by the burgomaster.

Persistent rumors are current here that Hindenburg has stopped the demobilization of the German army and has refused to comply with the demands of the socialists that the returning soldiers be sent as soon as possible to their homes.

BADGER PROPOSES NAVAL INCREASES

Wants American Navy the Equal of Any—Strength of German Sub Fleet.

By Associated Press.

Washington, Dec. 13.—Appropriations to provide a navy for the United States by 1925 as large as that of any other country, was urged today by Admiral Badger, of the general board of the navy, before the House naval committee.

One hundred and fifty German and seven Austrian submarines were sunk in the war prior to August, Admiral Badger told the committee, quoting reports from Admiral Sims. He said the Germans had built 331 submarines and that the Austrian underwater fleet comprised only 35 craft, 10 of which were obsolete.

On August 1, last, Admiral Badger said the Germans had 119 submarines operating in the Atlantic and 28 in the Mediterranean. Had the United States been fighting alone in the present war, the admiral said, its lack of ships would have been serious and perhaps fatal, because it has been learned that the navy must be strong enough not only to protect from invasion, but also to drive the enemy's navy from the seas.

He told the committee that the country never has been and probably never will be again as well prepared to build a powerful fleet as at present.

Hundreds of thousands of men have become skilled in shipyards which have been building vessels for the merchant marines, he said, and as fast as these yards are released from that work the training and experience of these men should be utilized to the greatest possible extent.

GERMAN PEOPLE WELCOME ALLIES

Occupation of Cities as Stipulated By Armistice, Nearly Completed—Appreciate Protection.

By United Press.

London, Dec. 13.—Occupation of German towns under the terms of the armistice is nearly completed. A British advance guard has entered Bonn and taken possession of a bridge over the Rhine at this point.

An American commission sent ahead of the troops to outline the bridgehead boundaries reported their astonishment at the heartiness of the Germans' cooperation. Full information was furnished the commission by inhabitants of the occupied territory. This experience of the Americans appears to be fairly general among the allies, who are being welcomed in many instances because the Germans are fearful of their own disorderly elements and glad to have the protection of allied troops.

ALLIES TO VISIT POLAND

Will Investigate Conditions—Seek to Halt Trouble.

By Associated Press.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 12.—Marshal Foch has sent officers of the allied armies to Poland to investigate the program reported to have taken place there recently. Departure of the mission was announced, an official dispatch said, by Minister of Foreign Affairs Pichon, who stated that from his information the disorders had been committed by released German and Austrian prisoners of war, returning from Russia.

The civil war between the Poles and Ruthenians in Galicia was ascribed by the minister to bolshevist agents sent from Russia to stir up trouble along the border. France, he said would take every step necessary to put an end to the disorders.

The Polish national committee in Paris approved the action of Marshal Foch.

LEAVE PETROGRAD.

Christiania, Dec. 12.—The Norwegian legation has left Petrograd, according to the Aftenposten. The newspaper reports, also, that Denmark, the last of the neutral countries to continue relations with the bolshevist government is about to sever them.

A Vienna correspondent reports that the theaters are full, but apart from that there is no gaiety after dark.

A Lady in Texas Tells How She Regained and Keeps Her Health.

Every household should have at hand all the time a dependable remedy with which to fight catarrh and catarrhal conditions.

The experience of Mrs. M. E. Berkley, No. 1322 27th St., Galveston, Tex., is not unique, but her letter does carry a vigorous "safety first" suggestion to every American home: "I wish to tell you of the good Peruna has been to me. I have used it five years and have never found it other than satisfactory as a remedy for colds, catarrh, indigestion and many other ailments. I am never without Peruna."

Coughs, colds, catarrh, grip and influenza cannot safely be neglected. Any disease due to catarrhal inflammation of the mucous lining, whether of the nasal passages, throat, lungs, stomach, bowels, kidneys, bladder or other organs, is to be feared. Catarrh is always a menace to the general health and on account of its prevalence must be fought and fought hard all the time.

Thousands place their entire dependence upon the well known time-tried remedy, Peruna. Dr. Hartman began selling Peruna for catarrh forty-five years ago. Try Peruna first and avoid possible disappointment and expense.

WAS SURELY "ONE GAME GUY"

Most People Will Admit That Corporal Browne's Message to His Wife Contained Truth.

The American advance was being made in an open field on the banks of the Vesle river in France, where the Germans had planted a machine gun on high ground, which enabled them to deliver a sweeping fire on the Americans.

Try as they might the Yanks could not flank the German position. They got a pot shot at Fritz and continued their advance.

Fritz was not inclined to expose himself and kept his gun working.

"Say, sergeant, gimme that gat of yours," said Corporal Browne.

Browne drew his own pistol and, with an automatic in each hand, he got up on his hands and knees and took a peep.

"Say, boys, tell the wife for me that I was one game guy! So long to all of you guys!"

Browne went out after the Boches. He got them, too—four of them and a perfectly good machine gun.—Stars and Stripes.

DAVISON APPEALS FOR BIG ROLL CALL

Head of Red Cross War Council Sends Stirring Message to the Public.

VAST PROBLEMS ARE AHEAD

Sees No Necessity for Further Campaigns for Funds If People Respond Properly to Christmas Drive

Washington, D. C., Dec. 4.—Henry P. Davison, chairman of the war council of the Red Cross, today issued to the 3,854 chapters and the 22,000,000 members the following statement outlining the future policy of the American Red Cross:

"The whole American people will be invited in the week preceding Christmas to enroll as members of the Red Cross. It is confidently believed there need be no further campaigns for Red Cross funds, but instead the annual roll call will constitute the foundation of the Red Cross. The people should therefore know as definitely as possible the plans of this, their national humanitarian society.

"Since the armistice was signed I have had an opportunity to confer in Paris with the heads of all American Red Cross commissions in Europe, and later in Washington with the president of the United States, the war council of the Red Cross, the managers of the fourteen Red Cross divisions of the United States, and with the heads of our department at national headquarters. I am, therefore, able to speak now with knowledge and assurance in saying that the beneficent work of the American Red Cross is to go forward on a great scale—not alone, as heretofore, for purposes of relief of war, but as an agency of peace and permanent human service.

"Since America's entry into the war the purpose of our Red Cross has been primarily to aid our army and navy in the care of our men under arms, and, secondly, to extend relief to the soldiers, sailors and civilians of those nations which were fighting our battles along with their own. With the funds which have been so generously contributed by the American people this war work of the Red Cross will continue and be completed with all possible sympathy and energy.

Wherever our soldiers and sailors may be the Red Cross will stay with them until they are demobilized. Nothing which we may do will be left undone, either for the men in the war zone, for those returning, for those in the camps and hospitals or for their families at home, to whom will continue to be devoted the ministrations of the Red Cross home service. In this latter effort 50,000 trained Red Cross workers are now engaged at 2,500 different places throughout the land.

"The problems of reconstruction, involving feeding and caring for the distressed civilian populations of Europe, are of such magnitude that necessarily they must be met very largely by the governments of our allies, with whom our own government will co-operate.

"The great tasks of fighting tuberculosis, promoting child welfare, and caring for refugees, with which the American Red Cross has concerned itself so effectively in France, Italy and Belgian, will at an early date be assumed by the governments, the Red Cross organizations, and the relief societies of those countries, which, now that they are released from the terrible burden of waging war, naturally desire to take care, as far as they can, of their own people.

"The war problem of the American Red Cross will thus steadily and rapidly merge itself into a peace program. The wake of the war will, however, reveal the prevalence of disease, and give rise to epidemics and emergencies which in all parts of the world will call for unlimited voluntary effort, the cutting of red tape and manifestation of those qualities of human sympathy which government action cannot display. Here will be the opportunity for the American Red Cross. But even our Red Cross must not act and cannot act most effectively alone; we must labor in co-operation with the National Red Cross and relief societies of other nations, to the end that not alone the heart of America but the heart of all mankind may be mobilized on behalf of suffering humanity.

"While, therefore, the plans of the American Red Cross in this direction cannot be formulated specifically, in advance of the general relief program of the allied governments, the American Red Cross is nevertheless planning to develop its permanent organization in this country upon a scale never before contemplated in time of peace. The commissions which are now conducting the activities of the American Red Cross in foreign countries, as well as the temporary war organization in this country, will as a matter of course ultimately merge their energies with those of the permanent organization of the Red Cross.

"With the war has developed the striking and important fact that many men and women, some of whom had with great success devoted their lives entirely to business, came into the Red Cross organization at the outset of the war simply that they might serve their country, but have realized such a satisfaction to themselves in the opportunity to serve mankind that they now desire to become a part of the permanent peace organization of the American Red Cross.

"There may be, therefore, perfect confidence that the peace activities of the Red Cross will be conducted under able and inspiring leadership. The chapters will maintain their organizations upon a scale adequate to the new demands to be made upon them. Local committees will indeed appreciate more and more the value of having in their midst strong and efficient Red Cross chapters. The divisional organizations, with honorary and permanent staffs, will be maintained—always ready for service; and national headquarters will have a large and efficient personnel to direct the activities of the organization as a whole.

"Study is being given by the national organization not alone to problems of international relief, but to plans in this country for enlarged home service, the promotion of public health education, development of nursing, the care and prevention of accidents, and other correlated lines, which may contribute to the health and happiness of men, women and children. Such plans when developed will, it is believed, provide both for world relief and for home community service, and thus constitute a channel for the continued and useful expression by Red Cross workers and members of those qualities of sympathy and love which our whole people have poured out so unstintedly during the war.

"For the completion of its war work and for the institution of its peace program, the Red Cross is fortunately in a healthy financial condition. Abundant occasion for the use of large funds of money and great quantities of garments and other supplies will continue to arise, but it is believed that there will be no further need for intensive campaigns for funds. The work of supplementing governmental activities, which the Red Cross will be called upon to do in all parts of the world, will be upon a great scale, but it will call for human service rather than for large expenditures.

"What the American Red Cross needs now is not so much contributions of money, as the continued devotion and loyalty of its members. This is peculiarly true at this moment of transition from war to peace. Annual membership involves the payment of only one dollar. The moneys thus received not only defray all the administrative expenses of the organization, but leave a substantial balance, which, together with all funds subscribed directly for relief, are devoted solely to that purpose. The roll call of the nation is thus to be called at Christmas time, that through enrollment in their Red Cross the American people may send a message to our soldiers still overseas and to the peoples of the world that we are not merely content with seeing our arms united with our allies in victory, but that our abiding purpose is that the love, the sympathy and the intelligence of all America shall be rededicated to the permanent service of mankind."

RED CROSS WELFARE WORKERS LOOK AFTER SOLDIERS' KIN

From Red Cross home service workers with the army abroad, twenty or more inquiries after the welfare of soldiers' families reach Washington every day by cable, and a hundred more come in the daily mail to national headquarters.

If conditions are such that a satisfactory answer cannot be sent the Red Cross home service committee makes them as near right as possible, and then sends its reassurance of further help and watchfulness.

THE GREAT CROSS OF MERCY

By THEODOSIA GARRISON.

Glorious with scars and rents the battle-banners rise,
And the great flags of triumph are spreading to the skies;
Our tears, our prayers, our praise for them, but when the last is said,
Our hearts extol the banner that bears the Cross of Red.

The great Cross of Mercy that calls a world in pain
To lift its soul to courage, to look on hope again—
The signs of Love victorious that hate hath never slain.

Ask those who have awaited it upon the field of strife
Ask the stricken towns-folk it has given back to life,
Ask the lips of childhood, the valiant hosts of dead,
What this banner means to them that bears the Cross of Red.

The great Cross of Mercy—O, lift and keep it high;
Send its flaming message to all humanity
That pity is immortal and that Love shall never die.

SUGAR SHOWED OUR BACKBONE

American Willingness to Give Up Luxury Demonstrated Nation's War Conscience.

STAND WITH THE ALLIES.

By Reducing Consumption People of the United States Averted a Famine at Home in Spite of Low Supplies.

The fact that the people of the United States were able to reduce by more than one-half million tons their July, August, September and October consumption of sugar proves conclusively that their war conscience was thoroughly awakened and that the country as a whole stood ready to follow the injunctions of the Government.

Our normal consumption of sugar in the four-month period beginning with July has been 400,000 tons per month, a total of 1,600,000 for the quarter year

In July, when our sugar stringency began to reach its height, consumption was reduced to 260,000 tons. In August only 325,000 tons went into distribution and in September only 279,000 tons. In October the distribution fell to 230,000 tons.

If the general public had failed to observe the injunctions of the Food Administration this country would have been in the throes of a sugar famine before the end of August. Our visible supplies were so low as to bring great anxiety to those familiar with the sugar situation. They feared that it would be absolutely impossible to reduce consumption to a point where sugar would no longer be a mere luxury in the American diet.

Few accomplishments of the Food Administration will stand forth so predominantly as this reduced consumption of sugar. By it we have been able to bridge over the period of stringency until the new beet and Louisiana cane sugar crops were in sight.

Now the nation is in a position so that if we choose we may return to our normal home use of sugar, and Europe, with the release of ships to go far afield, can maintain its recent restricted rations. If, however, those nations are to increase their use of sugar very considerably it must be by our continued sharing with them through limiting our own consumption.

AMERICAN SPIRIT RELIED ON TO WIN.

In the light of succeeding events it is interesting to recall the confidence with which the United States Food Administrator viewed the gloomy outlook in July of 1917, when this country had been in the war for less than four months and the Germans were steadily sending the western front nearer and nearer to Paris.

"Even though the situation in Europe may be gloomy today," he declared in a public statement, "no American who has knowledge of the results already obtained in every direction need have one atom of fear that democracy will not defend itself in these United States."

LOYALTY IN LITTLE THINGS LAST PROOF OF PATRIOTISM

Americans without murmuring cut their sugar allowance from four pounds a month to three and then as long as need be to two pounds for loyalty's sake.

Food Will Win the World.

America earned the gratitude of allied nations during war by sharing food. America under peace may win the world's good will by saving to share.

DEMOCRACY VS. AUTOCRACY.

"There is no royal road to food conservation. We can only accomplish this by the voluntary action of our whole people, each element in proportion to its needs. It is a matter of equality of burden."

The truth of this statement, made by the United States Food Administrator soon after we entered the war, has been borne out by the history of our exports. Autocratic food control in the lands of our enemies has broken down, while democratic food sharing has maintained the health and strength of this country and of the Allies.

KEPT PLEDGE TO SEND BREAD

American Nation Maintained Allied Loaf Through Self-Denial at Home Table.

AVERTED EUROPEAN DESPAIR.

With Military Demands Upon Ocean Shipping Relieved, World Is Able to Return to Normal White Wheat Bread.

Since the advent of the latest wheat crop the only limitation upon American exports to Europe has been the shortage of shipping. Between July 1 and October 10 we shipped 65,980,30- bushels. If this rate should continue until the end of the fiscal year we will have furnished the Allies with more than 237,500,000 bushels of wheat and flour in terms of wheat.

The result of increased production and conservation efforts in the United States has been that with the cessation of hostilities we are able to return to a normal wheat diet. Supplies that have accumulated in Australia, Argentine and other hitherto inaccessible markets may be tapped by ships released from transport service, and European demand for American wheat probably will not exceed our normal surplus. There is wheat enough available to have a white loaf at the common table.

But last year the tale was different. Only by the greatest possible saving and sacrifice were we able to keep a steady stream of wheat and flour moving across the sea. We found ourselves at the beginning of the harvest year with an unusually short crop. Even the most optimistic statisticians figured that we had a bare surplus of 20,000,000 bushels. And yet Europe was facing the probability of a bread famine—and in Europe bread is by far the most important article in the diet.

All of this surplus had left the country early in the fall. By the first of the year we had managed to ship a little more than 50,000,000 bushels by practicing the utmost economy at home—by wheatless days, wheatless meals, heavy substitution of other cereals and by sacrifice at almost every meal throughout the country.

In January the late Lord Rhondda, then British Food Controller, cabled that only if we sent an additional 75,000,000 bushels before July 1 could he take the responsibility of assuring his people that they would be fed.

The response of the American people was 85,000,000 bushels safely delivered overseas between January 1 and July 1. Out of a harvest which gave us only 20,000,000 bushels surplus we actually shipped 141,000,000 bushels.

Thus did America fulfill her pledge that the Allied bread rations could be maintained, and already the American people are demonstrating that, with an awakened war conscience, last year's figures will be bettered.

Our exports since is country entered the war have justified a statement made by the Food Administration shortly after its conception, outlining the principles and policies that would govern the solution of this country's food problems.

"The whole foundation of democracy," declared the Food Administration, "lies in the individual initiative of its people and their willingness to serve the interests of the nation with complete self effacement in the time of emergency. Democracy can yield to discipline, and we can solve this food problem for our own people and for the Allies in this way. To have done so will have been a greater service than our immediate objective, for we have demonstrated the rightfulness of our faith and our ability to defend ourselves without being Prussianized."

Sending to Europe 141,000,000 bushels of wheat from a surplus of apparently nothing was the outstanding exploit of the American food army in the critical year of the war.

GREATEST OPPORTUNITY WOMEN EVER HAD

It was given to the women of this country to perform the greatest service in the winning of the war vouchsafed to any women in the history of the wars of the world—to feed the warriors and the war sufferers. By the arts of peace, the practice of simple, homely virtues the womanhood of a whole nation served humanity in its profoundest struggle for peace and freedom.

FIRST CALL TO FOOD ARMY.

This co-operation and service I ask of all in full confidence that America will render more for flag and freedom than king ridden people surrender at compulsion.—Herbert Hoover, August 10, 1917.

A year ago voluntary food control was a daring adventure in democracy; during the year an established proof of democratic efficiency.

MUST INCREASE FOOD EXPORTS

America Called on by End of War to Supply Added Millions.

ECONOMY STILL NEEDED.

Over Three Times Pre-War Shipments Required—Situation in Wheat and Fats Proves Government's Policy Sound.

With the guns in Europe silenced, we have now to consider a new world food situation. But there can be no hope that the volume of our exports can be lightened to the slightest degree with the cessation of hostilities. Millions of people liberated from the Prussian yoke are now depending upon us for the food which will keep them from starvation

With food the United States may make it possible for the forces of democracy to hold out to victory. To insure democracy in the world, we must continue to live simply in order that we may supply these liberated nations of Europe with food. Hunger among a people inevitably breeds anarchy. American food must complete the work of making the world safe for democracy

Last year we sent 11,820,000 tons of food to Europe. For the present year, with only the European Allies to feed, we had originally pledged ourselves to a program that would have increased our exports to 17,500,000 tons. Now, to feed the liberated nations, we will have to export a total of not less than 20,000,000 tons—practically the limit of loading capacity at our ports. Reviewing the world food situation, we find that some foods will be obtainable in quantities sufficient to meet all world needs under a regime of economical consumption. On the other hand, there will be marked world shortages in some important commodities.

Return to Normal Bread Loaf.

With the enlarged wheat crops which American farmers have grown, and the supplies of Australia, the Argentine and other markets now accessible to shipping, there are bread grains enough to enable the nations to return to their normal wheat loaf, provided we continue to mill flour at a high percentage of extraction and maintain economy in eating and the avoidance of waste.

In fats there will be a heavy shortage—about 3,000,000,000 pounds—in pork products, dairy products and vegetable oils. While there will be a shortage of about three million tons in rich protein feeds for dairy animals, there will be sufficient supplies of other feedstuffs to allow economical consumption.

In the matter of beef, the world's supplies are limited to the capacity of the available refrigerating ships. The supplies of beef in Australia, the Argentine and the United States are sufficient to load these ships. There will be a shortage in the importing countries, but we cannot hope to expand exports materially for the next months in view of the bottle neck in transportation.

We will have a sufficient supply of sugar to allow normal consumption in this country if the other nations retain their present short rations or increase them only slightly. For the countries of Europe, however, to increase their present rations to a material extent will necessitate our sharing a part of our own supplies with them.

Twenty Million Tons of Food.

Of the world total, North America will furnish more than 60 per cent. The United States, including the West Indies, will be called upon to furnish 20,000,000 tons of food of all kinds as compared with our pre-war exports of about 6,000,000 tons.

While we will be able to change our program in many respects, even a casual survey of the world supplies in comparison to world demands shows conclusively that Europe will know famine unless the American people bring their home consumption down to the barest minimum that will maintain health and strength.

There are conditions of famine in Europe that will be beyond our power to remedy. There are 40,000,000 people in North Russia whom there is small chance of reaching with food this winter. Their transportation is demoralized in complete anarchy, and shortly many of their ports will be frozen, even if internal transport could be realized.

To Preserve Civilization.

At this moment Germany has not alone sucked the food and animals from all those masses of people she has dominated and left starving, but she has left behind her a total wreckage of social institutions, and the mass of people is now confronted with absolute anarchy.

If we value our own safety and the social organization of the world, if we value the preservation of civilization itself, we cannot permit growth of this cancer in the world's vitals.

Famine is the mother of anarchy. From the inability of governments to secure food for their people grows revolution and chaos. From an ability to supply their people grows stability of government and the defeat of anarchy. Did we put it on no higher plane than our interests in the protection of our institutions, we must bestir ourselves in solution of this problem.

LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE IF SICK, CROSS, FEVERISH

HURRY, MOTHER! REMOVE POISONS FROM LITTLE STOMACH, LIVER, BOWELS.

GIVE CALIFORNIA SYRUP OF FIGS AT ONCE IF BILIOUS OR CONSTIPATED.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels needs a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.—Adv.

Conserving Paper.

"Don't you have to put paper covers on these sandwiches any more?" asked the traveler at the railroad restaurant counter.

"No. The government's stopped us doing that," replied the chocolate-colored waitress.

"What for?"

"Says we must conserve paper."

"Gee! Won't Hoover let us eat paper either?"

"REALLY, NOW—

"I can't take that. I must have Red Cross Ball Blue. I have used it for more than ten years. My white dresses, linens and lace curtains are snowy white. I simply can't do without Red Cross Ball Blue. You will get it? All right, I'll wait."—Adv.

THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used anually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best.

The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills.

The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which we are continually publishing attest to its virtue.

PISO'S

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

(CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE—Cont'd.)

The teeth of the tiger! Everybody had clung stubbornly to an apparently invincible argument. As the marks on the apple and the print of Mme. Fauville's teeth were identical, and as no two persons in the world were able, in theory or practice, to produce the same print with their teeth, Mme. Fauville must needs be guilty.

Nay, more, the argument seemed so absolute that, from the day on which Mme. Fauville's innocence became known, the problem had remained unsolved, while no one seemed capable of conceiving the one paltry idea: that it was possible to obtain the print of a tooth in another way than by a live bite of that same tooth!

"It's like the egg of Columbus," said Valenglay, laughing. "It had to be thought of."

"You are right, Monsieur le President. People don't think of those things. Here is another instance: may I remind you that during the period when Arsene Lupin was known at the same time as M. Lenormand and as Prince Paul Sernine, no one noticed that the name Paul Sernine was merely an anagram of Arsene Lupin? Well, it's just the same today: Luis Perenna also is an anagram of Arsene Lupin. The two names are composed of the same eleven letters, neither more nor less. And yet, although it was the second time, nobody thought of making that little comparison. The egg of Columbus again! It had to be thought of!"

Valenglay was a little surprised at the revelation. It seemed as if that devil of a man had sworn to puzzle him up to the last moment and to bewilder him by the most unexpected sensational news. And how well this last detail depicted the fellow, a queer mixture of dignity and impudence, of mischief and simplicity, of smiling chaff and disconcerting charm, a sort of hero who, while conquering kingdoms by most incredible adventures, amused himself by mixing up the letters on his name so as to catch the public napping!

The interview was nearly at an end. Valenglay said to Perenna:

"Monsieur, you have done wonders in this business and ended by keeping your word and handing over the criminal. I also will keep my word. You are free."

"I thank you, Monsieur le President. But what about Sergeant Mazeroux?"

"He will be released this morning. Monsieur le Prefet de Police has arranged matters so that the public do not know of the arrest of either of you. You are Don Luis Perenna. There is no reason why you should not remain Don Luis Perenna."

"And Florence Levasseur, Monsieur le President?"

"Let her go before the examining magistrate of her own accord. He is bound to discharge her. Once free and acquitted of any charge or even suspicion, she will certainly be recognized as Cosmo Mornington's legal heiress and will receive the hundred millions."

"She will not keep it, Monsieur le President."

"How do you mean?"

"Florence Levasseur doesn't want the money. It has been the cause of unspeakably awful crimes. She hates the very thought of it."

"What then?"

"Cosmo Mornington's hundred millions will be wholly devoted to making roads and building schools in the south of Morocco and the northern Congo."

"In the Mauretanian Empire which you are giving us?" said Valenglay, laughing. "By Jove, it's a fine work and I second it with all my heart. An empire and an imperial budget to keep it up with! Upon my word, Don Luis has behaved well to his country, and has handsomely paid the debts of Arsene Lupin!"

A month later Don Luis Perenna and Mazeroux embarked in the yacht which had brought Don Luis to France. Florence was with them. Before sailing they heard of the death of Jean Vernoeq, who had managed to poison himself in spite of all the precautions taken to prevent him.

On his arrival in Africa, Don Luis Perenna, Sultan of Mauretania, found his old associates and accredited Mazeroux to them and to his grand dignitaries. He organized the government to follow on his abdiction and precede the annexation of the new empire by France, and he had several secret interviews on the Moorish border with General Leauty, commanding the French troops, interviews in the course of which they thought out all the measures of Morocco an appearance of facility which would otherwise be difficult to explain.

The future was now assured. Soon the thin screen of rebellious tribes standing between the French and the pacified districts would fall to pieces, revealing an orderly empire, provided with a regular constitution, with good roads, schools, and courts of law, a flourishing empire in full working order.

Then, when his task was done, Don Luis abdicated.

He has now been back for over two years. Every one remembers the stir caused by his marriage with Florence Levasseur. The controversy was renewed, and many of the newspapers clamoured for Arsene Lupin's arrest. But what could the authorities do?

Although nobody doubted who he really was although the name of Arsene Lupin and the name of Don Luis Perenna consisted of the same letters, and people ended by remarking the coincidence, legally speaking, Arsene Lupin was dead and Don Luis Perenna was alive; and there was no possibility of bringing Arsene Lupin back to life or of killing Don Luis Perenna.

He is today living in the village of Saint-Maclou, among those charming valleys which run down the Oise. Who does not know his modest little pink washed house, with its green shutters and its garden filled with bright flowers? People make up parties to go there from Paris on Sundays, in the hope of catching a sight, through the elder hedges, of the man who was Arsene Lupin, or of meeting him in the village square.

He is there, with his hair just touched with grey, his still youthful features, and a young man's bearing; and Florence is there, too, with her pretty figure and the halo of fair hair around her happy face, unclouded by even the shadow of an unpleasant recollection.

Very often visitors come and knock at the little wooden gate. They are unfortunate people imploring the master's aid, victims of oppression, weaklings who have gone under in the struggle, reckless persons who have been ruined by their passions.

For all these Don Luis is full of pity. He gives them his full attention, the help of his far seeing advice, his experience, his strength, and even his time, disappearing for days and weeks to fight the good fight once more.

And sometimes also it is an emissary from the Prefect's office or some subordinate of the police who comes to submit a complex case to his judgment. Here again Don Luis applies the whole of his wonderful mind to the business.

In addition to this, in addition to his old books on ethics and philosophy, to which he has returned with such pleasure, he cultivates his garden. He dotes on his flowers. He is proud of them. He takes prizes at the shows; and the success is still remembered of the treble carnation, streaked red and yellow, which he exhibited as the "Arsene carnation."

But he works hardest at certain large flowers that blossom in summer. During July and the first half of August they fill two-thirds of his lawn and all the borders of his kitchen garden. Beautiful, decorative plants, standing erect like flag staffs, they proudly raise their spiky heads of all colors: blue, violet, mauve, pink, white.

They are lupins and include every variety: Cruikshank's lupin, the scented lupin, and the last to appear, Lupin's lupin. They are all there, resplendent, in serried ranks like an army of soldiers, each striving to outstrip the others to hold up the thickest and gaudiest spike to the sun. They are all there; and, at the entrance to the walk that leads to their motley beds, is a streamer with this device, taken from an exquisite sonnet of Jose Maria de Heredia:

"And in my kitchen-garden
lupins grow."

You will say that this is a confession. But why not?

In the evening, when a few privileged neighbors meet at his house—the justice of the peace, notary, Major Comte d'Astrignac, who has also gone to live at Saint-Maclou—Don Luis is not afraid to speak of Arsene Lupin.

"I used to see a great deal of him," he says. "He was not a bad man. I will not go so far as to compare him with the Seven Sages, or even to hold him up as an example to future generations, but still we must judge him with a certain indulgence.

"He did a vast amount of good and a moderate amount of harm. Those who suffered through him deserved what they got; and fate would have punished them sooner or later if he had not forestalled her. Between a Lupin who selected his victims among the ruck of wicked rich men and some big company promoter who deliberately ruins numbers of poor people, would you hesitate for a moment? Does not Lupin come out best?

"And, on the other hand, what a host of good actions! What countless proofs of disinterested generosity! A burglar? I admit it. A swindler? I don't deny it. He was all that. But he was something more than that. And, while he amused the gallery with his skill and ingenuity, he roused the general enthusiasm in other ways.

"People laughed at his practical jokes, but they loved his pluck, his courage, his adventurous spirit, his contempt for danger, his shrewd insight, his unfailing good humor, his reckless energy; all qualities that stood out at a period when the most active virtues of our race had reached their zenith, the period of the motor car and the airplane.

"One day," he said, as a joke, "I should like my epitaph read, 'Here lies Arsene Lupin, adventurer.'" That was quite correct. He was a master of adventure.

"And, if the spirit of adventure led him too often to put his hand in other people's pockets, it also led him to battlefields where it gives those who are worthy opportunity to fight and win titles of distinction which are not within reach of all. It was there that he gained his. It is there that you should see him at work, spending his strength, braving death, and defying destiny. And it is because of this hat you must forgive him. even if he did sometimes get the better of a commissary of police or steal the watch of an examining magistrate. Let us show some indulgence to our professors of energy."

And, nodding his head, Don Luis concludes:

"Then, you see, he had another virtue which is not to be despised. It is a virtue for which we should be grateful to him in these gray days of ours: he knew how to smile!"

The End.

Low Meat Prices vs. High Cattle Prices

If the farmer cannot get enough for his live stock, he raises less, and the packer gets less raw material.

If the consumer has to pay too much for his meat, he eats less of it, and the packer finds his market decreased.

The packer wants the producer to get enough to make live-stock raising profitable, and he wants the price of meat so low that everyone will eat it.

But all he can do, and what he would have to do in any case to stay in business, is to keep down the cost of processing the farmer's stock into meat so that the consumer pays for the meat and by-products only a little more than the farmer gets for his animals.

For example, last year Swift & Company paid for its cattle about 90 per cent of what it got for meat and by-products (such as hides, tallow, oils, etc.)

If cattle from the farm were turned miraculously into meat in the hands of retailers (without going through the expense of dressing, shipping and marketing), the farmer would get only about 1⅛ cents per pound more for his cattle, or consumers would pay only about 2¼ cents per pound less for their beef!

Out of this cent or two per pound, Swift & Company pays for the operation of extensive plants, pays freight on meats, operates refrigerator cars, maintains branch houses, and in most cases, delivers to retailers all over the United States. The profit amounts to only a fraction of a cent, and a part of this profit goes to build more plants, to give better service, and to increase the company's usefulness to the country.

CHAPTER ONE (Continued)

This was an awful whopper and all at the table knew it, but it was ignored and the game began

Miss Carrington Lady Lucy as she liked to be called did not hold good hands On the contrary she had a run of bad luck that made her more and more irate with each hand dealt Miss Frayne, who was her protege and social secretary watched with growing apprehension the red spots that appeared in Miss Carrington's cheeks, infallible danger signals of an impending outbreak

It came.

"Another handful of blanks!" Miss Carrington exclaimed angrily, and flung the offending 13 cards across the wide room

"There now Cousin Lucy," said Gray Haviland determined to keep the peace if possible, "that was a clever idea It will certainly change your luck I'll collect the pasteboards and we'll start fresh"

Easily, the big, good looking young chap sauntered across the room and gathered up the cards, chatting meanwhile "You don't lose your deal, you know so try again, Cousin Lucy and good luck to you!"

In angry silence Miss Carrington dealt again, and examined her hand. "Nothing above a nine spot!" she declared throwing them, backs up, on the table

"Too bad!" murmured Miss Frayne, carelessly picking up the hand "Why, you didn't look closely! Here's an ace and two queens, and—"

"They're nothing! How dare you dispute my word? I say the hand is worthless!" She fairly snatched the cards from the girl and turned them face down again

"But, mad moselle began the Count, "if you have an ace and two queens, I could have played a no-trump hand grand ah, splendid!"

"Yes, you could have played it! You want to play all the open hands! You want me to sit here a dummy, a figurehead every time!"

"Now, now Lady Lucy——" and Anita Frayne laughed pleasantly

"Be quiet! You're worse yet! You want to deal me good hands to humor me! I believe you would cheat to do it! I don't want good cards that way!"

"Ah," begged the Count, seeing Anita flush, "do not tell the young lady she cheats! Do not do that!"

"I'll tell her what I choose! Gray, say something! You sit there like a mummy, while these people are insulting me right and left! Tell Anita that I am right in not wishing her to deal me good cards purposely

"But she didn't," declared Haviland, "you know she didn't Why, she couldn't even if she wanted to"

"Oh, yes, she could" and Miss Carrington gave a disagreeable sneer "She's quite clever enough for any deceit or treachery

"Stop, Cousin Lucy! I can't let you talk so about Miss Frayne in my presence!"

"Oh, you can't, can't you! And, pray, what right have you to defend her! Go away, both of you! I'll play with you no longer Go away and send Pauline and Mr Illsley in here They, at least, will play fair

Anita Frayne rose without a word. Haviland rose, too, but talking volubly. "Let up, Cousin Lucy," he said sternly "You've no right to treat Miss Frayne so You ought to apologize to her for such rudeness."

"Apologize!" Miss Carrington fairly shrieked, "she'll do the apologizing, and you, too, my foolish young cousin. You little know what's going to happen to me! Tomorrow you may sing another song!"

Haviland looked at her in astonishment, the Count thoughtfully. The same idea was in both their minds Could she mean that she was expecting the Count to propose to her that evening?

"Nothing nice can happen to you unless you learn to control that temper of yours," said Haviland and swung away after Anita

He found her in the next room, nestled in the corner of a big davenport weeping into a sympathetic sofa cushion

"Go and find the others," she whispered as he came near her "Make them go and play with her!

Obediently, Haviland went In the glassed sun parlor he found Pauline Stuart, Miss Carrington's niece, and Stephen Illsley, one of the most favored of Pauline's many suitors

"For goodness' sake, people," he began, "do go and play bridge with the lady of the manor! She's in a peach of a fury, and you'll have to take your life in your hands, but go!"

"I won't," said Pauline bluntly, "it's Anita's turn tonight. She said she'd do it.

"She did! But she came off second best, and she's weeping buckets on the best Empire embroidery sofa cushions! I'm going to comfort her, but you must go and keep the gentle Lucy from pulling the house down about our ears! She's sure queering herself with his nibs! He can't adnure her sweet, flower like soul after this night's exhibition.

"I don't want to go a bit, but I suppose we'll have to," and Pauline smiled at her guest.

"Oh, go on" said Haviland, as he turned to leave them, "and, for heaven's sake, give her all the good cards Can you manage that, Illsley?

"I am afraid not Her eyes are too sharp"

"Well, if her luck stays bad, get her to play mumble-peg or something instead of bridge

Haviland disappeared and Pauline rose unwillingly "I do so hate to play with Aunt Lucy" she said, "but it must be done Are you willing to sacrifice yourself?

"For you? Always" And the two went to the card room.

Pauline Stuart, tall, dark, graceful, was a striking looking girl Only 24, she carried herself with the dignity and poise of a duchess, and her heavy, dark brows gave her face an expression of strength and will power that contrasted forcibly with the delicate Dresden china beauty of Anita Frayne The two girls were not especially friendly, though never definitely at odds Anita was envious of the more fortunate Pauline The latter, Miss Carrington's niece, would inherit a goodly part of her aunt's large fortune while the humble position of the secretary commanded only a liberal, not munificent, salary

The girls, however, were at one in their dread of Miss Lucy's ebullitions of temper and their resentment of the biting sarcasms and angry diatribes she flung at them in her frequent spasms of fury

Illsley a well set up chap of good address, followed Pauline into her aunt's presence.

"You waited long enough," grumbled Miss Carrington. "Sit down. It's your deal now, Pauline.

Matters went well for a time. Miss Lucy held good cards, and once or twice she triumphed through a mistake of her adversaries, which she fortunately did not discover was made on purpose

Count Charlier's little bright black eyes darted inquiringly from aunt to niece, but he made no comment. All four played well, and when at last Miss Carrington made a grand slam her joy was effervescent.

"Good play," she flattered herself. "You must admit, Count, that it was clever of me to take that difficult finesse just at that critical point."

"Clever, indeed mademoiselle. You have the analytical mind; you should have been a diplomat. Also, Fortune favors you You are beloved of the fickle goddess."

"Let us hope so, and for a moment Miss Carrington looked grave

And then with the perversity of that same goddess the card luck changed Pauline and Illsley held all the high cards Miss Lucy and the Count only the low ones

Stormy signals showed Winter grew the stern set face tighter drew the thin, wide lips, and rigid muscles set themselves in the angry, swelling throat Then, as she scanned a hand of cards, all below the 10, again they went in a shower across the room, and she cried, angrily "A Yarborough!" reverting to the old fashioned term

"Never mind, Aunt Lucy" and Pauline tried to laugh it off; "this is not your lucky night. Let's give up bridge for tonight. Let's have some music"

"Yes! because you love music and hate bridge! It makes no difference what I want My wishes are never considered You and Anita are just alike! Selfish, ungrateful, caring for nothing but your own pleasure. Mr. Illsley, don't you think young girls should pay some slight attention to the wishes of one who does everything for them? Where would either of them be but for me? Are you not sorry for me?"

"Why—I—you must excuse me, I am not sure I understand——"

"Yes, you understand, perfectly well You know the girls slight me and snub me every chance they get But it will not always be thus Tomorrow——"

"Come, Aunt Lucy," pleaded Pauline, "let us have some music. You know there are some new records, just arrived today Let us hear them"

"Are there new records? Did you get the ones I wanted?

"Some of them We couldn't get them all.

"Oh, no, of course not! But if you had wanted certain records they would have been found!

"But, Auntie Lucy, we couldn't get them if they aren't made, could we? Gray tried his best

"Oh, tried his best He forgot to ask for them so he says he 'tried his best' to excuse his carelessness If Anita had wanted them——"

The starting of the music drowned further flow of the lady's grievances

II

A CLASH OF TONGUES

True to its reputation for calming the impulses of the turbulent spirit, the music soothed Miss Carrington's ruffled temper, and she waxed amiable and even gay. Enthroned on her favorite red velvet chair, resplendent in an elaborately decorated gown of sapphire blue satin, with her bright auburn locks piled high and topped by an enormous comb of carved tortoise shell, she dominated the little group and gave orders that must be obeyed.

She wore, among other jewels, a magnificent rope of pearls So remarkable were these, that the Count, who had never seen them before, ventured to refer to them.

Yes," agreed Miss Carrington. "they are wonderful. Priceless, I assure you. It took my agent years to collect them"

"And you grace an informal home evening with these regal gems?"

"Not usually, no. But you know, Count Charlier pearls must be worn frequently to preserve their luster Laid away a long time, they grow dead and dull looking

Acid-Stomach Ruins Health of Millions

Besides those painful attacks of indigestion; that awful bloated, lumpy feeling after eating and downright stomach misery that you who have experienced it know so well; besides disgusting belching, food-repeating, sour stomach and distressing heartburn—besides all this, ACID-STOMACH undermines the health and saps the strength of millions.

If you don't get rid of those stomach miseries there is no telling where your stomach troubles will end, for it is a well known scientific fact that many serious ailments have their start in an acid-stomach.

Start now—this very day to get rid of your stomach miseries—take EATONIC—the wonderful remedy that absorbs the excess acid from the stomach and brings INSTANT relief. You simply have no idea how much better, stronger and brighter you feel at once. It drives out all the gas and bloat, puts an immediate stop to belching and heartburn, ends stomach suffering and makes it cool, sweet, comfortable and strong

There can be no further excuse for you to allow acid-stomach to wreck your health—pile up misery upon misery until you get to the point where you feel down and out and that life has lost all its joys. Remember, just as acid-mouth ruins teeth, so acid-stomach ruins health.

Take EATONIC. It's good, just like a bit of candy and makes the stomach feel fine. You can then eat the things you like and, what is more, every mouthful you eat will count in creating power and energy. You'll feel so much better—have punch and pep—the power and will to do things and get results, and your stomach misery will be gone.

Take our advice. Get a big box of EATONIC from your druggist today, it costs so little. If it fails to remove your stomach distress, he will refund your money. That is guaranteed, you are to be satisfied or money refunded.

WAR BEGAN IN APRIL, 1913

Huge War Credit Was In That Year Voted in Germany and Supported by Socialists.

When did the war begin? April, 1913, not August, 1914, as the press always has it, writes Charles Edward Russell in Harper's. The real declaration of war was made by the German reichstag when it struck observing Europe dumb and chill by passing, an extraordinary war credit of $250,000,000, and to that act of belligerency in a time of profound peace the socialists in the reichstag gave practically their support.

All men in the world accustomed to make upon the day's news an intelligent diagnosis must have gasped and stared at this portent. Unless Germany deliberately planned now to bring down upon mankind the war her armament had silently threatened these many years, there was no good reason for this perilous saber rattling; certainly none appeared in the state of Europe. Yet the socialists seemed to be for it; that was the incomprehensible fact.

August Bebel, then still active, was the ablest and most famous of their leaders, and criticism from many lands seemed to goad him into a defense. It was of a nature to chill the last hope in any friend of peace Two reasons he gave for the reichstag's action. One was that President Poincare of France, who had been but newly elected, was a warlike and dangerous man, and no one could tell to what lengths he might go. The other was that in the Balkan wars the Turks, taught by German officers, had been beaten by the Serbians, taught by French.

The judicious might grieve indeed when they came upon such an offering from such a source, and anybody able to read might see that war was close at hand.

ANGRY AT BEING DISTURBED

Old Gentleman Vastly More Annoyed at Constable Than He Was at Hun Air Raiders.

"He wasn't half angry," said a constable to me, smiling reminiscently as he cast his eye over what remained—mostly top story only—of an old-fashioned house which had suffered in a recent air raid. "You should have heard his language!"

"Curious thing," I said, "the top floor doesn't appear to be touched."

"Yes, that's where he was," said the constable. "Of course, we thought he was a casualty. We cleared away the rubbish, and somehow or other got up to his rooms with an ambulance and the doctor. The door was closed, so we started prying it open. That's when the fun started.

"The door was flung open, and there stood the old gentleman with a big book in his hands, his 'specs' on, and in a proper temper. I just caught a glimpse of a cosy armchair drawn up to a blazing fire.

"'What the —— does this mean?' he says. 'Haven't I been disturbed enough this evening? Get out of it, all of you.' And without troubling to shut his door, he went back and sat down with his book beside the fire, muttering most awful. It gave me the biggest shock of the raid."—London Mail.

Not Equal to It.

They had not been married very long but she had grown cold and listless; so one evening after she had yawned about seventeen times, he said:

"You seem to be so cold and indifferent Malvina. Have you forgotten those happy days when I was paying you my addresses?"

"I should think I haven't! I should think I haven't forgotten those happy days. I never had less than three fellows every evening calling on me."

"But, dear, haven't you got me to pay you attention now?"

"Yes, I suppose I have. You are doing the best you know how; but you don't flatter yourself that you are equal to three, do you?"—Stray Stories

Commends Sailor's Bravery.

For gallantry in rescuing from drowning a lad eight years of age Secretary Daniels has commended Arthur Otto Radcliffe, a seaman of the United States navy. Alongside of the United States steamship Wadsworth, on which the sailor was stationed, lay a tug. A small boy played about the deck with no thought of danger. Suddenly he fell overboard. Before the warning came the child had floated seventy-five yards or more from the tug and ship. Then Radcliffe came into action. Jumping into the water, he swam to the boy and brought him to safety. Radcliffe enlisted in the navy in 1915, at Des Moines, Iowa.

"Germ-Proof" Money.

To a bank in Spokane, Wash., belongs the distinction of circulating the first antiseptic germ-proof national bank notes. The United States treasury is still experimenting with devices to laundry dirty bank notes to bright crisp ones, but the Spokane bank has the first sanitary money on record. Fifty thousand dollars in bills, put out by the bank, were signed with an ink said to consist largely of carbolic acid. The result is the bills are saturated with an agency which means death to the most vigorous germ who'd live there.

The Clove in Medicine.

Though the clove has had for centuries and still has an honorable standing in the culinary art as a condiment, it has long held a place in the distillation of liquor and in medicine. Nearly everybody knows something about oil of cloves, and most persons at one time or another have used it as a remedy or a palliative for toothache, it being a valuable local anaesthetic which has found use in professional dentistry as a means of lowering the sensitiveness of the dentine of a tooth undergoing repairs.

MART BACHMAN AND MISS TILLIE KRAUS UNITED IN MARRIAGE

Last Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock occurred the marriage of Mart Bachman to Miss Tillie Kraus at the German Reform Parsonage, Rev Thiel officiating.

This happy couple hardly need any introduction to the many readers of the Times who are perhaps better acquainted with them than we are. Mr Bachman, however is a prosperous farmer living near Klemme The bride is a daughter of Mr and Mrs Kraus of this city and a young lady of talent.

They left Wednesday evening on a honeymoon trip to Chicago and other points where they will visit friends and relatives for a few weeks before returning to Klemme to make their future home

The Times, and the many friends of the couple, wish them much happiness in their wedded life

CRYSTAL CAFE CHANGES HANDS

Last Wednesday afternoon, J. W Berggren disposed of the Crystal Cafe, including all the fixtures, stock, etc, to Elmer Fuller and Ralph Elder, who took possession immediately.

The Crystal Cafe has the reputation of being one of the finest, neatest and best kept cafes along this line and for the past two years has been run by Mr Bergren, under whose skilful management it has been brought to it's present high perfection Traveling men all along this line have commented on the Cafe.

The new proprietors will keep it up to it's standard and will no doubt make good in the restaurant business. Mr Fuller has been employed at the Wiles Garage and Mr. Elder is at present on his farm but will move into town soon. These young men with their helping wives will make a success, we are sure, in their new business. We wish both the old and the new proprietors the best of success.

Mr. Berggren is undecided as to what he will do. He and his family will perhaps spend the winter in Colorado as Mrs Berggren is not in the best of health At this time Mr Berggren has not decided what line of business he will take up.

THE DOG NUISANCE

It would be a good thing to begin the new year right by doing away with about a dozen dogs around this town Seems like there are about a million stray dogs around here which are a public nuisance We suggest that the marshall get a gun and go after the curs give them both barrels and a trip to the "happy hunting grounds" is the best remedy Get them out of the way before the cold weather sets in and freezes them to death It would be an act of mercy to put them out of the way.

KLEMME CLOWNS TAKE A BOAT RIDE

To tell their names would be a secret so we will just call them The Klemme Clowns—maybe you can guess who they are At any rate they are all jolly good fellows and always getting mixed up in something funny It was one day last week, but not the best kind of a day to take a swim, that the Clowns decided it was a fine day to fish for a few carp in the creek. They secured a boat (which later proved to have the sinking qualities of a submarine) and dragged it to the river Now the clowns could not all get into the boat at once so they divided the load and the first bunch crossed safely over to the other side. The second bunch were navigating across the briny deep and were quite close to the shore when Bill (excuse me, I didn't intend to give any names) well Bill stepped on the side of the boat and down she went (the boat). Oh no, they didn't get wet, just naturally soaked was all. One clown just sat down in the water and with two fingers in the air and his chin under water was wig-wagging the sign of distress. Bill claims he had his hip boots and waded out, the other clown swam and if there were any more they were probably looking for carp under the chilly water. The first three who landed safe nearly died laughing (you know them for they have sore ribs and are still giggling). Maybe we have said plenty. Take a tip from the Editor—this is no time for fishing, but the season is still open for submarining

IT WAS A REGULAR DANCE

Last Friday evening, despite the bad weather and impassible roads, a dandy good crowd turned out to the dance at the Idle Hour.

The crowd was unusual in that the older people were also there and even had more fun than the younger set. Why did they come? Well, because the management of the Idle Hour is mixing the dances so all can enjoy them; the good old square dances, two-steps, waltzes; the kind everybody likes Watch next week, there will be even a larger crowd—everybody dances now and all report the best of good times. Ask those who were there. A dance every Friday night, rain or shine.

AMATEUR NIGHT AT THE IDLE HOUR

Last Wednesday night was Amateur Night at the Idle Hour Theatre. A part of the program was given over to amateurs who competed for dollar prize. There were to have been several numbers, but for some unaccountable reason they failed to appear. However, the piano duet by Misses Emerson and Gimer, the reading by Glenn Busch were much enjoyed by all. Master Busch took the prize Mr J. B. Mack gave a very interesting and well delivered reading entitled "The Face on the Bar room Floor." He held the audience spell bound during the entire selection which brought the house down in a great applause. We predict that Amateur Night will prove a great success The next Amateur Night will be held on Wednesday evening, January 8th All should plan to attend

OLD FASHIONED DANCE

Old fashioned dances like everything else, are coming back again With this in view, and to give the "old timers" a chance to shake a leg, the management of the Idle Hour Theatre will give a real old fashioned Dance on New Year's Eve, next Tuesday evening. All the old time dances will be played—two steps, waltzes, three steps, schottische, quadrills—all the good old dances Come and dance the New Year in the Old Year out. RAY A. JORGENSEN, PUB.

KLEMME, IOWA

In the San Luis valley of Colorado there is an area of from 400,000 to 500,000 acres, which has almost completely been deprived of fertility in a seemingly mysterious manner. This condition has been investigated by Dr. W. P. Headden, of the Colorado agricultural experiment station, and he attributes this condition to the so-called "black alkali, composed largely of sodium carbonate. This carbonate is carried in the waters of the valley, including the rivers and the artesian wells, and the practice of subirrigation has brought it to the surface by capillarity and evaporation. Dr. Headden suggests that the remedy lies in a conversion of the carbonates into sulphates by the use of a liberal amount of gypsum to one pound of black alkali—and downward washing by means of surface irrigation with furrows or by flooding.

Peat is so antiseptic and absorbent that it is used as a dressing for wounds and is an excellent substitute for medicated cotton This fact was recognized many years ago in Europe, where sphagnum peat is now extensively used in preparing surgical dressings. According to a scientist who has made a detailed study of peat deposits in the northern United States, there are many square miles of sphagnum bog in the northern counties of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan that would supply material suitable for antiseptic applications. It will not be necessary to incur the expense of deep excavation, for immense quantities of sphagnum can be taken from the upper parts of the deposits. Sphagnum peat is also abundant in Maine, and some is found in New York and Pennsylvania.

Many efforts have been made recently to make the airplane invisible from the earth when it is soaring through the ether One idea calls for the use of transparent material, at least for all purposes where a canvas covering is used at present, such as the wings and the fuselage One of the latest ideas of the kind is said to be an airplane which uses noninflammable celluloid for the wings and other parts, and when flying at a few hundred feet elevation the apparatus is quite invisible, according to reports A new muffling box on the motor serves to deaden the sound. One advantage of the transparence is that observations can be made in all directions

COLLEGE NAME STILL BONE OF CONTENTION

Dubuque, Ia., Dec. 19.—A petition praying for a reconsideration of the facts in the case of Dubuque German College and Seminary versus Dubuque College (St. Joseph's) was filed by attorneys representing the former institution, and will be forwarded to Des Moines immediately. The petition is addressed to the supreme court of Iowa, which, on November 19 last, handed down an opinion favorable to the defendant institution. Five of the justices concurred in the assenting opinion, while two, Justices Weaver and Evans, concurred in a dissenting opinion.

The petition for a rehearing is based on this division in the supreme court, while the attention of the justices is called to certain points which counsel for the plaintiff believes have been overlooked. A more detailed presentation of other facts in the case is also given in the hope that the court will reverse its initial decision.

The original action, brought by Dubuque German College and Seminary, was calculated to restrain the other institution from using the name Dubuque College, inasmuch as one department of the former school was known as Dubuque College.

SAYS SIX MILLION DIE IN 12 WEEKS

World's Toll From Influenza and Pneumonia Estimated By Medical Expert—2,000 Destitute Children In Cape Town.

London Times cable service [Copyright 1918, by Public Ledger Co.] to The Sioux City Tribune.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The medical correspondent of the London Times writes:

"There seems to be reasonable grounds to believe that 6,000,000 persons have died of influenza and of pneumonia in the last 12 weeks. This plague, therefore, is five times more deadly than the war, which, it is estimated, killed 20,000,000 persons in four and a half years. Influenza has cost London 10,000 lives up-to-date.

"Never since the black death has such a plague swept the world. In India alone it is estimated there were 3,000,000 deaths. In Bombay there were 15,000, and in Delhi 800 daily. The Punjab lost 250,000.

"In Cape Town 2,000 children were left destitute. The natives were swept down as by fire. Eighty per cent of the natives of Samoa were affected.

"In Spain the plague was terrific. In Barcelona there were 10,000 deaths alone. In Australasia and North America the totals were large.

"No medical authority is certain of any conclusion yet reached, but possibly a still undiscovered organism is involved. Possibly the increased violence of the influenza bacillus is responsible. It was mild when it first started in Spain. It visited England in a mild form, then America and then returned to England in a severer type. Usually it first appeared at seaports. The figures indicate the infection was by contact and not carried through the air."

PRUSSIAN EYES STARE AT YANKS

Inclined to Be Cross, Coblenz Changes Mood When Columns Swing Across the Rhine.

BY HERBERT BAILEY.

London Times cable service [Copyright 1918, by Public Ledger Co.] to The Sioux City Tribune

COBLENZ, Dec. 20.—For a whole day the Americans crossed the Rhine, the men, guns and supplies forming what seemed a never ending procession. Only a few days before a German woman had hissed behind me: "Look at it well. It is our German Rhine, not yours."

The 18th infantry regiment of the first division was the first body of American troops to touch the right bank of the river. A sturdy, fresh marching body with a smart swing, offered an inspiring sight. Not one of them could escape the significance of the event. Their faces were almost too serious. But later in the day, when the columns had penetrated some distance into the heart of Prussia, the men threw off their seriousness. The villagers gassed with staring eyes at the Americans, knowing not what to think of it all, but convinced as the German is always convinced that at the sight of so much strength it might bo well to be friendly.

Strangely enough Coblenz revised its attitude within a night. The small number of American troops, who patrolled the street before the arrival of the main body on Thursday, had not particularly impressed the people of the town, but when they saw the formidable columns of fighting men, they thought the matter over some, and became as friendly as could be expected under the circumstances.

One German stopped me on the street and asked me where he could register to have American officers billeted with him. "My wife speaks English," he explained.

The transformation in a night was remarkable, but it is always thus with the Prussian. Your strength wins his friendliness, and your weakness his curses. Then, the arrival of so many Americans, all well paid soldiers, means profit to the tradespeople and they are not slow to take advantage of the situation.

"English is spoken here" is a sign one often sees, while in the cafes, American songs have placed Wagner in a back place, so anxious are the profit seeking cafe proprietors to reap a harvest.

PARIS WANTS TO BEGIN BUSINESS

Wilson's Desire to Get Down to Work Arouses French Impatience With "Bureaucratic Invasion" of Allied Governments.

By H. Wickham Steed, Foreign Editor London Times.

London Times cable service to Public Ledger and the New York Times.

Paris, Dec 20 Many days ... some weeks, will pass before the ... ness of the preliminary ... peace conference can begin ... Precious time is being wasted ... ently without regard to the ... realities of the situation. One of ... realities is the natural anxiety of ... the allied and associated troops ... turn home as soon as possible.

Another is the necessity for ... nating a concrete intro... with regard to mem... such as the bolshevist ... of Poland.

The arrival of Presi... and the great cordiality ... by the people of Par... that can hardly be ex... be reckoned as a distinc... in the somewhat chaotic out... would be a serious mistake to ... the president is disposed to ... grass grow under his ... definitely until all the ... ments have stacked hundreds of tons of archives in the requisitioned ... hotels, or housed their bureaucratic ... of occupation to the intense discomfort of ordinary citizens. The Paris au... thorities in particular would ... not to ignore the strong feeling ... owing here on this point.

"Paris," is says, editorially "which escaped the Gothas and Berthas, is likely to succumb under the weight of paper of a bureaucratic invasion. This is sheer madness. The emptiness of officialdom has never been more ap... parent. A multitude of specialists and pyramids of files will throw us into inexpressible confusion. If the allied plenipotentiaries have not al... ready got clear ideas upon the pre... liminary conditions of peace they ... er will have any. None of them needs more than a bag of documents and a few assistants. In the interests of peace for the world and quiet for Paris we demand that this bureaucratic invasion be stopped."

The truth seems to be that the official British plan for mobilization to the peace conference was elaborated by a dry-as-dust red tapist in an obscure corner of some government office during the last four and a half years. It has now been put into ... without regard to the necessities of the case. The feeling is growing here—not in French circles only—that what is required is a prompt agreement by the allied delegates upon a few main principles and urgent problems, while a provisional organization should han... dle some questions not ripe for imme... diate treatment, or too thorny for di... rect solution. These may be studied at leisure and settled along sound lines by competent commissions. It is felt the making of peace is an earnest and urgent business, and by no means a mere parade of officialdom.

PRESIDENT MAY CURTAIL VISIT

Early Voyage to England Taken to Mean President Intends to Cut Trip Short—London Plans Big Celebration.

By Associated Press.

Paris, Dec 20 The reason given for President Wilson's desire to make ... visit to England it is understood is that he has found it might be necessary to return to Washington much sooner than he had expected. Whether this means a change in the President's entire program including his journey to Italy is not known here.

An interesting feature of the President's visit to England beginning next Thursday is that the present British cabinet is practically not in a position to speak for the government until the result of the election returns are known December 28.

There is no doubt however that Premier Lloyd George and his assistants have been re-elected.

TO RECEIVE MINISTERS

President Wilson and President Poincare attended the reception to Marshal Joffre by the French academy. They sat among the members. Their wives occupied the presidential box.

The Wilsons will entertain foreign Minister and Madame Pichon at luncheon tomorrow.

During the day the president will receive all foreign ambassadors and ministers at the Murat palace.

By United Press.

London Dec 20 —London intends to eclipse Paris welcome to President Wilson in the same degree that its population exceeds that of the French Capital.

While great numbers of organizations political and non political have already considered separate demonstrations in Wilson's honor, it is believed they ultimately will follow the example provided by Paris and combine in one big celebration.

The government of course will provide the president with every official attention but it is Londons millions who will furnish the real welcome.

Wilson's visit however will be much more than a holiday since he will arrive in the midst of an increasingly warm discussion regarding the allies Russian policy. It is practically certain his counsel will be sought in this regard. It is almost equally certain he will be urged to define in more detail his attitude concerning freedom of the seas and enlarge on his plan for the league of nations.

Social Attentions.

Beneath the surface of social attentions which will be showered upon President and Mrs Wilson, in the form of parades banquets speeches memorials and general felicitations it is evident therefore that much of the preliminary work of the peace conference will be tied here.

ASK WILSON TO IRELAND

Lord Mayor of Dublin Plans Sunday Mass Meeting.

By Associated Press.

Belfast Wednesday, Dec 18.—The lord mayor of Dublin has called a mass meeting in Dublin for Sunday to extend an invitation to President Wilson to visit Ireland. He has suggested that similar meetings be held in other centers throughout the island.

A statement published in London that the Irish party was to send delegates to Paris to discuss home rule with President Wilson is declared in authoritative circles to be untrue.

It is impossible to learn whether the Sinn Feiners will send delegates, but this is not believed to be likely in view of the fact that the Lord Mayor of Dublin, who is a Sinn Feiner, is organizing meetings to invite President Wilson to Ireland.

THREE WANT SPEAKERSHIP

Mann, Gillett and Fess Eye Clark's Chair In House.

By United Press.

Washington, Dec. 19 - The race for speakership of the next House of Representatives today narrowed down to three contestants. Representative Mann of Chicago, is leading the field by reason of his work as republican floor leader and his length of service. Mann's announcement of his candidacy yesterday with the backing of the Illinois delegation put him first in the field and adds strength for that reason.

Representative Gillett, Massachusetts, choice of the east, has not yet announced his candidacy formally, but has told friends that he would like the speakership and probably will come out formally soon.

Representative Fess, Ohio, still says he is not a candidate, but his name is almost certain to be put forward by the Ohio delegation. Fess will have the support of the middlewest progressive wing at least as long as there is any chance for his election.

Representatives Kahn, California; Towner, Iowa, and Campbell, of Kansas will be put forward but the vote for them will be largely complimentary.

THE SPARTACUS GROUP PROGRAM

Would Seize All Fortunes, Disarm Police, and Establish Six Hour Day—Ebert-Haase Government Is Threatened.

Paris, Dec. 19.—Unofficial reports still prevail, persists the Matin, that the Ebert-Haase government has entreated the allies to occupy Berlin.

By United Press.

Washington, Dec 19.—Confiscation of all dynastic fortunes, creation of a single socialists' republic, cancellation of all public debts and war loans are among the planks of the German Spartacus platform. The Berlin Rote Fahne (red flag) gives the platform thus.

Revolutionary uprising of world masses.

Disarmament of police.

Seizure of all arms and ammunition.

Organizations of workmen's militia and red guard.

Trial of Hohenzollern and military leaders.

Seizure of food supplies for the people's benefit.

New Legislative Body.

Soviets to replace existing legislative bodies with central soviets as chief body.

Six hours to be the maximum working day.

All real estate, banks, mines and large fortunes to be confiscated.

Government to control public utilities.

Berlin, Dec. 19.—The conflict between the radicals and the Ebert-Haase government which broke out afresh yesterday is still undecided.

The demonstration by soldiers outside the reichstag building, led by Karl Liebknecht, was more serious than appeared at first. While there were no actual physical encounters the attitude of the soldiers succeeded in forcing Chancellor Ebert to avert the issue by adjourning the soldatenrat (soldiers' council) until tomorrow. If the radical movement continues to grow, the present government may be overthrown. The radicals gained courage for their demonstration yesterday from the attacks made by George Ledbour and Richard Barth against the people's council which resulted in Barth bolting the meeting.

Minister Resigns.

Major General Scheuch has resigned as war minister owing to disagreements concerning military policies. He is also blamed for the disorders throughout Germany.

By United Press.

Berlin, Dec. 19.—The proposed "insurgent" meeting of the reichstag, in defiance of the Ebert-Haase government was called off today by its president, Konstantin Fehrenbach.

Fehrenbach explained the meeting was rendered unnecessary by the extension of the armistice. His action, however, is regarded in some circles as a complete backdown.

New Cologne, a hotbed of Spartacus, was raided by troops of the people's council.

Followers of Carl Liebknecht, who held the public buildings for a fortnight, were forcibly ejected. The trend of yesterday's meetings and demonstrations seemed to be toward strengthening the Ebert-Haas coalition.

SHE KEPT THEM ON THE JOB

WITHIN A MONTH

By ETHEL V. HALL.

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Violet sat on the top rail of the fence, smiling to herself. She was thinking of the words she had had with her mother a month before.

Violet's health was not very good, and the doctor had ordered her to the country for the summer. She laughed out loud as she thought of these words:

"Now, mother, I won't stay in the lonely old country, and no one can make me, either. You know I'm used to a crowd, and dancing and everything! Goodness, I'll die there. I tell you I won't go."

But nevertheless, Violet went to her Uncle Henry's farm, and now she thought that nothing could induce her to go back to the dirty, close city.

She loved Uncle Henry's country ways, and no one could be any nicer than dear Aunt Ellen.

"Come, Sport, old dog. Let's take a run," said Violet, jumping from the fence and starting down the field with Sport, a large collie dog, close at her heels.

"Now, Sport, I'm going to roll down this hill, and don't you laugh at me, either," said Violet, giving his ear a twitch. But Sport enjoyed barking at her as much as she enjoyed the rolling.

She reached the bottom of the hill, sat up straight and found that her only companion had deserted her.

She called his name and was answered by a bark. The sound came from the woods, so she scrambled to her feet and ran in that direction.

When she came to the tall fir trees Sport came running out holding a piece of paper in his mouth.

"What's this?" questioned Violet, reading the note and looking suspiciously into the woods.

The note ran: "It was great fun watching you roll down that hill. I would like to see you do it again tomorrow at the same time. I'm going to talk with you, too."

Violet skipped back to the house to help Aunt Ellen prepare supper. She was unusually silent, and was interested to hear Uncle Henry say:

"Ellen, that young Billy Morris came home yesterday."

"Is that so?" replied Aunt Ellen.

"I suppose the young girls will look their prettiest, but I bet Vi will outshine them all," said Uncle Henry mischievously. "Vi, that young fellow would make you a good husband."

"Now, uncle, you're always telling me that someone would make me a good husband. How do you know I'm looking for a husband?" said Violet, bobbing her curls.

"Well, I never saw a girl of nineteen that wasn't looking for a husband. I'll bet if you met him you would be engaged to him within a month."

"Now, Henry," protested his wife, but Henry got up and kissed the rest of the sentence away.

The next afternoon, a little before the appointed time Violet went to her "thinking seat."

She had been seated there only a few minutes when Sport came and stood before her with another note in his mouth.

This read: "Sport came too soon, but I am waiting."

"I'll do it just to see what happens," and she ran to the top of the hill, lay down, closed her eyes and let herself go full speed.

When almost to the bottom she stopped with a jerk. She had bumped into something, and whatever it was had fallen with a thud.

She sat up and opened her big blue eyes to look into the face of a young man, sitting on the grass in front of her, smiling and showing two rows of perfect white teeth. She put her hand over her mouth to keep from screaming.

"Now don't run off, young lady," he said. "I tried to stop you easy, but you came so swift you knocked me over,"

"Are you the —?" she asked, but got no further, for he said:

"Yes, I'm the mysterious writer of the note. My name is Billy Morris. What's yours?"

"Mine's Violet Snow."

After talking some time, Violet rose to go.

"Don't forget tomorrow at the same time," said Billy, as he watched her lithe body run up the hill.

For a month they met every day, but no one knew it besides Sport and Daisy. At last Uncle Henry said:

"It's a funny thing I can't get hold of that young Morris to come here. If I told him there was a pretty girl here I bet he would come. In double-quick time, too!"

"Now, uncle," cautioned Violet, shaking her curls.

"Well, I'll keep my word; I bet if you met him you would be engaged within a month."

"I bet I would, too," sang Violet as she skipped out of the house, and Uncle Henry looked in wonderment at his wife.

That night, before dark, Violet very slyly kept peeking out of the window, and at last her heart seemed to beat harder than ever before, when she saw him coming.

"Well," said Uncle Henry, "here comes that Billy Morris now," but he got no further, for he was some surprised to see Violet run down to the gate to meet Billy. When Violet came in again she said: "Uncle Henry, you've won your bet. I met Billy just a month ago today," and she held up her hand for inspection of a lovely little solitaire on her fourth finger.

THE EARLY BIRD

By ELIZABETH NOLAN.

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Get up, for goodness sake, Beth Moore. This is the third time I've called you. You said we should go in bathing every morning before breakfast, and here a whole week of our vacation is near gone and we have not been in the water once."

"All right," groaned Beth, as she sleepily rubbed her eyes. "I'll get right up. You go ahead and I'll be down in a minute."

"Now, be sure," said Jennie, as she ran downstairs, out onto the beach and to the water's edge, where she comfortably seated herself to await Beth's arrival.

The two girls had planned months past for this big vacation—the first two weeks of August. Hunting through vacation books and time tables they finally had settled upon Salisbury Beach. Of course, the bathing was to be their greatest amusement as both were expert swimmers. Quite contrary to their plans, however, dancing and bowling had occupied most of their time up to the first week's end.

Jennie waited for nearly half an hour and then decided that Beth must have turned over, only to fall asleep, on the other side, as she had so often done before. Knowing that it must be near breakfast time she thought she would take one plunge before returning. At first the water seemed icy cold, but after a few minutes she was wishing that she had longer to stay, the water was so invigorating. Just one more good swim and then she would go and dress for breakfast, she said to herself. But alas! It was one swim too many for Jennie Dever. Carried out by the mighty waves and held by the strong undertow, she could not swim an inch nearer the shore. To scream would be of no use as there was not a soul on the whole beach, so courageously she fought the waves, still hoping to be able to make some progress. To her great surprise and relief she could now see the form of someone in the distance hastening toward her. Oh! thought Jennie, will they ever get here?

Tom Hurd, clerk at the "Castle Mona," had been watching the "early bird," and now, convinced that she was in distress, ran down the beach and hastily seized the life-saving boat, dragged it into the water. Rowing out as quickly as possible, he was just in time to rescue the prostrate form from sinking. Others had now gathered round the shore ready to receive them, with all things necessary to make the victim as comfortable as possible. Tom deposited his burden in the great warm blankets and hastily they carried her to the hotel.

Poor Jennie, too exhausted to speak, soon found herself resting comfortably in her own bed, while Beth, eyes brimming over with tears, lamented the fact that she had fallen asleep again almost immediately after Jennie left her.

"How nice that fellow was who rescued you. I've seen him around here all week," continued Beth. "I think he must be employed here." Gaining no reply from Jennie she did not enthuse further over the hero of the day. Noticing that Jennie was dozing she quietly took a magazine and tried to interest herself in it. Presently a gentle knock on the door announced the arrival of Miss White, the proprietress, with breakfast for the two girls. "Gracious," said Beth, "how kind of you. I had completely forgotten that it was past eating time."

Jennie roused herself sufficiently to take a few sips of coffee while Beth fairly devoured the delicious corn muffins.

A good sound sleep greatly improved Jennie, and the afternoon found her seated in an easy chair on the spacious veranda, while Tom Hurd occupied the chair by her side.

After supper that evening Jennie retired quite early, and Tom found himself wondering how he had spent other evenings. Tonight there seemed to be no place to go, or nothing worth while to do. But tomorrow evening she would be able to stay up, and possibly to go to the dance, too. The thought alone was consoling to him, and in idle dreams he spent the evening until locking up time arrived.

Jennie rested all day, and finally yielding to Tom's coaxing, she agreed to take a short stroll along the beach after supper.

Was it to be wondered at that Dan Cupid completed his errand in that one evening? What more powerful weapons could there be than the "silvery moon," combined with the enchanting "sad sea waves" to work successfully on two loving hearts. "Just as soon as I finish medical school," added Tom, "and how glad I am this is my last year."

Arm in arm they returned to the "Castle Mona," Jennie too happy for words, and Tom convinced that he had won the sweetest girl in the whole world.

When Jennie returned to her home how surprised were her friends to see a sparkling diamond on the third finger of her left hand, for as Beth explained to her acquaintances that was the morning that "the early bird caught the worm."

RED CROSS TO AID STRICKEN WORLD

Public Is Asked to Enroll in Work Made Necessary by Peace.

TO CONTINUE TO "STAND BY"

Answer to Christmas Roll Call! All That Anybody Neds to Join Up Now Is a Heart and a Dollar.

The Christmas roll call of the American Red Cross has a message to carry to all the people. And the response to this message should be universal, it should come from every man, woman and child in the country. All that is needed in a heart and a dollar

The war has left a world filled with ruin. Peace must restore, rebuild, reconstruct, recreate what war has destroyed. More than that, for hundreds of millions of human beings, rescued from social slavery and political bondage, there must be revealed new ideals, efficient methods, sufficient organization.

As the army and navy were the will of the nation mobilized for victory in war, so is the Red Cross the soul of the nation mobilized for service in peace.

Even after the formal terms of peace are signed it will take months, even years, for our present work to be completed. The sober task of withdrawal cannot keep pace with the tense strain of the accomplishment when first we rushed our mighty army across the water to save the liberty of the world.

We have two and a quarter millions of men overseas, flung there with undreamed of speed. It will take three times as long to bring them back. So long as one regiment remains, the Red Cross, as always, WILL STAND BY.

All over our land there are soldiers' homes in need of information, of counsel, of sympathy and comfort. Until the boys come home, until all these families are reunited, the Red Cross, as usual, WILL STAND BY.

On a hundred hard-fought fields there are heroes' graves to be identified, marked and honored—and here at home are thousands of hearts to be comforted by the knowledge of where their loved ones are sleeping. So long as sorrow comes into these homes, the Red Cross, as ever, WILL STAND BY

But now the world is calling us to an even greater task.

Belgium, northern France, Serbia, Roumania, Montenegro, Armenia, Syria and Palestine have been laid waste—ravished, robbed, depopulated The flaming tempest of war has left them in ruins The natural resources have been exhausted and destroyed Cities, villages and homes are rubbish heaps. The very soil has been torn into sterility The machinery of life has been shattered and disorganized The people themselves have been herded like cattle and driven into servitude or exile

In Russia conditions are beyond description To war and its ravages have been added the terrors of revolution, anarchy and brigandry The country is a wallow of dishonesty and licensed brutality In spite of anything and everything the allied nations can do in the way of relief, millions of human beings will starve to death in Russia the coming winter.

Conditions are almost as bad in Armenia, Syria and Serbia

To the need of the peoples and nations rescued from military bondage by the allied victory must now be added the need of the people of the central empires, impoverished by the terrible demands of war.

"Woe to the conquered!"

Yes; but the very spirit that sent America into the war forbids that we disregard the suffering and dire distress of a conquered enemy.

We have suffered yet but little, while the rest of the world has hungered and thirsted, has bled and died.

Shall we not go on to the full measure of our great strength—shall we not meet the full demand of our moral obligation? So only can we meet the full measure of our ideal. So only can the world, groping for a symbol, realize the true meaning of democracy.

Here then are the things the Red Cross must do:

I. While our men are in service overseas it must stand in instant readiness, as the emergency reserve of the army and navy.

II. As our men come home, it must be ready to co-operate in every way in ministering to their necessity and comfort.

III. Both overseas and at home it must be ready for hospital service to the wounded and convalescent, and must carry on its reconstruction work among the permanently crippled and maimed.

IV. It must face the ever widening ministry to the families and friends of our soldiers and sailors, providing them with counsel, encouragement protection and if need be, with material aid.

V. It must stand ever equipped for the sudden emergencies of pestilence disaster, storm and calamity—and be ready as always for instant and efficient relief.

VI. It must carry on with increasing vigor and scientific determination its fight against the ever-present scourge of tuberculosis.

VII. Above all, it must face the fact that America is the one of all the great nations of the earth that is practically untouched and unexhausted by the ravages of war That with the end of the fighting there remains the vastest problem the world has ever faced—that of carrying humanity through the coming winter and spring and bringing it up to the relief of the harvests of 1919. There is not enough food in the world now to provide for normal consumption. With the best that can be accomplished by way of organization and administration, there will be widespread privation and suffering.

The war has left behind it a hideous legacy of want, suffering and distress. There is work to be done that calls for millions of consecrated hands and hearts.

The Red Cross therefore calls you to enlist for all this supreme service to humanity. Answer the Christmas roll call.

All that is needed is a heart and a dollar!

CHAPTER TWO (Continued)

"You keep them here? Is it safe, think you?"

"I don't keep them here all the time. Indeed, I got these from the safe deposit only this morning. I shall return them there in a few days. While here, I shall wear them all I can to liven them up."

"You brought a lot of your other jewels, didn't you, Aunt Lucy?" said Pauline, casually. "Why did you? Are you going to a ball?"

"No. I wish to look them over and plan to have some reset."

"But are they safe?" inquired the Count again. "do you not fear thieves?"

"No, we never have such things as robbery in Merivale Park. It is a quiet, well behaved neighborhood."

"But you have a safe?" went on the Count, "you take at least that precaution?"

"Oh, yes, I have a safe in my boudoir. There is really no danger. Count Charlier would you like to hear me sing? Find one of my records, Gray."

Miss Carrington's singing voice was a fine one and was still fair. She sometimes amused herself by making records for her phonograph, and Gray Haviland managed the mechanical part of it.

"Which one, Lady Lucy?" he asked, as he rummaged in the record cabinet.

"Any of those pretty love songs," and Miss Carrington glanced coyly at the Count.

"Here's a fine one," and Haviland placed a disk in the machine. "Listen," he said, smiling; "don't miss the introduction."

The needle touched the record, and Miss Lucy's laugh rang out, so clear and true, it was difficult to believe it was a recorded laugh and not a sound from the lady herself. Then the recorded voice said: "This song is one of Carr's favorites. I'll sing it for him." And then, with only a few seconds' interval, Miss Carrington's voice sang: "Believe me, if all those endearing young charms."

It was well sung, and a perfect record, so that the incident of the singer listening to her own voice was interesting in itself.

"Capital!" applauded the Count, as it was finished. "It is indeed pleasant to preserve one's songs thus. May I not some time record my own amateur attempt?"

"Delighted to have you, Count," said Haviland cordially. "Come over some morning, and we'll do up a lot of records."

"Since when have you been master here, Gray?" said Miss Lucy, with fine scorn. "I will give the invitations to my own house, if you please! Count Charlier, if you will come tomorrow afternoon, I will instruct Mr. Haviland to make the records."

It was not so much the words as the manner of their utterance that was offensive, and Haviland set his lips in stifled anger. It was not at all unusual, this sort of rebuff, but he could not endure it as patiently as the two girls did. Haviland was a second cousin of Miss Carrington, and, while he lived with her in the capacity of a business secretary and general man of affairs, the post was a sinecure, for the services of her lawyer and of her social secretary left little for Haviland to do. His salary was a generous one and he was substantially remembered in her will, but he sometimes thought the annoying and irritating fleers he had to accept smilingly were worth more than he was receiving. He was continually made to feel himself a dependent and an inferior.

These trials also fell to the lot of the two girls. Pauline, although her aunt's heiress to the extent of half the fortune, the other half to go to an absent cousin, was by no means treated as an equal of Miss Carrington herself. It seemed to give the elder lady delight to domineer over her niece and in every possible way make her life uneasy and uncomfortable. As to the social secretary, Miss Frayne, she was scolded for everything she did, right or wrong.

Often had the three young people declared intentions of leaving Garden Steps, but so far none of them had made good the threat.

Vanity was the key note of Lucy Carrington's nature, and, knowing this, they could, if they chose, keep her fairly sweet tempered by inordinate flattery often administered. This proceeding hurt their self respect, jarred their tempers, and galled their very souls, but it was that or dismissal, and thus far they had stayed. Matters were nearing a crisis, however, and Haviland's patience was so sorely strained that he was secretly looking for another position. Anita Frayne, whose pretty blonde doll face belied a very fiery disposition, was on the verge of a serious break with her employer, and Pauline Stuart continually assured herself that she could not go on this way.

Pauline was the orphaned daughter of Lucy's sister, and had lived with her aunt for many years. Carrington Loria, the son of another sister, was engaged in antiquarian research in Egypt, where he had been since his graduation as an engineer. He, too, was an orphan and had lived with Lucy in his younger days, and he and Pauline were equal heirs to their aunt's wealth.

The father of the three Carrington sisters, having become angered at his two daughters, who married against his wishes, had left his entire fortune to Lucy, his only remaining child. Thus her niece and nephew were her only direct heirs, and, save for some comparatively small bequests, the Carrington estate would eventually be theirs.

Pauline well knew that if she left her aunt's roof it meant complete disinheritance, for Lucy Carrington was proud of her beautiful niece, and, too, was fond of her in her own way. But the ungovernable temper of the lady made her home an almost unbearable abiding place.

Since childhood years Carrington Loria had lived there only during his college vacations; but had been back occasionally for short visits from his now permanent Egyptian occupation. He had always come laden with gifts of oriental products, and the rooms at Garden Steps showed many rare specimens of cunning handiwork and rich fabrics and embroideries.

To break the awkward pause that followed Miss Carrington's rude speech to Gray Haviland, Pauline picked up an antique scarab and drew the Count's attention to its inscription.

He expressed a polite interest, but cast furtive glances at his hostess, as if afraid of a further outbreak.

Nor were his fears unjustified. Miss Carrington administered a scathing reproach to Pauline for intruding herself upon the Count's attention, and bade her put aside the scarab and hold her tongue.

"Don't speak to me like that, Aunt Lucy; I am not a child!" And Pauline, unable to control herself longer, faced her angry aunt with an air of righteous wrath.

"I'll speak to you as I choose, miss! It is for you to mend your tone in addressing me! If you don't, you may have cause to regret it. Count Charlier came here to see me, and I refuse to countenance your clumsy attempts to engage his interest in your silly babble!"

"But—I insist—" stammered the greatly embarrassed Count; "allow me, madame, let me say, I call on you all—all——"

"Nothing of the sort!" declared Miss Lucy; "you came, Count, to play bridge with us. Our opponents behaved so rudely and played so badly it was impossible for us to continue the game. Nor can we enjoy music in this inharmonious atmosphere. Let us stroll in the conservatory, you and I."

She rose, trailing her heavy silks and flashing her sparkling jewels, and the Count, a little hesitatingly, followed her. They crossed the great hall, and, going through a reception room and the delightful sun parlor, came to the warm, heavily scented conservatory.

"Poor old Charlier!" said Haviland, as the pair disappeared; "he's in for it now! Do you suppose the palms and orchids will bring him up to the scratch? 'Nita, I'll bet you a box of gloves against a box of simple little cigarets that he doesn't propose to the lady tonight."

"Done!" cried Miss Frayne, who was sparkling again, now that the dread presence was removed. "I doubt he can help himself. She has him at her mercy. And he's too good mannered to disappoint her wish."

"He'll propose," said Pauline, with an air of conviction. "He's a typical fortune hunter, that man. Indeed, I am not sure he's a Count at all. Do you know, Mr. Illsley?"

"I know almost nothing of the man, save that he's a guest of the Frothinghams. That's not entirely in his favor, I think."

"Right you are!" agreed Haviland. "Those people are—well, they're to be queried. But I say, Polly, if the two do hit it off, it's grinding poverty for us, eh?"

"It may be a blessed relief, Gray. She'll give us something, of course, and send us away from here. I, for one, shouldn't be sorry to go. She is getting too impossible!"

"She is!" put in Anita; "every day she pounds us worse! I'd like to kill her!"

The fierce words and would-be menacing glance of the little blonde beauty were about as convincing as a kitten declaring himself a war lord, and even the stately Pauline smiled at the picture.

"She ought to be killed," declared Haviland, "and I say this dispassionately. I wouldn't do it, because killing is not in my line, but the eternal fitness of things requires her removal to another sphere of usefulness. She makes life a burden to three perfectly good people, and some several servants. Not one would mourn her, and——"

"Oh, stop, Gray!" cried Pauline; "don't talk in that strain! Don't listen to him, Mr. Illsley. He often says such things, but he doesn't mean them. Mr. Haviland loves to talk at random, to make a sensational hearing."

"Nothing of the sort, Polly. I do mean it. Lucy Carrington is a misery dispenser, and such are not wanted in this nice little old world."

"But perhaps," Pauline looked thoughtful, "the fault is in us. We don't like her, and so we see nothing good in what she does. Now, Carrington Loria adores her. She had a letter from him today——"

"Yes, Loria adores her!" interrupted Haviland, "because he doesn't live with her! She sends him love letters and money, and he doesn't know the everlasting torture of living under her roof, year in and year out! But he caught on a little the last time he was here. He said—well, in his quaint Oriental fashion, he said: 'Gee! she's the limit!' That's what he said."

"Well, she is," pouted Anita. "I can't do a thing to suit her. Today I wrote a letter over six times before she was satisfied. And every change she wanted made was so foolish she wanted it changed back again. She nearly drove me crazy!"

"But I have to put up with her morning, noon, and night," sighed Pauline. "You have your hours off, Anita, but I never do. She even wakens me in the night to read to her, or to help her plan her new gowns."

"It is awfully hard for you," began Mr. Illsley, and then all stopped short, for the object of their discussion returned to the room.

It was plain to be seen Miss Carrington was in a state of suppressed excitement. She giggled almost hysterically, and tapped the Count playfully on the arm with her fan, as she bade him say good night and go.

The interested ones watching her could not learn whether the Count had declared himself or not. The presumption was negative, for, had he done so, surely Miss Carrington would have told the good news.

Charlier himself was distinctly noncommittal. Debonair as always, he made his adieux, no more demonstrative to his hostess than to the others, and went away. Illsley followed, and the household dispersed. The clock struck midnight as the ladies went upstairs.

Following custom, they all three went to Miss Lucy's boudoir. It was by way of reporting for tomorrow's orders, and was a duty never neglected.

The exquisite apartment, from which opened the bedroom and bath, was softly lighted and fragrant with flowers.

"How do you like Count Henri Charlier?" Miss Carrington quickly demanded of her satellites.

"Charming," said the voluble Anita. "Just a typical French nobleman, isn't he? And how he adores our Lady Lucy!"

The whole speech rang false, but the vanity of the lady addressed swallowed it as truest sincerity. "Yes," she returned, "he is infatuated, I have reason to think. But—we shall see what we shall see! Curb your impatience, girls! You shall know all in due time."

"Can I do anything for you, Auntie, tonight or tomorrow?" asked Pauline, and, though she tried to speak with enthusiasm, her tone did sound perfunctory.

"Not if you offer in that manner," and Miss Carrington looked at her niece coldly. "One would think, Pauline, that it must be an irksome task to do the smallest favor for your aunt and benefactor! Do you feel no pleasure in doing what trifles you can for one who does everything for you?"

"I would feel a pleasure, Aunt Lucy, if you were kinder to me. But——"

"Kinder!" shrieked her aunt; kinder! Girl, have you taken leave of your senses? I give you a home, fine dresses, money, everything you can want, and you ask me to be kinder to you! Go! Never let me see you again, after that speech!"

"Oh, auntie, don't! I didn't mean——"

"You didn't mean to exasperate me beyond endurance? No, of course you meant to stop short of that! But you have done it. I mean this, Pauline: tomorrow you go elsewhere to live. No longer will I give a home to such a monster of ingratitude!"

"But, Miss Carrington," and Anita Frayne's soft voice implored gently, "don't be hasty. Pauline didn't mean——"

"What!" and Lucy Carrington turned on her, "you take her part? Then you go, too. I want no ingrates here. Leave me, both of you. This night is your last beneath this roof! You are two unworthy girls, to scorn and slight the hand that has fed and clothed you and given you luxury and comfort such as you will never see again! Go, I've done with you! Send me Estelle. She, at least, has some small affection for me."

The two girls left the room. The scene was not without precedent. Before this they had been ordered to leave the house forever, but always forgiveness and reinstatement had followed. This time, however, the Lady Lucy had been rather more in earnest, and the girls looked at each other uncertainly as they turned toward their rooms.

Anita summoned Estelle, the French maid, and then told her to hasten immediately to Miss Carrington.

"Don't undress me," said the mistress as the maid appeared; "I'm not retiring at once. Get me out of this gown and give me a negligee and slippers."

"Yes, mademoiselle," and Estelle deftly obeyed orders and brought a white boudoir gown edged with swans-down.

"Not that!" cried Miss Carrington. "Bring the gold embroidered one—the Oriental."

"Ah, the green one, from Monsieur Loria?"

"Yes, the one my nephew sent me at Christmas time. My, but it's handsome, isn't it, Estelle?"

"Gorgeous!" declared the maid, and she spoke truly. Young Loria knew his aunt's taste, and he had sent her a typical Egyptian robe, of pale green silk, heavy with gold embroideries. In it Miss Carrington looked like one attired for a masquerade.

"Shall I take down mademoiselle's hair?" asked Estelle, lingering.

"No. I want to be alone. I will read awhile. You need not return. I will do for myself."

"There is your glass of milk, ma'mzelle, on the bed table."

"Silly! I suppose I can see it for myself."

"Yes, ma'am. And you will have your tea at 8 in the morning?"

"Of course, my tea at 8, as always. You might remember that much yourself. But nobody remembers things for my comfort."

"Pardon, but sometimes it is 8, and, again, it must be 8:30."

Good Roads Increase Farm Value of All Crops

Bring Market to Farmer's Door Twelve Months in Year.

By P. G. HOLDEN.

SUCCESSFUL farming depends upon the economical growing of crops and the economical and timely marketing of products.

Transportation is one of the important factors in the problem of marketing, and transportation does not begin at the railroad station—it begins at the farmer's door.

Too many of us think that every good roads movement is for the benefit of someone else and not ourselves. We forget that our marketing facilities depend upon our ability to get our produce to market.

How can a higher market help us if bad roads make it impossible to get our products to town? How many hours have we lost in taking twice or three times as long to drive to town as it should take? How much labor have we wasted in making two trips to haul what we should have hauled in one? Are not time and labor important things?

The poor road keeps the farmer away from his market in bad weather; the good road brings the market to his door 12 months in the year.

Good roads increase the value of every acre of land.

Good roads increase the farm value of all products.

Good roads increase the educational opportunities of the children on the farm.

Good roads draw the people of a community together—make it possible for us to get acquainted with our neighbors.

Good roads result in better homes—in more attractive and comfortable surroundings.

Good roads help to keep the boys and girls on the farm.

ARGENTINA SEEKING FREE TRADE PACTS

Buenos Aires (by mail).—Argentina has taken the lead in an effort to persuade the South American republics to tear down their tariff walls and open themselves to free trade among themselves, arguing that such action would make them commercially independent of other countries in Europe and North America. This step has been taken in spite of the fact that until now the Argentine's principal source of revenue has been its customs houses.

To show its sincerity, the Argentine government has introduced a bill in congress providing for the opening of diplomatic negotiations with all the neighboring countries for the adoption of treaties providing for the free exchange of the products of each country concerned.

If the desire of Argentina is to remove the fiscal barriers which in the past have estranged the nations of South America and restricted commerce between them, making them dependent on overseas nations.

A year's trial of free trade with Peru has led Argentina to seek similar arrangements with the other republics. The Peruvian legation in Buenos Aires and the Argentine consulate in Lima have acted as commercial agents for their respective countries with the result that today there is a regular trade of wheat, flour, and cereals to Peru in exchange for cotton, rice and sugar from Peru.

It is expected that Chile will be the next republic to ratify a free trade treaty.

TRIED TO PREVENT WAR.

London (by mail).—M. Stambuliwsky, leader of the peasants' party and head of the new peasants' government in Bulgaria, was among those who sought to prevent King Ferdinand from committing Bulgaria to war on the side of the central powers. At a conference of party leaders held with the king at the palace, M. Stambuliwsky spoke his mind freely, telling the king that he was leading the country to destruction, and that he would pay for his crime with his crown and perhaps with his head.

THOUSANDS OF YANKS SEE PARIS EACH DA

Paris (by mail).—Probably [illegible] most problem that the Young Men's Christian Association has to face in the city of Paris is the housing of soldiers who flock to this city in thousands on 24 to 48 hours leave. Every American boy who comes to France is eager to see the city of Paris, and the prices for accommodations at the French hotels is beyond their slender purses. The Y. M. C. A. has several hotels where for one franc a night they can get a bed and a shower. Meals are served at cost.

The Pavillon is the largest of these hotels, and the other night was filled to overflowing. The other hotels in the neighborhood on the overflow list were also crowded to the limit. The office also has a long list of rooms which French families will rent to soldiers. The list was exhausted. Yet the men kept pouring in. Seventy-six men took off their coats, rolled them up, made them into pillows and slept on the floor of the "lounge room." At 11 all sheets were out.

At 11:30 p. m. Miss Elizabeth [illegible] man, of Baltimore, Md., who was in charge of the canteen service at the Pavillon thought she would call it a day's work and go to bed. But just as she was starting up stairs, she heard pounding on the door, and went to see what it was.

She opened the door to find 38 enlisted men who had traveled 18 hours on a railroad train. They wanted cots for the night, and "for the love of Uncle Sam, sister, food of some sort." She let them in, went upstairs and called another canteen worker. Together they went into the kitchen and stole the bread that was hidden in the closets for morning. They found a key to the storeroom and dragged out canned meat to make into sandwiches. They started a fire in the stove and made hot chocolate, and the 38 men were fed.

Then the two women went into the dining room with the tables all set ready for breakfast, and cleared away those tables, and the men were only too glad to roll up on them and on the floor and sleep the sleep that only tired war weary soldiers can sleep.

This is a situation that the Y. M. C. A. meets from day to day, despite the fact that it is renting every available vacant hotel in the city.

MANY ITALIANS MAY EMIGRATE TO U. S.

BY HENRY WOOD
United Press Correspondent

Rome, (by mail)—With the [illegible] the war, one of the most vital important questions Italy will have to settle is that of emigration.

The basis on which this will be adjusted between the United States and Italy already is receiving the most careful study and attention by the highest emigration and labor authorities of the two countries.

Despite the heavy losses Italy has suffered during the war, she will nevertheless finish the great European conflict with something of a surplus of male citizens, who heretofore have constituted her greatest export to foreign countries. This is due to a number of reasons.

With the outbreak of the war in 1914, Italy, to be prepared for any emergency, immediately forbade departure for foreign countries of any of her sons of military age. This restriction ever since has been in force, with the result that Italy has within her borders the hundreds of thousands of men who, but for the war, would have emigrated during the last four years.

In addition, with Italy's entrance into the war, she called to the colors hundreds of thousands of other sons who already had emigrated to foreign countries. These responded to a remarkable degree, and have gone to swell the number of men within Italy's borders who with the close of the war may decide to emigrate.

While the final basis on which Italian and other foreign emigration to the United States probably will not be established until a long time after the war, Italy in the meantime is asking for two concessions on behalf of her emigrating workingmen.

The first of these is that all Italians who returned to Italy from the United States in response to Italy's call to the colors be allowed to return without restriction or discrimination of any sort except for sanitary reasons.

The second concession Italy desires at once is that the present clause in the American emigration law, forbidding the entrance of any emigrant who comes under a labor contract, be set aside provided the contract is one that has been approved in advance either by the American Federation of Labor or by the state employment agencies of the various states.

With these two concessions Italy feels that she can tide over the difficult situation that will attend the demobilization of her millions of sons, until such a time as a more complete emigration basis can be established with the United States.

Great Auk Extinct.

From the Baltimore American.

Eggs of any kind are expensive enough nowadays, but those of the great auk are so high—and not on account of the war either—that only a millionaire could afford to buy a dozen. Indeed, it is doubtful if there are more than that many in the world.

The great auk was a sea fowl that in former days had its most important breeding place on a rock called Funk Island, 33 miles off the Newfoundland coast. Whalers provisioned their ships with the birds (which were so fat that they are said to have been utilized as fuel), and fishermen stole their eggs by wholesale.

In consequence of such depredations the species became extinct about 70 years ago, and today to represent it there are only a few stuffed specimens and skeletons in museums.

Envoy Of Cle' Man.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

M. Bottler, Bolshevist minister to Sweden, has retired to private life, according to an official telegram from Stockholm recently, which added:

ENGLISH VETERAN LIVES WITH YANKS, SAYS THEY FIGHT AND DON'T BOAST

From the Lond

I have had the good fortune to spend nine months in an American ment in closest touch with officers and men of every I have crossed the Atlantic American troops and have the side of American soldiers. Fl ders.

Englishmen have grown accustomed to foreign soldiers Belgian Italian and the rest and they do not seem so strange as the But all these approximate to European military model with which our own army has much in common. colonial soldiers too though different are so father or degree than kind for they have been schooled in the tors formed in the mold of the British army. The Americans on the other hand despite certain similarities to our own men, are something entirely new and need explanation.

On the face of things the most obvious difference between them selves is in the outward and visible evidences of discipline. To the casual observer the Americans, generally speaking of the average in not so well turned they are not so smart so steady in standing to all appearances the for rank and authority in their words they lack discipline.

This is a judgment often heard passed upon the American soldier; it is a criticism which I myself have made in the past. With wider experience and fuller understanding of the American soldier I think now that it is hardly just. Discipline after all is not an absolute quality, it differs in various countries, and doubtless the German militarist considers our soldiers ill disciplined. Discipline is only a means to the end of military efficiency.

Naturally in a country which makes a fetish of independence the system is different from that of one where authority is much respected and service a high ideal. American discipline is more elastic than ours in the circumstances of everyday soldiering, but it contracts under strain. It is founded not so much on respect for authority as on a sense of responsibility which the feeling of equality engenders.

Of the three great allied nations, there is most liberty in Britain most equality in America, and most fraternity in France. The American equality, however, produces not anarchy but cooperation and discipline as Mr. said is the perfection of cooperation.

The Americans of course are a temperament markedly individualistic, but spread over a large number of men this quality seems to produce teamwork rather than the reverse. Nor is this so paradoxical as it would appear for individuals can fit into their places and make a good combination.

In a large unit composed of specialists it is likely that most of the talents and proficiencies required in the army will be to hand. No matter what one demands of an American unit from lithography to bridge building I choose two actual examples from my own experience), it can be done within the unit. Their bodies of specialists round themselves with remarkable ease into symmetrical and self-supporting organizations. And while an individualist, the American soldier is extremely adaptable.

Ingenuity an Asset.

We pride ourselves upon our powers of improvisation, but in this respect the American soldier is fully our match both in ingenuity and application. Arising out of this individualism also is another advantage of the greatest value that as a Canadian officer remarked to me, Americans will never lack for a leader in an emergency. On the other hand, in the presence of a duly appointed and qualified commander they are as capable of loyal cooperation and exact obedience as any professional soldier.

If there is one particular branch of military service which is most congenial to the American genius, it is aviation. The Americans are at once a nation of individuals, of sportsmen and of automobilists. I have said enough of the first quality, and as for the other two, all their young men play games and all can drive, and most understand a motor car. The value to their aviation inherent in these accomplishments will be apparent to all.

The American army must be remembered, has not yet sorted itself out in that respect its condition resembles ours in 1915. At present one of its ordinary infantry regiments could probably construct a trench system as well as an engineer regiment, a machine gun company will have as good mechanics as a motor train, a trench mortar battery will possess draftsmen equal to those of an intelligence section. The process of sifting human material takes time, and the American army cannot reach its state of highest efficiency until its men are assigned to their correct places. Meanwhile these specialists, so many of them college trained, are extremely useful wherever they are.

The colored soldiers occupy a position apart from the rest, but I do not think that they appreciably lower the general standard. In the camps at any rate, they are obedient, cheerful, well disciplined, and obviously fond of soldiering; but undoubtedly they are subject to fits of mob emotion. Given leaders who can hold them, they should do well in action, and there is no reason why they should not have right leaders.

I have said nothing of the courage, moral or physical, of the American soldiers, their dash in the attack or their obstinacy in the defense. These qualities are assumed in them by all Englishmen who know them; and that is the highest compliment that we could pay them. They come of a people, in the words of their own poet, "virile, combative, stubborn, hard." Let us then lose any illusion which some may have had to the effect that the American of today is not naturally a fighting man. And at the same time we must put away in respect to their soldiers another illusion concerning the American lack of modesty. The first thought of Americans in military discussion is to pay tribute to the original allies who, having laid the foundations of victory, are still raising the greater part of its edifice; their great ambition, they will tell you, is to match the military achievements of Britain and France.

A CHEERFUL SPIRIT.

From the Christian Science Monitor.

Carpani, the poet, once asked his friend, Haydn, "how it happened that his church music was almost always of an animating, cheerful and even gay description." To this Haydn's answer was: "I can not make it otherwise. I write according to the thoughts which I feel. When I think upon God my heart is so full of joy that the notes dance and leap as it were from my pen, and since God has given me a cheerful heart it will be easily forgiven me that I serve Him with a cheerful spirit."

GERMANS ORDER HENS TO LAY EGGS TWICE A WEEK

[illegible] the French American Armies [illegible] Poultry owners in the French villages from which the Germans were driven in the great offensive that ended the war, have been having a hard time to supply the exacting demands of the Germans. Two eggs a week from every hen was the German requisition. If the owner failed to deliver the eggs he was fined 1 mark. He was forbidden to sell or kill his chickens and if one of them died he was fined 100 marks.

The hen houses were stripped of everything that contained metal or rubber. Inventories in all the villages recaptured by the allied troops were allowed only the most meager quantities of food by the German army officers. Hundreds of the indemnities to the Associated Press correspondent that if it were not for the help given by the United States through the Spanish-American relief committee they would have starved. There were times when even some of the food did not reach [illegible] and when it was taken [illegible] and used in the army. FINDS GAY VIENNA IN SORRY SITUATION

From the London Times.

The situation in Vienna is thus described by a neutral.

Of Vienna's famous gayety and life absolutely nothing remains. To me it is a mystery how the population survives at all. It is really starving. You see none but pinched and drawn faces. I was there for about 10 days, and during the whole of that time demonstrations were constantly being held, generally twice a day. These comprised many thousands of persons including male and female workers, wounded soldiers and many soldiers on leave. The demonstrators carry banners on which are inscribed: We want peace. Down with the war. Leaflets in favor of peace are distributed.

Thousands of people take part in these processions which pass unhindered through the main streets of the city. Hanging on the outskirts of the crowd are the hooligan elements of the city who commit all kinds of outrages, looting, smashing windows and even setting fire to the houses.

Nearly all the shops are closed and the windows boarded up to prevent pillage. A few shops open a couple of hours daily. You cannot get a meal at a restaurant for food does not exist. If you ask for a glass of beer you get a small one for 18 pence, and everything procurable—which is not very much—is charged for at proportionate prices.

You see a taxi or an [illegible] very few motor cars which belong chiefly to the diplomatic representatives although you occasionally see carriages drawn by small Russian horses which apparently belong to the wealthier classes.

No one goes to the theaters or places of entertainment. Vienna has hardly any lights at night. Few people are to be seen after seven in the evening and by nine the capital resembles a city of the dead.

While I was there there was the excitement of an air raid. It happened about 2:30 in the afternoon. Sirens suddenly sounded and the population disappeared as if by magic. I was subsequently told that bombs had been dropped by Italian and American airmen.

The emperor Charles is seldom mentioned. The Viennese reserve their anger for the kaiser. I was in Austria when President Wilson's last note arrived. It was extraordinary to see how enthusiastic the people were. You would have thought that President Wilson was their benefactor instead of their foe. They cheered his name and said he was a good fellow and would bring peace after all the misery. It was quite evident that they believed that they were under a great debt of gratitude to their friend the enemy.

Germany in Asia.

The Sinclair Magazine for December contains a copyrighted article on the archeological expeditions conducted under the kaiser's patronage for years prior to the war. The secrets unearthed under the guise of promoting general knowledge, the writer says, were carefully collated and used in planning the campaign for world conquest.

"In the archives of the Berlin foreign office there is a special dossier dealing with oriental affairs," the article says. "This compilation is the key to the petroleum secrets discovered with so much patient labor by the German savants. It is not only a key to these secrets, but also reveals one of the primary motives of the war. Germany's desire to control the petroleum resources of Asia, and through them to dominate the commerce of Asia, was one of the most powerful incentives of the German military party in forcing the conflict upon the people of Europe.

"The German government attached supreme importance to the establishment of a vast pan-German empire, stretching from the North sea to the Persian gulf and Indian ocean. That was the key to the whole of its war policies, and Mesopotamia was the principal link in this great central European scheme. Syndicates controlled by the imperial government were organized to divide up and operate the various natural resources of Mesopotamia, Persia, Afghanistan and India. One of the resources the Huns were most anxious to control was petroleum in Arabia. The Mesopotamian oil deposits lured them on. They saw in those deposits visions of great immediate wealth, and of power to control imminent industrial developments in industries utilizing petroleum and its products."

What Will Hog Island Be?

From the Christian Science Monitor.

The site of the historic Hog Island shipyard in Philadelphia, said to be the largest establishment of its kind in the world is to pass into the possession of the United States government at the price originally paid for it, $1,700,000. Just what the United States will do with the yard is not known but it has invested $60,000,000 in the plant which it contains and this would seem to be worth protecting.

Municipal Authorities of Danzig, Germany, Seem to Have Had a Hand in About Everything.

"The town deals in coal, babies' soothers, methylated spirits and petroleum, old clothes and wooden soles; it fattens pigs and geese and breeds fowls and rabbits; it cooks dinner and supper every day for many thousands of people, it provides labor and horses, distributes prizes for horse breeding, and places orders for army supplies; it estimates the harvest and counts the cattle; extracts fat from bone, and sells vegetables and fruit in certain shops. It dries vegetables and makes sausages, it allots land for potato and vegetable growing and itself cultivates land; it collects or organizes the collection of bottles and fruit stones; it buys wool in Germany and in the occupied territory, it kills beasts and makes [illegible] examines applications for leave from the front and provides the farmers with manure, it revises the prices of bread matches, meat, boots and various foods; catches fish, and supplies machinery, it collects copper, aluminum and brass, and it distributes sugar for jam making, and regulates the feeding of sick persons and babies."

HUNS' DIRTY TRICK AVENGED

No Member of Party Lived to Tell of "Sniping" Yanks While on Errand of Mercy.

"The body of a dead Yank," Private Albert Hawk said, "lay in No Man's Land in front of our lines. The Huns tied ropes to the hands of the dead soldier, and by pulling the ropes made it appear that the soldier was alive and waving his arms to summon help.

"A dozen of our men crawled out to help their supposedly wounded comrade. As they approached the soldier's body, Hun snipers picked them off. Half a dozen brave men had fallen before the trick was discovered.

"Forty of us charged at that sniper's nest with bayonets. We didn't even think about the danger, and didn't care a rap.

"We found eight German snipers in that nest and not one of them escaped. We drove our bayonets into them.

HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES IF YOUR BACK ACHES

Do you feel tired and "worn-out?" Are you nervous and irritable? Don't sleep well at night? Have a "dragged out," unrested feeling when you get up in the morning? Dizzy spells? Bilious? Bad taste in the mouth, backache, pain or soreness in the loins, and abdomen? Severe distress when urinating, bloody, cloudy urine or sediment? All these indicate gravel or stone in the bladder, or that the poisonous microbes, which are always in your system, have attacked your kidneys.

You should use GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules immediately. The oil soaks gently into the walls and lining of the kidneys, and the little poisonous animal germs, which are causing the inflammation, are immediately attacked and chased out of your system without inconvenience or pain.

Don't ignore the "little pains and aches," especially backaches. They may be little now but there is no telling how soon a dangerous or fatal disease of which they are the forerunners may show itself. Go after the cause of that backache at once, or you may find yourself in the grip of an incurable disease.

Do not delay a minute. Go to your druggist and insist on his supplying you with a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. In 24 hours you will feel renewed health and vigor. After you have cured yourself, continue to take one or two Capsules each day so as to keep in first-class condition, and ward off the danger of future attacks. Money refunded if they do not help you. Ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL brand, and thus be sure of getting the genuine.—Adv.

Increase in American Hogs Will Help to Meet World Fat Shortage.

FARMERS SAVE SITUATION.

Government Justified in Stimulation of Pork Production—Sevenfold Increase Over Pre-War Exports.

Through increased production and conservation we will be able this year to export seven times our pre-war average exports of pork products. With the heavy demands added in caring for the millions who have been freed from German oppression, the Department of Agriculture and the Food Administration are justified today in our every action of stimulation of hog production. In the coming year the greatest world shortage will be in fats, and pork will help to save this situation. The efficacy of the policy of stimulated production has built up in this country supplies which will enable us to supply a very large part of the fat deficiency of the world. In beef there must be a shortage in Europe, due largely to limited refrigerator ship capacity. All freezer ships available, however, will be filled by America, Argentine and Australia.

The contribution made by the producers of this country to the war program as applying particularly to animal food products is illustrated by the following:

Reports compiled by the U. S. Department of Agriculture indicate an increase in cattle of 10,238,000 head and 12,441,000 hogs. These figures were compiled to January 1 last.

In this period there was a decrease in sheep of 819,000 head. The indications are that this decrease will show an increase, according to recent reports.

Since January 1 unofficial information indicates an increase in hogs of not less than 8 per cent. and not more than 15 per cent. as compared with one year ago, with an increase in the average weight.

Following the request of the U. S. Food Administration for an increase in hog production for marketing in the fall of 1918 and the spring of 1919 the increase may yield not less than 1,600,000,000 pounds more of pork products than were available last year. Without this increase the shipping pr arranged by Mr. Hoover regardi imal food products would have impossible.

The dressed hog products duri three months ending Septemb 1917, amounted to 903,172,000 p while for the corresponding mon 1918 the dressed hog products 1,277,589,000, an increase of ove 000,000 pounds for the quarter.

During the same period for 19 records of inspected slaught dressed beef showed 1,263,0 pounds as against 1,454,000,000 for the three month period September 1, this year.
